A wild sweetness filled the air. I was quite half a mile from the inn, yet I could smell the odor of her roses—Gretchen's roses. It was a long and weary year which had intervened. And now she was there, only a short way from my arms. But she did not know that I was coming. A million diamonds sprang into the air whenever I struck the lush grasses with my cane. Everywhere I breathed the perfume of her roses. They seemed to hide along the hedges, to lurk among the bushes, red roses and white. On the hill across the valley I saw the little cemetery with its white stones. I arrested my steps and took off my hat. The dust of Hillars lay there. I stood motionless for some time. I had loved the man as it is possible for one man to love another. I had not thought of him much of late, but in this life we cannot always stand by the grave of those who have gone before. He had loved Gretchen with a love perhaps less selfish than mine, for he had sacrificed his life uselessly for her that she might—be mine! Mine! I thought.

The lights of the inn cheered me and lifted the gloom. Should I enter by stealth or boldly? I chose the second method. Gretchen and the innkeeper were in the old hall. I entered and threw my traps into a corner. As they turned and saw me consternation was written on their faces.

"I have found you at last," I said, holding out a hand to each of them. The innkeeper thrust his hands behind his back and sauntered leisurely toward the window. Gretchen showed signs of embarrassment, and her eyes were studiously fixed on the cracks which yawned here and there in the floor. My hands fell unnoticed.

"You have been looking for us?" she asked in even tones. "Why have you?"

Vaguely I gazed at her, at the innkeeper, then at my traps in the corner. It was apparent that I was an intruder. I struck my forehead in anger and despair. Triple fool that I was! I was nothing to her. She had told me so, and I had not believed.

"Yes; why?" asked the innkeeper, turning around.

"I believe," said I, my voice trembling, "that I am an unwelcome guest. Is it not so?"

"Oh, as for that," said the innkeeper, observing Gretchen, "this is a public inn on the highway. All wayfarers are of necessity welcome."

"Go, then, and prepare me a supper," said I. "I am indeed hungry, having journeyed far." I wanted him out of the room.

The innkeeper, a puzzling smile on his lips, passed out.

"Gretchen," I burst forth, "in heaven's name what does this mean? I have hunted for you day after day, week after week, month after month. I have traveled the four ends of the continent. I have lived—oh, I do not know how I have lived! And when I do find you it is for this." My voice broke, and I was positively on the verge of tears.

"And was all this fair to her?" asked Gretchen coldly.

"To her? I do not understand."

"I mean, was all this fair to my sister?"

"Gretchen," a light piercing the darkness, "has she not written to you?"

"A long time ago. She wanted to see me on an important matter, but I could not change my plans at the time. I shall see her at the palace next week. Ought you not to be with her instead of here?"

"Why should I be with her?"

Gretchen laughed, but the key was false.

"Are you not going to marry her? Surely it is easy after the king has given his permission. Have you already fallen out of love with her after all your efforts to make her a princess? Truly man is as unstable as sand and water. Ah, but you fooled us all to the top of your bent. You knew from the first that she was a princess, but you could not find the proofs. Hermann and I were the means to the end. But who shall blame you? Not I. I am very grateful to you for having given to me a sister. And if you fooled me I returned measure for measure. It is game and quit. Time hung heavy on my hands, and the victory, however short, was amusing."

"I never loved her!" I cried. Where were the words I needed?

"So much the worse for you," disdainfully. "But here comes Hermann to announce your supper."

"I shall not break the bread of inhospitality," said I in the bitterness of my despair. I gathered up my traps and then I let them tumble back. The needed words came with a rush to my lips. I went close to her. "Why did you humiliate yourself in begging my life of the prince? Why if my life was nothing to you? Answer. Why did you stoop to your knees to that man if I was worthless to you? Why?"

Her cheeks grew red, then white. Her lips formed words which she could not speak.

"Herr Winthrop's supper is ready," announced the innkeeper.

"Go and eat it!" I said childishly.

"Your appetite is gone then?" imperturbably.

"Yes, and get you gone with it!"

The innkeeper surveyed for a space. "Will you kindly tell me from whom you received the information that her highness was at the inn?"

I produced the unsigned letter. He read it carefully, while Gretchen looked on nervously.

"Ach," said the innkeeper, "that Stahlberg! He shall be dismissed."

Unhappily for him that individual was just passing along the corridor. The innkeeper signaled him to approach.

"How dared you?" began the innkeeper, thrusting the letter under Stahlberg's nose.

"Dare? I? Herr," said the big fellow, "I do not understand. What is it you accuse me of?"

"This!" cried the innkeeper. "You have written to Herr Winthrop and told him that her highness was at the inn. And you were expressly forbidden to do so."

Stahlberg looked around blankly. "I swear to heaven, herr"—

"Do not prevaricate," the innkeeper interrupted. "You know that you wrote this."

"Stahlberg," I cried excitedly, "tell me why you wrote this note to me and I'll see that you are taken care of the rest of your days."

"I forbid him!" commanded Gretchen in alarm.

"As God hears me, herr," said Stahlberg stoutly, "I wrote not a line to you or to any one."

"Oh!" cried the innkeeper, stamping. "And you deny that you have written here that you saw her highness in the garden three nights ago?"

Gretchen was beginning to grow terrified for some reason. I myself was filled with wonder, knowing well enough that nothing about a garden had been written in the note I had received.

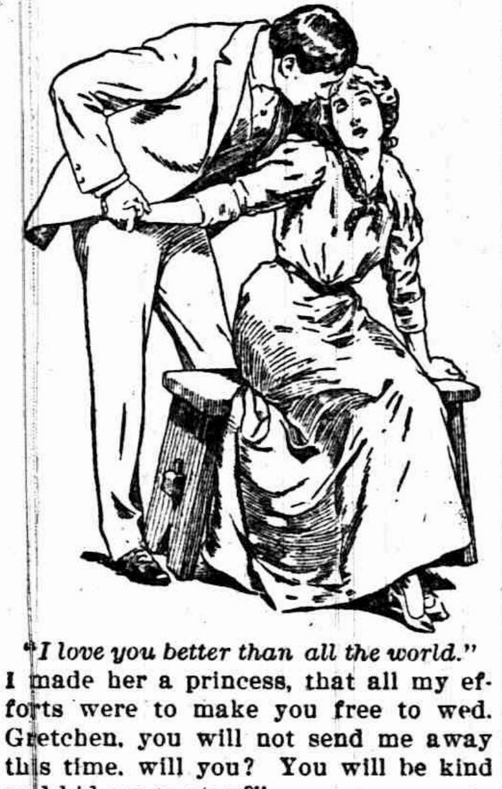
"Do you dare deny," went on the implacable old man, "that you have written here that you saw her highness in the garden and that she was weeping and murmuring this man's name?"

"Oh!" cried Gretchen, gazing wildly at the door.

The innkeeper suddenly took the bewildered giant by the shoulders and pushed him from the room, following him swiftly, and the door closed noisily behind them.

My heart was in flames. I understood all now, though I dare say Gretchen didn't. All at once her head fell on the back of the chair from which she had but lately risen. She was weeping silently and deeply. I did not move, but stood watching her, drinking in with exultation the loveliness of a woman in tears. She was mine, mine, mine! The innkeeper had not really known her heart till the night in the garden to which he so adroitly referred. Then he had made up his mind that things were not as they should be and had sent me that anonymous note. Mine at last, I thought. Somehow for the first time in my life I felt what is called masterful—that is to say, not all heaven and earth should take her away from me now. Softly I passed over to her side and knelt at her feet. I lifted the hem of her gown and pressed it to my lips.

"My princess," I murmured; "all mine." I kissed her unresisting hand. Then I rose and put my arms around her. She trembled, but made no effort to withdraw. "I swear to you, Gretchen, that I will never leave you again, not if the king should send an army against me, which he will never do, since he has commanded that I marry you. Beware! It is a dangerous thing to trifle with a king's will. And, then, even if the king should change his mind I should not. You are mine. I should like to know if I haven't won you! Oh, they do well to call you Princess Caprice! Oh, Gretchen," falling back to humble tones, "what a weary year has been wasted! You know that I love you. You have never really doubted it. You know that you have not. Had you gone to your sister when she wrote to you she would have told you that it was for you alone that I made her a princess, that all my efforts were to make you free to wed. Gretchen, you will not send me away this time, will you? You will be kind and bid me to stay?"



"I love you better than all the world."

"She loves you," whispered Gretchen.

This admitted no reply. I simply pressed my lips to her hair. The sobs were growing audibly less.

"I read it in her eyes," persisted Gretchen.

"Gretchen, answer me. Do you love me?"

"Yes."

I placed my hands against her temples and turned her head around so that those blue green eyes, humid and tearful, looked into mine.

"Oh, I cannot deny it. If I wrong her in accepting your love, it is because I cannot help it. I love you better than all the world. So well do I love you that"— Her head sank on my heart, and her sobs began afresh.

"That what, Gretchen?" I asked.

"Nothing." By and by she said: "Keep faith with me, and I promise to love as few women can."

Then I kissed her lips. "Gretchen?"

"What is it?"

"I have an idea that we shall be very happy. Now let us go and make terms of peace with the innkeeper."

We found him alone in the barroom.

"Gretchen," said I, "read this note."

As her eyes ran over those six words she blushed.

"Hermann," she said, "you have betrayed me."

"And when will your highness order me out to be shot?" asked he, smiling.

"At sunrise. But I shall blindfold the soldiers and take the charges from their guns. I forgive you."

"Now, Hermann," said I, "fill me up a stein." I held it high above my head. "A health! Long live the king! Long live her serene highness the Princess"—

"Elizabeth," said Gretchen gently. "I fear she has lost something which is never to be found again."

I drained the stein, and as I set it down I thought, Phyllis is so far away and Gretchen is so near!

"Let us go into the garden," said I.

For a long time we wandered here and there, saying nothing. I was thinking that I had found a castle at last which neither tides nor winds nor sudden awakenings could tumble down.

"Gretchen, you must never take up the sword again."

"Only in my lord's defense," From the movement of her arm, which clung to mine, I knew that she was laughing.

The moon had risen, the round and mellow moon of summer. The silver mists of night wavered and sailed through the aisles of the forests, and from the river came the cool, fresh perfume of the river rush.

"And so you really love me?" I asked.

"I do."

"Why do you love me?"

"Because," said Gretchen.

THE END.

AN ENDURING CURSE.

A Famous English Family That Perished by Fire and Water.

The attempt of the Midhurst district council to convert the famous "Close Walks"—four old yew avenues—at Cowdray, in Sussex, into an arrangement of sewage tanks recalls a creepy story of a fulfilled curse. At the dissolution of the monasteries Sir Anthony Browne obtained a grant of Battle Abbey and the priory of Eastbourne, the parish in which the ruins of Cowdray are situated, and according to a picturesque tradition one of the monks cursed him to his face and prophesied that "by fire and water" his race should perish out of the land. What foundation there may be for the story no man can say, but unquestionably the Brownes did so perish.

George Samuel Browne, eighth Viscount Montague and owner of Cowdray, who was engaged to Miss Coutts, sister to Lady Burdett-Coutts' mother, was drowned in the falls of Laufenburg in 1793. The messenger who brought the news to England met one going to Germany to inform Lord Montague that Cowdray had been burned! He was succeeded by a distant relative, a Roman priest, who was dispensed from his vows that he might marry and continue the line, but he died a few months afterward and the title became extinct. The estates went to the drowned viscount's sister, whose two sons were drowned together at Bognor in 1815. It is a weird story.—London Chronicle.

STUDY ALL YOU MAY.

THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS A "TIRED BRAIN."

When a Man Thinks His Brain Is Tired, It Is Really His Stomach That Is Overfed or Some Other Vital Point That Is Weakened.

Every man should have impressed upon him the fact that the human brain is capable of absolutely unlimited development. It can be developed more easily, more permanently than the muscles. Like the muscles, it is developed by exercise, but unlike them there is no limit to its possible development and there is no age limit to the growth of mental faculties.

If you go to a certain hotel in Chicago you will find at the door of the large dining room a colored gentleman who takes your hat, overcoat and umbrella. He gives you no ticket. When you walk out again, to your intense amazement he hands you your property, identifying you among hundreds of other guests and immediately associating you with the proper hat and coat.

In a big store in Twenty-third street, New York city, a small negro lad, 14 or 15 years old, works for a living. One day at that store this writer asked for a book apparently seldom purchased. Various dignified white men were asked about the book. They thought that they did not have it, but to make sure they asked the colored boy. Without a moment's hesitation he pointed out a certain balcony on the east side of the store and told exactly where the small volume could be found. Every one of the thousands of books in that store was located in a definite spot in that young negro's mind, despite the fact that he probably had seen the insides of very few of the volumes.

The two instances quoted are not unusual. They indicate merely the most superficial sort of development of one particular mental faculty, that of recollection. A more remarkable instance of such development was shown by Houdin, the French prestidigitator. He could pass a shop window containing perhaps scores of different articles, cast a glance at the window as he went by and enumerate without error everything in it from that one glance. Some men learn a score or more of languages.

Yet the greatest development of any human brain has never taxed even to the slightest degree the actual capacity of the mind.

No matter to what extent you may train your mental faculties, no matter how much you may use your brain, you will still be like the man who has spent 5 or 6 cents and has a million dollars in the bank.

We are justified in believing that we are destined to marvelous mental achievements in the future, when we consider the instrument of thought that has been given to us and which is so little used at present.

A scientist named Meinert calculates that the gray matter of the brain contains 600,000,000 cells.

That in itself seems quite complicated. If we only had one thought stored away in each cell, we would know quite a good deal.

But you must remember that each cell is divided into several thousand molecules separately divisible.

Every one of these molecules contains many millions of atoms. Unquestionably each separate atom plays its part in the working of the brain. Figuring on a very modest basis, you find that your brain contains 18,000,000,000,000,000,000 separate atoms.

The theory that the atom is an indivisible particle of matter, which is indicated by its name, meaning uncutible, is only a theory not by any means demonstrated. There is no reason to believe that there is any limit to the universe in the direction of bigness or littleness. What we call an atom may be in effect an indivisible particle of matter or it may be a small universe in itself. However this may be, don't you think that with a brain organized as above you ought to be able to develop a good deal of mental energy and be quite free from any worry about overworking the machine which has been given to you to do your thinking?

When a man thinks his brain is tired, it is really his stomach that is overfed or some other vital point that is depleted or overloaded. Keep the rest of your body in good condition, and your brain will never feel any amount of work that you will be able to give it.—New York Journal.

The Practical Joke.

The practical joke is a remnant of barbarism. Hunted back to its origin, it is a survival of the methods of torture in vogue with savages the world over. The idea behind every practical joke is the infliction of pain, shame, fear or ridicule upon the victim. It is not often that tragic effects follow a joke, repeating the news chronicles of the daily press, but when one reflects that the real object of every alleged "joke" of the practical kind is simply to inflict physical or mental pain upon some one it seems as if it must be time, by the clock of the ages, for the practice to end, at least among civilized and half civilized people.—Ada C. Sweet in Woman's Home Companion.

That Some Time.

Fashionable Use For Photographs.

Now that every one in society possesses one or two cameras, the latest thing is to find a new way of disposing of the photographs that have been taken. Scrap albums are just a little out of date, and it is far smarter to have your photographs mounted in a long green frame that runs round your room above the dado and so arranged that from time to time the sets may be changed. Another favorite way is to arrange them as stereoscopic views and family groups. Interiors and pastoral scenery are quite charming when used in this way.

THAT WAS DIFFERENT.

Papa Said There Was No Similarity In the Two Cases.

"Papa," asked the little boy, "do you remember the first money you ever earned?"

"Yes," said papa. "It was a nice, new, shiny 5 cent piece that old Mr. Gregg, the grocer, gave me for doing about a quarter's worth of work in carrying a load of potatoes into his cellar. I worked all Saturday afternoon to earn that nickel, and when he paid me I ran three blocks home, tired as I was, to show it."

"And did you put it in your little bank?" asked the little boy.

"No; I got father's permission to spend it just as I pleased. However, I kept it for three or four days, just to have the satisfaction of having money of my owned, earned by my own exertions. And if I could have bought all the things I thought of buying with that nickel I would have had about $10 worth of books, toys, marbles and what not. Finally I made up my mind. What do you think I bought?"

"I am sure I can't guess," said the little boy. "What did you buy, papa?"

"I went to the bakery and bought a custard pie."

"Why, papa! And you said grandma always had custard pie at home and let you have a slice of it as soon as you got home from school!"

"Yes, I used to get a slice, but not a whole pie, and she never let me eat it the way I wanted to. So I went to the bakery and bought my pie and borrowed a spoon from the baker and ate all the custard and left the crust. I never had anything taste so good in all my life."

"You never allow me to eat custard pie that way, papa," said the little boy.

"Oh, that's different!" said papa.—Indianapolis Press.

PAINT ON INDIAN FACES.

Nearly All of It Means Something to Those Initiated.

The fact of the matter is that every paint mark on an Indian's face is a sign with a definite meaning which other Indians may read. When an Indian puts on his full war paint, he decks himself not only with his own individual honors and distinctions won by his own bravery, but also with the special honors of his family or tribe. He may possess one mark of distinction only or many. In fact, he may be so well off in this respect that, like some English noblemen, he is able to don a new distinction for every occasion. Sometimes he will wear all his honors at one time.

Among the Indian tribes is one designated by the symbol of the dogfish, painted in red on the face. The various parts of the fish are scattered heterogeneously on the surface of the face; the peculiarly long snout is painted on the forehead, the gills are represented by two curved lines below the eyes, while the tail is shown as cut in two and hanging from either nostril. When only one or two parts of an animal are painted on a man's face, it is an indication of inferiority; when the whole animal appears, even though in many oddly assorted parts, the sign is one of great value and indicates a high rank.

Very peculiar are some of the honorable symbols painted on the Indians' faces. There are fish, flesh and fowl of all kinds—dog salmon, devilfish, starfish, woodpeckers, eagles, ravens, wolves, bears, sea lions and sea monsters, mosquitoes, frogs, mountain goats and all manner of foot, claw or beak marks—each with a special meaning of its own.—Pearson's Magazine.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West

One night last week the pupils of the rooms of the east branch school went to Clinton and the small boys of that town pelted them with snowballs and with a few fights the Tecumseh boys came out alive. Saturday afternoon a load of Clinton boys came down here and not a one of those boys went home until our boys had cleaned up on them. None of them care to visit Tecumseh right away, at least not as long as the bruises and stings of those snowballs last

An attractive young lady of this city relates an amusing incident which occurred in one of her classes while teaching in a distant city. It was a class in grammar, and she asked a young gentleman to give an illustration of the use of a verb in subjunctive mood, implying a wish but an impossibility. Instantly the young man exclaimed, "I would that you were younger," without the least hesitancy or apparent embarrassment, the teacher replied, "That is an excellent illustration, for, of course, it would be an impossibility."—Adrian Times.

The various clubs around town and outside will be glad to know that the school board are making arrangements to have the use of reference books from the Lansing State library. It is to be of much benefit this season but will be valuable for next year's work. If the club programs for the coming year could be handed in to the librarians as soon as they are out it will greatly facilitate work in this direction for both town and farmers' clubs.

The Monday Club meeting at Miss Bertha Smeltzer's was a very enjoyable affair. Two loads of ladies were in attendance and the parlors were well filled during the meeting. The regular program was carried out and before returning the ladies were served with coffee and doughnuts by Mrs. Smeltzer and taken back to their homes by Mr. Gillespie and Mrs. Hicks. All united in giving the hostess a vote of thanks for a very pleasant afternoon.

The stereopticon entertainment given by the Monday Club last Friday evening was well patronized by all their friends. The house was well filled and a very pleasant evening spent in looking at places of interest, which Mrs. C. A. Wright had seen and described in a very instructive manner. The club at its last meeting voted Mrs. Wright and Mr. Stacy a vote of thanks for providing such a pleasing entertainment and also to the Universalist society for kindly donating the church for the occasion.

The next meeting of the Monday Club will be held by invitation of Mrs. Gillespie at her home. The ladies who wish to attend will please meet at Miss Gertrude Hialey's at 1 o'clock where conveyances will be in waiting. Program.

A Meeting of Sportsmen.

A meeting of the hunters and fishermen was held last Friday night in Gen. F. B. Wood's office to discuss the proposed game laws, which will require each sportsman to pay a license of $1.00 each. The sportsmen of this place are in favor of the measure, but they prefer to see a different disposition of the license fees than that proposed. The law proposes that 25 cents be paid to the county clerk where the permit will be issued, the remainder going into the state treasury. The Tecumseh sportsmen suggest that the sum remaining after the clerk's fee is paid, be retained by each county to assist in the prosecution of violators of the law. It is argued that the deputy game wardens are not paid enough to make it any object to them to attend to business properly.

The promoters of the new plan believe it would give sufficient funds to induce deputy wardens to prosecute violators and thereby have a beneficial effect. Should the fund thus raised be larger than required to cover the legitimate expenses, the remainder will be given to the state.

A party of men, consisting of Gen. F. B. Wood, Capt. W. B. Hayden, Thomas Elliott and Messrs. Wilson and Lowe, drove to Adrian Sunday and talked with Senator Helme who was favorably impressed with the suggestion and will confer with Representatives Combs and Stone relative to introducing such a measure.

Another of His Interesting Letters.

Iloilo, Panay, P. I., Dec. 28, 1900.

DEAR EDITOR:

In my last letter I believe we were situated in Nagasaki harbor, having arrived there late in the evening, and not able to see anything of Nagasaki except myriads of lights flashing brightly along the shore. We were rather anxious for daylight in order to see what was before us in this new quarter of the globe.

The next morning we were up betimes and on deck ready for whatever might present itself to us. And we were not disappointed with the first look at our new surroundings. About the first thing to attract our attention was the large number of san pans about us. But perhaps I better explain what a san pan is. It might be compared to the rowboat of the United States, though with a decided advantage in favor of the latter. It is rather broader than, and about the size of an ordinary row boat. In the center is a small area capable of seating two or three persons comfortably, or rather uncomfortably. In this the passengers may seat themselves if they wish, but they generally prefer being seated on top of the whole contrivance. In this, also, the natives sleep at night and are ready at all hours to be awakened and carry passengers. In the stern of the boat the boatman stands and drives the small craft through the water by means of an oar (if such it may be called) placed in a groove in the stern.

There is no dock for ocean steamers at Nagasaki, consequently passengers must take either a san pan or a launch. And one never has to wait for there are always a great number of san pans ready and anxious to take passengers ashore.

There were some ludicrous scenes around the "Thomas" that first morning after our arrival. Laundrymen, tailors, etc., galore, crowding each other and obstructing the business of coaling and of unloading some of the goods from the ship, until the officer whose duty it was spoke to them in tones not very angelic. They, of course, understood not a word of his language, but he finally went through some very threatening motions which sent them flying back abashed to await their proper time.

The process of loading the boat with coal was decidedly interesting. The coal was brought to the ship in lighters. Then a line of workers was formed from the lighter to the point on the ship where the coal was to be dumped. Then the coal was passed in baskets from one to another until it reached its final resting place. The women worked at this as well as the men and seemed to be quite as capable.

But the interesting things were not all in the vicinity of the Thomas. All around us were ships of all classes and from all nations, also fishing boats and sailboats of every description from the small san pan to the large white-winged sailboats, some of them with the quaint old quilt-like sails which made one think of the pictures he has seen of Columbus' little fleet and reminded him forcibly that he was indeed in the Orient. During our stay of five days in Nagasaki, there were ships anchored in the harbor from England, Germany, Italy, Chili, France and the United States, besides the regular ocean liners.

As soon as possible we went ashore in one of the waiting san pans. Upon arriving we found the shore more crowded with jinrikishas than the water was with san pans. A "rikisha" is a two-wheeled cart usually with a top, though sometimes without. This is drawn by one man and carries one passenger. The shore and, in fact, all Nagasaki seemed to be overflowing with them; so much so that we could scarcely get through the crowd of "rikisha men," so anxious were they to secure passengers with their cries of "Rik'sha? Rik'sha?"

Nagasaki was the first city we had visited that was almost entirely new to us. Heretofore everything had been American either wholly or in part, but Nagasaki everything is distinctly Oriental. Here we saw the narrow streets characteristic of the old-fashioned East; the Japanese in the shops at their work with their feet curled up beneath them; the low, closely crowded buildings with their roofs of tile; the piles of sandals at the doors, left there by those entering, and many other things curious and interesting.

The mode of transportation of goods as well as of passengers is also curious in Japan and all the East. They have very few horses and most of their goods are carried by men; if light enough, by one man by means of a stick over his shoulder with that which is to be carried attached to each end, or when too heavy for one it is suspended between two.

There is one fact peculiar to Nagasaki which I haven't found to such a great extent elsewhere—that in nearly all shops an article can be bought for from one-half to two-thirds the original asking price. I believe it is a custom of the natives of this part of the world to spot a foreigner, especially an American, as something easy.

A party of clerks from the Thomas, of which I was a member, took a 'rikisha ride the first day ashore to the principal Buddhist temple in Nagasaki. It was quite a distance, but after trotting all the way one of the 'rikisha men went with us up the seven flights of steps to the temple, and I don't think he was as tired as we, even after his long run. These men have a great deal of endurance, but I am told they do not live to a great age. Here, at this temple we saw the Buddhist worship in its true style, the same form, the same manner of prostration that are sometimes portrayed by a returned missionary in the United States, with the solemnity of death and with an earnestness worthy of a better religion, while soft and weird music floated on the air. This temple is at the top of a high hill, from which eminence the whole city of Nagasaki and the harbor lay spread before us, a pretty scene to look upon.

Near this temple were planted two trees, one by General U. S. Grant, the other by Mrs. Grant. One of them has since died; the other is still flourishing from which I succeeded in obtaining some leaves. Between the trees is placed a tablet of stone upon which General Grant inscribed words of good will and his best wishes for the future success of Japan and her people.

As we were now near the edge of the city we wandered out a little and gained a glimpse of Japanese farming. The farms are arranged in terraces, one above another, with a wall of stone or other substance between, apparently to prevent landslides. Each of these farms is perhaps 100 feet square or thereabouts. In these garden plats all kinds of vegetables are planted in rows very close together. No land is wasted; it is all used to the smallest particle, and when one sees the number of people in Japan he is not surprised. One of the natives told me that ordinarily a farmer would own about three of these plats, but that a rich man owned ten. Pretty small farms a Michigander would think.

But having seen enough of this, we will return to the city.

On our way back we stop at a teahouse for which Japan is famous, and refresh ourselves with a cup of tea, the finest obtainable, in the land of its growth. Having done so, we once more enter our 'rikishas and speed away(?) through the city with our quaint steeds.

The immediate business part of the city was quite a wonder to us with its rows of low stores, most of them full of curios and trinkets designed to entice the money from the pockets of the many transients who pass through Nagasaki. These people know well what sells easily to their visitors, consequently they make one of their principal occupations the manufacture of curios. In the way of handiwork the Japanese are marvellously skillful, manufacturing many fine articles, especially of silk, tortoise-shell and bamboo, curiously and skillfully hand-worked and carved.

My impressions in general concerning Nagasaki were not very favorable. The city contains 150,000 inhabitants; it is not any too clean, the buildings are low and crowded together, every one apparently full of people, old and young, everything necessarily arranged to occupy the least space—such a contrast to a live, up-to-date American city, with its wide streets, its large airy buildings and good sanitary measures. The climate of Nagasaki is all that could be desired, being mild with rarely any snow or severe weather. The people too are wonderfully good-natured and well-meaning towards all. They are ever ready to accommodate a stranger and even take snubs with apparent good humor.

One day I saw a Japanese funeral procession pass through the streets of the city. It was composed of 'rikishas with several musicians in the lead, playing soft strains upon instruments something the nature of a lute; some distance farther in the procession appeared the corpse of a little girl lying in a 'rikisha as if asleep. She looked so lifelike and the whole affair appeared so little like a funeral that one would scarcely recognize it as such.

We also took a trip into the country and to the village of Mogi, a distance of several miles from Nagasaki, and situated on the beach. Our journey to this point was through the same characteristic scenery of Japan, hills and valleys—the valleys with their growth of rice ready for the harvest, some of it being cut with a sickle and gathered and bound by the harvesters, both men and women. Upon arriving at Mogi we explored the rocky shores for a time and then partook of a dinner served in Japanese style—six courses: the first, lobster; the last or dessert, rice pudding. Each course was served separately, one after another, until all were served. There were no questions as to what we wanted; no bill of fare; everything was placed at our disposal to treat as we pleased.

During our stay in the harbor we visited a French ship—a gunboat, spick and span. A stalwart Frenchman, who couldn't speak a word of our language nor we a word of his, piloted us through the boat from top to hold with the characteristic politeness of the French. We also visited the United States cruiser Brooklyn which lay in the harbor at the time. Hanging in the parlor of the ship, was a frame containing a plate pierced by a Spanish ball, as a memento of the service of the Brooklyn in the Spanish-American war.

Thus we spent our allotted time in Japan, every day learning something new and realizing more and more what a little we knew of our great world, which is itself, so insignificant, and what a small particle each of us is in the construction of the universe.

Very respectfully,
WALTER E. NORRIS

A Chinese Curiosity.

"A Chinaman in San Francisco," says a gossiper in the Philadelphia Record, "showed me once an ivory ball as big as your two fists, with six smaller balls inside it. It was the most wonderful thing I ever saw. The Chinaman said that the balls had been begun by his grandfather and that he was the third generation to work on them. He told me how the work was done.

"It begins with a solid block of ivory, which is turned into a ball and then carved in a latticed pattern with tiny saw toothed knives. Through the lattice, with other knives that are bent in various shapes, the second ball is carved, but is kept fast to the first one by a thin strip of ivory left at the top and by another left at the bottom. Then the third ball, with still finer knives, is tackled through the first and second ones, and so the work goes on till all the balls are finished, when the strips that hold them firm are cut away, and they all revolve freely, one inside the other.

"This Chinaman said it was a common thing for families to have such balls for hundreds of years—grandfather, father, son and grandson working on them when they had nothing else to do. They are priceless, of course. Some cheap balls are made of vegetable ivory, being carved while the material is soft, like a potato. These, though, are not worth more than a few dollars at the most."

The Evolution of the Pocket.

The ancient wore a single pouch at his belt. The modern has—how many pockets in an ordinary costume for outdoors? Let us count them: In the trousers five, in the waistcoat five, in the jacket five, in the overcoat five, making 20 in all, a full score of little pokes or bags, and arranged so conveniently that they are scarce noticed.

Truly this is an evolution! How long may it be before we have pockets in our hatbands—where the Irishman carries his pipe, the American soldier his toothbrush and internally the pettifogger his legal papers, the papers that his predecessors in England thrust into the typical "green bag?" How long before there may be pockets in our gloves—for there are, I believe, patents covering this invention—and in our shoes? The cane also, with its screw top, begins to be a useful receptacle.

Two centuries from now, so the man with a long foresight can clearly see, the main idea underlying the wearing of clothes will have entirely changed The chief purpose of garments will no longer be considered to protect the body. They will be regarded first of all as textile foundations for innumerable pockets.—Tudor Jenks in Woman's Home Companion.

This week begins our third year with you in the shoe trade and I must say we feel very grateful to the people o Tecumseh and surrounding country, but like the average man "not quite satisfied." We shall try and do a little more this year (1901). In order to do so shall sell the best makes of shoes we can get at a fair living profit, not cost, (when a man tells you he is selling at cost he is either a liar or a fool.)

We have selected some of the TESTS PATIENCE.

The Most Patient People Must Show Annoyance at Times.

Nothing spoils a good disposition quicker.

Nothing taxes a man's patience

Like any itchiness of the skin.

Itching piles almost drive you crazy.

All day it makes you miserable.

All night it keeps you awake.

Itch. Itch. Itch. With no relief.

Just the same with eczema.

Can hardly keep from scratching it.

You would do so but you know it makes you worse.

Such miseries are daily decreasing.

People are learning they can be cured.

Learning the merits of Doan's Ointment,

Plenty of proof that Doan's Ointment will cure piles, eczema, or any itchiness of the skin.

Read the testimony of a Battle Creek citizen.

Mr. A. G. Ayers, book binder, of 197 West Main street, Battle Creek, says: "My hands became so sore from eczema that it was with difficulty I could bend my fingers. The skin cracked open. large scabs formed and in addition to the spots being tender they itched intolerably. I tried everything I could hear about or get hold of to stop the trouble but I was unable to do so until I procured Doan's Ointment. I had heard it spoken about by several people but as I thought it would act like all other preparations which I had tried I waited some time until I was compelled from the condition of my hands to do something. Doan's Ointment cured me. Up to date and this is some months after I stopped the treatment. I have had no indication of any return."

Doan's Ointment for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

A YOUNG COMPOSER.

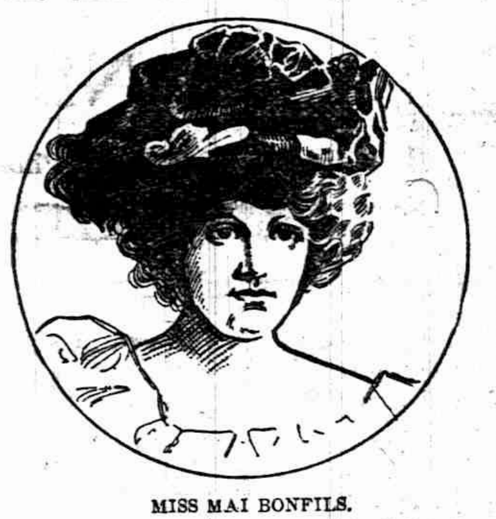
Mai Bonfils of Denver, Who Writes Operatic Scores.

The youngest operatic composer in the world is a girl, little Mai Bonfils, just past her seventeenth birthday.

Since Miss Bonfils was 6 years old she has evinced a remarkable musical talent, which her parents have endeavored to encourage. When she was 11 years old, her first composition was sung in public. The words "Tell Me Why" were composed by a newspaper man in Kansas City and sang by one of Frohman's companies while playing in that city.

Miss Bonfils is now in New York completing her musical studies. Her home is in Denver, where her father, Fred G. Bonfils, owns and conducts a large daily paper.

Although her parents, who are among the wealthiest people in Colorado, are very proud of their young daughter, they have never had published for her any of her compositions. She has sold them herself on their own merit—and spent the money. Her first operetta, soon to be produced, she has disposed of at a royalty.



MISS MAI BONFILS.

Not only is little Mai Bonfils a genius, but a beauty as well. She is of medium height, full figure and of the blond type. Her blue eyes are large, innocent and childish in their expression. Her mouth as yet is a little unformed. The full red lips usually wear a pouting semblance, which does not reveal her true disposition. Her fluffy golden hair is nearly always in careless disorder. She has something of a stage appearance and has said on several occasions that some day she would like to sing in one of her own operas.

Although heiress to a fortune amounting to something over $1,000,000, she is frugal in her tastes and devotes most of her time to study.

Underwear as a Protector.

The old idea that wool is the only proper protection for the skin is exploded. In my opinion, the skin, to perform its functions normally, needs but little such protection, says Melville Black, M. D. In fact, the less the better. By petting the skin and overprotecting it with woolen underwear we make it tender and hypersensitive, thus rendering it unable to withstand sudden atmospheric changes without paralysis of some portion of its vasomotor control; hence the frequent "catching cold," the bete noir of our existence.

To me it seemed incredible that I could cast aside my flannels and not feel the chill of winter's blast. My patients say to me, "I will catch my death of cold." When I show them that I am wearing linen mesh and have not had a cold for over a year and am perfectly warm and comfortable; something that I could not say when I was wearing heavy flannels, they are amazed. Some are not to be convinced—no amount of reasoning will convince them—that the condition of their skins is responsible for their cold and catarrhal noses and throats.

Decorating the Arm.

Bracelets and every device for decorating the arm are again seen, the heavy bangle being first in popular favor. The flat band of velvet is worn around the arm and is trimmed with mock jewels and other decorations. These velvet bands are becoming to the skin and, once in style, quickly become favorite articles of arm dress, says the Denver Times. You see them beautifully embroidered with pearls, and again they are found a veritable armored band, covered with steel scales of dazzling brilliancy. Jets, overlapping each other, cover other bands. Again, you see a mess of tiny jet scales of all kinds—gold and silver, jet and steel, mingled in wild profusion, mixed and overlapping each other beyond all powers of separation. Just dainty little trifles are these, but much of the success of dress depends upon them.

THE GRAND SCHEMER

HE UNFOLDS A PLAN WITH MILLIONS IN IT TO A CREDITOR.

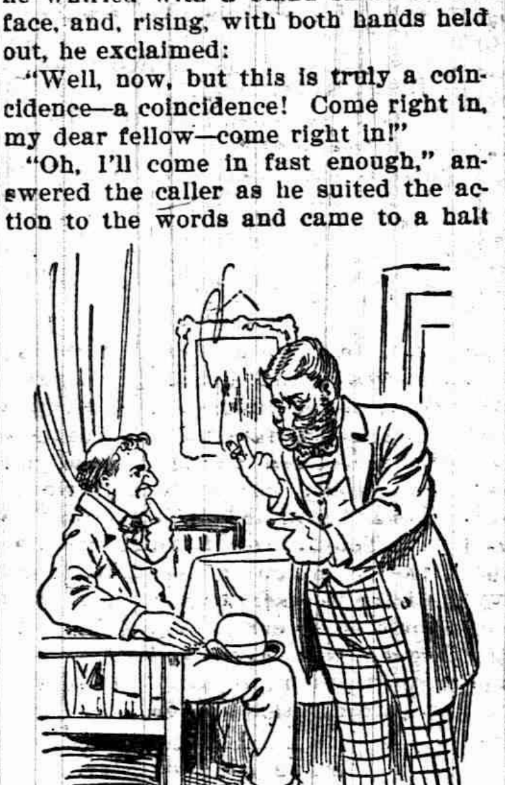
Major Crofoot Doesn't Succeed In Convincing His Wrathy and Skeptical Visitor, but Does Manage to Stand Him Off Once Again.

[Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.]

As the man turned into the doorway leading up to Major Crofoot's office he had a look of determination on his face. As he ascended the well worn stairs his tread showed aggressiveness. As he banged the major's door open and entered he had the air of a creditor who'd get his money or carry away his pound of flesh. The major was in. He sat at his desk smoking a very short stub of cigar, but as the door opened he whirled with a bland smile on his face, and, rising, with both hands held out, he exclaimed:

"Well, now, but this is truly a coincidence—a coincidence! Come right in, my dear fellow—come right in!"

"Oh, I'll come in fast enough," answered the caller as he suited the action to the words and came to a halt in the middle of the room. "Now, then, no more skulking and dodging. You owe me $10 borrowed money, and I want it right off the reel."



"AS THE WHEELS TURN A MOUTH ORGAN PLAYS."

"My dear Mr. Shine," said the major as he took a last puff at his stub, "you formerly had an office next door. We became acquainted. You learned that I was temporarily embarrassed, and, sizing me up as an honest, ambitious man, who would ultimately overcome his bad luck, you kindly forced a $10 bill upon me one day."

"I deny it!" shouted Mr. Shine. "Why, hang it, you were annoying me every day for a month before I let you have the money, and you told me a thousand lies to get it!"

"When you so kindly forced that money upon me," continued the major as he smiled and walked, "I said to myself that some day I would repay you a thousandfold. It was your trust, your confidence, in me that touched me. I was almost unknown to you. For all you knew I might be a deadbeat. You had only your judgment to go on, but your judgment was right. This very morning I should have telegraphed you to call in."

"Oh, you are going to pay, eh?"

"Major Crofoot always pays his debts, sir, and in some cases he returns $100 for $1. It will be so in this case. I could have paid you back long ago, but was waiting to make it a memorable occasion for you. The time has arrived. My dear fellow, let us shake hands."

"What for? You owe me $10. You say you are going to pay it. I don't see the object of shaking hands."

"Yes, you truly cast your bread upon the waters," said the major as he paced the width of the room and looked into vacancy, "and I am pleased that your returns will be so great. Do you know I love a man who trusts to my honor and integrity? Let a man show his confidence in me, and I would sell my shirt for him. Yes, you kindly forced $10 upon me, and"—

"And now you kindly force it back again," interrupted Mr. Shine. "It's no use dodging, old man. I'm here for my money and am going to have it."

"My dear fellow, you are one of the few who trusted to my integrity when I was down on my luck, and I therefore pass over your hard words now. You haven't heard of the Great American Combination Baby Carriage company, have you?"

"No, sir."

"Because it is just being incorporated and we are taking the greatest care not to let anything get out until we are ready. My own creation, sir, and the biggest thing of the decade. If we don't make a million dollars out of it the first year, I shall be more than surprised. I wouldn't take half a million in cash for my chances."

"That's all blamed nonsense!" shouted Mr. Shine as he began to bristle up. "I know you, you old soft soaper! You want to dodge that $10, but I'll have it before I leave!"

"My own inventive idea, as I told you, and it will astonish the world. The baby carriage can be changed into a cradle, a hammock or a sled by moving a lever. Good for summer or winter, you see. Is provided with a stationary milk bottle, a whistle and a rattlebox. Has an ice chest and a soothing sirup department. As the wheels turn a mouth organ plays. Provided with a patent brake, rubber tires and a mothproof cover; also has revolving fans to keep the flies away. After the baby gets out of long dresses he can use the carriage as a tricycle. That's the invention, Mr. Shine. Organized on a capital of $750,000, and shares to be sold at par. There's more than millions in it."

"I don't care a rap if there is. What I want is my $10, and I'll give you just five minutes to shell out."

"I was going to offer you the secretaryship," softly observed the major, "but the salary will be only ten thousand a year. What I shall offer you and what I was going to telegraph you about as you came in was the purchasing agency. We shall want a man to buy the milk and soothing sirup and see that they are pure. The salary will be at least $15,000 per year, with perquisites thrown in. My dear man, you trusted me. This is your reward. Now, will you shake?"

"Not by a durned sight!" shouted Mr. Shine as he bobbed around. "None of this sort of rot will stand me off on my $10. Do you want me to take it out of your hide?"

"And you can buy stock at par, my dear fellow—stock that will be worth 150 inside of four weeks. I have arranged for that. That stock will pay you at least 100 per cent. Invest $10,000, and you have an income of $25,000 per year. That's what comes of trusting to the integrity of Major Crofoot. Is it enough? If not, just say so, and I'll add $5,000 from my salary as president."

Mr. Shine deliberately removed his coat and vest and flung them on a chair.

"Or if you want to borrow $10 for a day or two you can have it and welcome. I'll just step out and get it for you."

The major stepped, and Mr. Shine removed his collar, tie and cuffs. Then he spat on his hands and limbered up his arms and waited. He waited for half an hour—two hours. Then he got up and redressed himself and kicked over the chairs and desk and went out. The major had stood him off once more.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Many Things of Which Its Graduates Are Ignorant.

The failure of the Sunday school as a means of giving a systematic and thorough knowledge of the Bible is great. A teacher in a city high school asked an advanced class of 40 or 50 pupils, who had been drilled for years in the International Sunday School Lessons, how to proceed in order to reach Palestine, and not one could give the desired information. Then she asked the class in what part of the world Palestine is located, and no one knew.

That is a very good specimen of Sunday school teaching and can be paralleled anywhere by those who will take the trouble to ask a few questions. The ignorance of the Bible on the part of most persons of average intelligence is something amazing. The simplest questions will elicit no answer on the part of most such persons.

That educated persons know something about the Bible may be assumed, but not unless the training goes much beyond the standard of the common school. Again and again it has transpired that those who were generally well informed, who were fairly well educated and regarded as bright and clever, were almost totally ignorant of the Bible. Their Sunday school training had given them no knowledge of the book that was of any value, and, however much they might have read it since, it was to them a sealed volume. —Boston Transcript.

Giving Him a Rest.

The energy of one of the oldest inhabitants of a Massachusetts town is a byword among his neighbors and a trial to his grandchildren, who have not inherited their full share of his active temper.

His grandson John in particular suffers from the old man's untiring industry, for John is his assistant in the little grocery shop, where everything, from codfish to brooms, may be found. A purchaser of gingersnaps lingered one day to hear the noontime address delivered to poor John by his grandfather.

"Now, Johnny, I'm a-going home for my dinner," said the old man briskly, "and on the way I'll carry up these pails to Miss Manson and fetch back her kerosene can. I shall be gone up'ards of half an hour. You'll have plenty of time to eat your luncheon, and while you're resting after that I wish you'd saw up that little mess of wood that lays out by the back door and split it up for stove kindling, for the weather's turning sharp a'ready.

"Most likely I'll be back 'fore you get out o' work, and anyways I don't want to keep you at it all the time, so if there's a few extry minutes jest set down and make out a bill or two. The fust of the month'll be upon us 'fore we know it."—Youth's Companion

The Woman Who Laces.

In an interesting article in a contemporary on the subject of tight lacing it is alleged that women are again cultivating the unnaturally slim waist. We can only hope that there is little foundation for such a statement. There have been advocates of tight lacing who have denied that it is in any way injurious to health. This theory is absurd, for an instant's reflection cannot fail to convince the unbiased mind that tight lacing must be in every way injurious to women who habitually indulge in it, and few can say with any truth that the effect on the figure or appearance generally is pleasing.

It is often said that women dress to please the eyes of men. If so, it is difficult to see why at one time the excruciatingly tiny waist was so fashionable, for the majority of men abhor anything so unnatural, and, although there are a few with taste so perverted as to admire a figure as far as possible removed from nature's original design, women do not seek to please the few, but the many. The craze therefore is the more inexplicable. The fashions of the present day happily do not require anything abnormal in the way of figures, and the designs from the best houses in Paris, such as Paquin and Doucet, show a marked absence of any intention to cater for the woman with the 17 inch waist, the smartest gowns admitting of a natural but withal graceful and elegant figure. This is as it should be, and surely, now that women have become accustomed to the easy lines and the undoubted grace of the more rational waist, they will never return to the unsightly hourglass figure which was almost as painful to the beholder as it must have been to the unhappy possessor.—Philadelphia Times.

Brave or Depraved.

When the man of refinement first visits his "uncle," he sneaks in and buries himself in one of the booths to do his "hocking" or "putting up the spout," but he quickly gains courage by repeated calls and presently is found standing in the open bargaining for all he is worth. It is more honorable to pledge one's watch than to borrow from one's friends. Fellows who conveniently forget to repay their friends have a most powerful memory for pawn tickets.

I know a dentist in this city whose dress suit goes in "hock" whenever he needs a dollar. Often he pawns his shoes and breeches for smaller sums. He is a victim of the pawnshop mania, becoming so through a disinclination to borrow from his acquaintances. These, never having been "struck" for a loan, hold him in high esteem.—New York Press.

Peculiarities of X Rays.

There are many curious things about X rays which seem to puzzle even the scientists. Signor Briguiti, who has been making experiments with them at Rome, says that the visibility of a substance to the eye is no criterion of its visibility to the X rays. The rays cannot see through glass, which is transparent to the eye, whereas aluminium, which is opaque to the eye, is transparent to the X rays. The rays can see a splinter of glass in the hand, but not a splinter of wood. Most inks are transparent to the rays, including printer's ink, but some of them are opaque. The rays can see through a postoffice directory, but if a paper with words written on it be put in the middle of the directory the rays will reveal these words and nothing behind them.

The levees on both sides of the Mississippi are of sufficient extent that if they were built in a single straight line they would be about 1,300 miles long or long enough to stretch the greater part of the distance between New Orleans and New York.

The Address He Got.

A Russian gentleman tells a funny story of his first encounter with the English language.

The day after his arrival in London he made a call on a friend in Park lane, and on leaving the premises inscribed in his notebook what he supposed to be the correct address.

The next day, desiring to go to the same place again, he called a cabman and pointed to the address that he had written down. The cabman looked him over, laughed, cracked the whip, and drove away without him.

This experience being repeated with two or three other cabmen, the Russian turned indignantly to the police, with no better results. One officer would laugh, another would tap his head and make a motion imitating the revolution of a wheel.

Finally the poor foreigner gave it up, and, with a great deal of difficulty, recalling the landmarks which he had observed the day before, found his way to his friend's house. Once there, and in company with one who could understand him, he delivered himself of a hot condemnation of the cabmen and the police of London for their impertinence and discourtesy.

His friend asked for a look at the mirth provoking address, and the mystery was solved. This was the entry:

"Ring the bell."

The Russian had with great care copied, character for character, the legend of the gatepost, supposing that it indicated the house and street.—Pearson's.

Mustn't "Own" Their Engines.

The railroad engineer who "owns" his engine is not in favor with his superiors. Complaints about trivial matters are likely to be made against him, and soon he finds himself without a berth. The phrase "owning an engine" does not mean that the engineer has acquired title to his iron horse. The expression is used of a man who has been with a certain engine so long that he becomes a part of it. He knows its every peculiarity, he feels its every protest against a heavy load, and he nurses it and coddles it as if it were his child. He dislikes to run the engine at top speed for fear something will happen to it, and in consequence his train is frequently behind time. He takes a grade at half the rate he should, and he runs cautiously down hill. In a word, he "owns" his engine.

Of course this is all very nice and idyllic, and it is the kind of thing a person likes to read about in stories of the railroad. But plain, practical railroad men look at it differently. They argue that the best engineer is the man who never fails to run his train according to his running time, the man who is never behind and seldom ahead. So it comes about that the engineer who makes a master of that which should be his servant wonders who has a grudge against him. But it isn't a grudge; it's business.—New York Mail and Express.

Closeness Personified.

There's a good story told on a young fellow here noted for his closeness. He went to spend the night with a friend. During the entire night he betrayed much restlessness, which kept the host wide awake, and finally the slumberer betrayed signs of violent emotion. "He's going to have a nightmare," said the friend, "but he always grumbles so when you wake him up that I hate to disturb him." He waited awhile longer, sitting up in bed staring on the miserable sleeper, and finally, becoming alarmed, he roused him. He sprang up in bed, glared wildly around and said: "Where am I? I don't see the storm."

"Why, here in my room," said the host soothingly. "You remember you staid all night with me? I beg your pardon for waking you up, but you carried on so I had to."

"Beg your pardon," gasped the guest. "I shall never be grateful enough to you. I dreamed I was out with Miss Bud, and a terrible storm came up, and my shoes were new, and I was just ordering a coupe for two when you roused me. Old boy, you have saved me a dollar."

And the host says he was actually afraid to go to sleep again that night for fear the coupe would come.—Louisville Times.

A Social Ambiguity.

He had hoped to be asked to take her in to dinner, but to his great disappointment that duty fell to somebody else. And so until the men arose to let the women file out he could only gaze at her from afar and be politely stupid to the woman next him. He had never met her before, but somehow they seemed to know each other very well by the time they had spoken a few words in the course of the short wait before the guests paired off on their way to the dining room. He didn't know what she thought of him, but he knew that from his point of view she was about right. And he was a man difficult to please.

The men seemed to him to linger over their cigars an interminable time. At last they trooped to the drawing room. He sought her out.

"How did you get along?" he asked.

"To tell you the truth," she said frankly, and her frankness was charming, "I have been bored to death. Have you been?"

"Yes," he said.

"Isn't it a pity," she remarked, "that we didn't get the chance to be bored in each other's company?"—New York Sun.

To Punish Johnny.

Francis Parkman, the historian, had a Mosaic idea of justice. A friend met him one day walking along the street leading a street boy with either hand. "What in the world are you doing, Parkman?" asked his friend. "I found that Johnny here had eaten all of the apple instead of dividing with his little brother. I am going to buy another for the younger boy and make Johnny watch him while he eats it."

Couldn't See the Humor.

"I can't for the life of me see," remarked an Englishman during the course of conversation with Nat Goodwin once, "what people mean by American humor. To me all humor is alike, whether it be of American or English origin. Perhaps you can explain to me just what distinguishes American humor from any other sort?"

"Well," replied Mr. Goodwin, "I think the American type of humor is rather more subtle. It doesn't always fully impress itself upon you at once. The more you think about it the funnier it seems. I can perhaps best illustrate my meaning with a little story.

"A man was walking along the street one day when he passed another man who was carrying a letter in his hand.

"'Pardon me,' said the man with the letter. 'Do you know where the postoffice is?'

"'Yes,' said the other man and passed on. On second thought he decided that he had been rude and went back to where the man with the letter was still standing.

"'Do you wish to know where the postoffice is?' he asked.

"'No,' said the other man."

The Englishman's gaze was vacant. "Just turn it over in your mind for a few minutes and tell me what you think of it," said Mr. Goodwin.

Ten minutes later the Englishman clutched at Mr. Goodwin's elbow. "You won't be offended, will you, old chap?" he murmured. "But, really, I think they were both blawsted rude!"—Saturday Evening Post.

A Helpful Suggestion.

"Kin yeou tell me, young feller," inquired Mr. Reuben Hay of Four Corners, "where hereabouts I kin git me a good farmer suit?"

"Why, there's a good pharmaceutist not two blocks away," replied the young fellow blithely.—Harper's Bazar.

Our Vinol is the Remedy for all Pulmonary Affections

Vinol is a preparation that is delicious to take.

It consists of a delicate table wine in which has been dissolved the active curative principles that are found in the liver of the live cod, and to which cod-liver oil owes its reputation as a remedy for coughs, colds and all wasting diseases.

If there is any one who has a cough, a tendency to take cold easily, or a dread of consumption, we would like to have them call and permit us to explain what we know about Vinol and why we believe it will cure all such troubles more surely and quickly than any other remedy ever given to the public.

Following is a letter which has just come to hand and which shows how beneficially Vinol acted in one instance:

"I had a severe cough of long standing. I was advised by friends to give your Vinol a trial, which I did. Before taking it I had tried many other remedies for coughs without obtaining any relief. With Vinol it was different. I have now used four bottles of it, and am pleased to say my cough has almost entirely left me. I have been decidedly benefited by its use in every way. Very truly yours."—H. E. SMALL, Boston, Mass.

Vinol acts beneficially upon the digestive organs, enabling them to obtain for themselves the elements from which are made firm healthy flesh tissue, sound muscle, strong bone structure and pure blood.

We recommend Vinol unreservedly.

If you will call on us at our store, we will tell you why we have such faith in this new wine of cod-liver oil.

We guarantee that if you suffer from any symptoms that indicate troubles for which we know Vinol is intended, we will refund to you your money if you don't find Vinol helps you.

IMPORTANT BILLS

Several Measures of Genaral Interest Introduced.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Rep. Dingley Wants One Submitted Giving the Legislature Power to Fix the Salary of State Officers—Other Important Bills.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 22.—Several measures of general interest were introduced in the legislature Wednesday night. Rep. Dingley has a joint resolution to submit at next fall's election a constitutional amendment providing that the legislature shall regulate the salaries of all state officers. The Kalamazoo statesman says he believes this is the only way the salaries of state officers will ever be made commensurate with the duties and responsibilities of the offices they hold.

Rep. Murdock introduced a bill to do away with the practice of the state game warden of issuing permits to wealthy sportsmen and others to hunt game.

Rep. Hunt of Detroit has fathered a bill providing that county agents be paid a reasonable salary, regardless of whether or not truants complained of are convicted in court.

Rep. Chandler has introduced the old Gustin bill, providing that the national interstate commerce act shall become a state law and that no railroad shall charge more for a long than for a short haul.

Rep. Scott has an arbitration bill.

Rep. Wade has a bill amending the school law by providing that county boards of examiners shall draft the examination questions to be put to applicants for teachers' certificates, instead of having that work done by the state superintendent of public instruction, or his assistants, as at present.

Rep. Moore has introduced a bill to re-enact the old laws drafted by the late Judge Cooley and others, relative to congregational churches. The measures were first passed by the legislature of 1897, but two years ago they were repealed and others substituted. Secretary Sanderson of the State Congregational Church association asked Rep. Moore to have the old Cooley laws re-enacted.

Rep. Baumann of Detroit has a bill for the appointment of four jury commissioners in each county—two republicans and two democrats—to examine all jurors and ascertain their qualifications to serve.

Rep. Randall introduced a bill seeking to make it unlawful for Christian Scientists, faith cure practitioners, magnetic healers and osteopathists to practice in this state.

Rep. Totten has introduced a bill providing that a justice of the peace may enforce a labor lien anywhere in the township where he resides. The present law confines such officer's jurisdiction in this regard to his own and adjoining townships.

Killed Himself.

Benton Harbor, Mich., Feb. 22.—Charles Roth, whose home is thought to be at Hume, Ill., shot and killed himself Thursday afternoon in John Schairer's saloon on Main street. He had been in the city several days, stopping at the Fonger house, where he paid his board one week in advance. He complained of poor health, and it is supposed that he was temporarily insane when he shot himself. He was in a small room at the time. Two shots were fired, the second bullet passing through the brain. Roth was about 35 years of age and well dressed. He was noticed in the streets at an early hour yesterday morning trying to gain entrance to the saloon in which he killed himself. In his pocket was found a letter from his sister, Esther Bradley, of Weldon, Ia., which read "Be a good boy—be sure and tell us about your experiences on the way to Chicago and also at Benton Harbor." The suicide has an uncle at Riverside, Mich., and his relatives have been notified of his death. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of suicide, while despondent.

Alleged Thief Captured.

Corunna, Mich., Feb. 22.—Sheriff Gerow, in company with Sheriff Rust of Flint, Wednesday arrested Bert McGuirk of New Haven, but not without a lively chase across McGuirk's farm. Sunday night, Mr. Bowman, residing just across the Genesee county line, had 15 bushels of beans stolen. McGuirk was suspected. In Owosso, it was found that on Monday morning McGuirk sold 15 bushels of beans to Hall Bros., and on inquiry being made among the neighbors, it was learned that McGuirk had not raised beans in a number of years. The officers then drove to McGuirk's farm. McGuirk slipped out of the door and made for the woods. The officers followed in a cutter and chased their man over a long field, but he reached the fence first and Sheriff Rust gave chase on foot. Finding McGuirk was gaining on him he fired twice. At the second shot, McGuirk fell, but not because he was shot. A cradle knoll tripped him up, and before he could arise he was a prisoner. He was taken to Flint for examination.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Michigan pensions were granted Thursday as follows: Increase—Ralph C. Joiner, Allen, $12; John H. Stillwell, Monroe, $30. Reissue—George Zulch, West Bay City, $12. Widows—Betsy A. Summers, Jackson, $17; Mary Donnelly, Dowagiac, $12. War with Spain: Original—Wm. Moore, Lennon, $72.

Took Morphine.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 22.—Anthony Skory, a workingman out of employment and despondent, committed suicide Thursday by taking morphine. He was 49 years old and leaves a widow and four children. The oldest daughter is 18 years old.

A Peculiar Death.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 22.—Steve McCormick, a waiter, met a peculiar death Thursday night. He slipped on an icy walk on Main street, wrenched himself in recovering his equilibrium, walked to his room and died two hours afterward. The physicians said he must have burst a blood vessel in his heart or lungs.

"I have always used Foley's Honey and Tar cough medicine and think it the best in the world," says Chas. Bender, a newsdealer of Erie, Pa. Nothing else as good. J. J. Orr.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Celebrated in Manila by Americans and Filipinos.

Manila, Feb. 22.—The federal party covered itself with distinction Thursday evening, on the occasion of the banquet given under its auspices on the eve of Washington's birthday. The company included some two hundred and fifty of the leading Filipinos and Americans. The dining hall and tables were beautifully decorated, and the menu was excellent. Among the 20 who sat at the principal table were Gen. MacArthur, Gen. Wheaton, Gen. Bates, Gen. Young and the members of the United States Philippine commission.

President Tervera, who presided at the banquet, said the Filipinos who had struggled to secure freedom and true democracy, such as only one nation could give them, rejoiced to add to the American sentiment another, namely, that Washington was first in the hearts of the Filipinos.

Gen. MacArthur, who eulogized Washington, said it was he who discovered the fact that independent republicanism, without stable institutions, could never be successful. "Expansion must seize all nations," continued the governor-general, "which produce beyond their own wants. We have come not with menace but with inspiration and hope to plant the republican government of personal liberty. Under the American flag injustice and oppression are impossible."

Atty.-Gen. Torres declared that the government founded by Washington was worthy of the highest admiration of the Filipinos.

Judge Taft, who was introduced as the "carrier of peaceful government to the provinces," likened the resistance of the American colonies to royal and patrician oppression unto the resistance of the Filipinos to similar injustice. He spoke eloquently and encouragingly regarding the political and commercial future of the Philippines.

NO FURTHER CONCESSIONS

To Be Asked in China Without Consent of the Powers.

Washington, Feb. 22.—At the instance of the United States government, the powers have accepted the principle that no further individual concessions of territory in China shall be sought or obtained by any one power without international assent.

This agreement applies not only to Tien Tsin, where there has been some rivalry exhibited in the effort to obtain concessions for foreign settlements, but to all other Chinese points. The state department began this movement some time ago. It is surmised, though no admission on that point can be obtained, that the occupation by Russia of the important concession opposite Tien Tsin, including the railroad terminus, caused the initiation of this movement. However, it was realized that it might be very difficult to deal with a separate case, because thereby national pride might be aroused. But it was conceived that all of the powers might be willing to subscribe to a general principle which promised upon its face to maintain the rights of all against selfish individual efforts.

The conjecture was well founded, for after the department had addressed each of the powers on the subject the answers received from not only a majority, but nearly all of them, and certainly a sufficient number to insure the execution of the plan, were an acceptance of the American principle. So hereafter if any one nation seeks to secure room for its individual settlements or like privileges, in ports or elsewhere in China, the application must be approved by the other powers before the Chinese government will be permitted to assent, even if it desired it so.

There is another and a very important point of the agreement which is, that the present is not the most opportune time for asking new concessions. It cannot be determined at this moment whether the conclusion above announced is retroactive in effect.

Big Deal About Closed.

Greensburg, Pa., Feb. 22.—The big deal for 35,000 acres of coal land in Allegheny, Lower Burrell and other townships in the northern end of the county is, after many months delay, about closed up. The land goes to Drape & Kirkland of Pittsburg at a cost of $30 per acre. The farmers interested, about 40 in number, have just been notified that the terms have been accepted. The amount involved in the deal is about $1,000,000. The average depth of the coal is about 200 feet, and the average thickness of the coal vein is seven feet. A shaft is to be sunk at Frogtown and a branch road is to be built to connect with the Allegheny road near Parnassus.

Not a Violation of Law.

Chicago, Feb. 22.—The grand jury has decided that boxing exhibitions, such as Gus Ruhlin and his sparring partner, "Denver" Ed Martin, have been giving in a local theater, and to which objections had been made, were not a violation of law. As a result of this decision, the cases against Ruhlin and Martin will be dropped. The same decision was made in the case of Frank Hall, who made complaint against the pugilists and was himself held to the grand jury for witnessing the sparring match.

Submarine Boats.

London, Feb. 22.—In the house of commons Thursday, replying to a question, Mr. Arnold-Forster, parliamentary secretary for the admiralty, imparted the information that the question of submarine boats had for some time seriously engaged the attention of the admiralty and that a statement on the subject would be forthcoming in a few days.

Cruisers Launched.

London, Feb. 22.—The armored cruisers Good Hope and Bacchante were launched simultaneously Thursday; the Good Hope, of the Drake class, at the yards of the Fairfields, and the Bacchante, of the Cressy class, at the yards of the Browns, on the Clyde. The former is a gift from Cape Colony.

Complete Tranquility.

Madrid, Feb. 22.—At a cabinet council Thursday, at which the queen regent presided, the premier, Gen. Azcarraga, explained the motives which compelled the ministry to declare martial law. Complete tranquility now prevails, and the situation caused by the strikes at Gijon and Valencia, which at one time was disquieting, has now much improved.

The Jury Out.

New York, Feb. 22.—The jury in the case of Dr. Samuel J. Kennedy, charged with the murder of Dolly Reynolds, which retired Thursday afternoon, was locked up for the night at 10 o'clock and Justice Fursman announced a recess of the court until morning.

A STRONG POSITION

Taken From the Boers by Methune After a Stubborn Fight.

CONFLICTING TALES OF BOTHA

One Says He Declares He Will Never Surrender, While Another Says He Is Sueing for Peace—De Wet Greatly Depressed.

London, Feb. 22.—The war office has received the following from Lord Kitchener: "Klerksdorp, Feb. 21.—Methuen's force marched here, having cleared the country through Wolmaranstad. At Haartbeestfontein, 1,400 Boers, under Generals De Villiers and Lienbenberg, opposed him. They held a strong position obstinately, but were turned out after severe fighting, in which the yeomanry, the Victorian Bushmen and the Lancashires distinguished themselves. Our casualties were three officers and 13 men killed, and five officers and 25 men wounded. The Boers left 18 dead on the ground and suffered severely."

Johannesburg, Feb. 22.—The Boers destroyed a culvert between Natal spruit and Klip river, on the railroad just south of here, at dawn yesterday. They captured a trainload of food stuffs, and after taking all they could conveniently carry set fire to the rest and disappeared over the veldt.

Standerton, Feb. 22.—A deserter who has arrived here relates that Commandant General Louis Botha assembled his men Feb 2 and addressed them from a Cape cart. He declared that they should never surrender, so long as there were 500 left, adding that he would always be ready to lead them. He reminded them that the American colonies fought for more than six years to secure independence, and appealed to them to fight as long or even longer, if necessary, until not a man was left.

Some of the burghers replied that they did not see how they could fight much longer, as the British were destroying all the crops and capturing all the cattle and sheep, while the ammunition was nearly exhausted, save about six rounds.

"When this is gone," they said, "where shall we get more?"

Gen. Botha replied that the Lord would provide them with the means of fighting.

London, Feb. 22.—Dispatches to the Daily Mail report a Johannesburg rumor that Commandant General Botha is sueing for peace. Lord Kitchener, it appears, has issued instructions that no goods of any description are to go forward by the Delagoa Bay line until further notice with the exception of urgent military and hospital supplies. This order is supposed to indicate a big move westward.

Other dispatches to the Daily Mail locate Gen. De Wet in the angle between the Brak and Orange rivers, with the British forces across the base of the triangle.

"Gen. De Wet will evidently try to re-cross the Orange river," says one correspondent. "He is greatly depressed by the dogged pursuit, and he wept when told of the British approach. He had already tried ineffectually to cross the flooded Brak."

On the other hand, an official statement, issued in Cape Town, says it is expected that Gen. De Wet will cross into Griqualand West and that Col. Plumer is in close pursuit.

A Sad Case.

Zanesville, O., Feb. 22.—One son of W. T. Travis was fatally burned and another so badly injured that his sight is destroyed, while they were trying to secure a pocketbook containing $540 from the second story of Mr. Travis' burning residence at Roxbury, Morgan county, Thursday morning. While one of the boys was upstairs trying to get the pocketbook out of a big trunk in which it was concealed, the floor collapsed and he was precipitated into the flames below. The other brother rushed in and rescued him, losing his own eyesight and failing to save his brother's life.

No More Laborers Available.

Kingston, Jamaica, Feb. 22.—The commissioner sent by the Jamaican government to Ecuador to investigate the treatment of Jamaican laborers there by American foremen with the MacDonald Railway Construction Co., advises the stoppage of emigration; in consequence of this report no more laborers can be had here. The company's efforts to secure laborers from Barbadoes will fail for the same reason. The company is now trying to hire laborers in Hayti and Japan in order to complete the railway on contract time.

Another Railroad Accident.

Pittsburg, Feb. 22.—The Erie express on the Erie & Pittsburg road, leaving here at 5:35 in the evening, ran into a string of coke cars near Shields station, demolishing the caboose and two cars, and throwing the engine on its side. None of the passengers were hurt, but Engineer Jacob Weindorff and Fireman T. Doyle, both of Erie, were cut and bruised. Trains were delayed about an hour.

A Final Parting.

Columbus, O., Feb. 22.—Mrs. Tobias Ferrell, mother of Rosslyn Ferrell, the condemned murderer, visited her son in the penitentiary Thursday afternoon. She was accompanied by Miss Lilian Costlow, to whom Ferrell was engaged to be married a few days after the commission of his crime. It was stated the meeting was the final parting with the condemned man.

Well Known Jockey Killed.

Titusville, Pa., Feb. 22.—F. M. Rakes, a well known jockey and trainor, was thrown from his sleigh Thursday and killed. The team which he had been driving turned quickly and threw Rakes against a curbstone, breaking his neck.

The One Exception.

TEN LIVES LOST

And Twenty-five More or Less Seriously Injured.

TWO TRAINS IN COLLISION

The Accident Occurred on the Camden and Amboy Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad in New Jersey—The Scene Was Horrifying.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 22.—One of the worst collisions in the history of the Amboy division of the Pennsylvania railroad occurred at about 5:30 o'clock Thursday evening at Ruslings Siding, near Bordentown, and about three miles south of Trenton. The "Nellie Bly" express from New York for Atlantic City collided with passenger train No. 330, running from Camden to Trenton. The number of dead so far as known is ten, and the number of injured upward of 25. A special train at about 9 o'clock from the scene of the wreck brought four dead bodies and 18 wounded persons to Trenton. The wounded were distributed among the three Trenton hospitals. Other wounded passengers were taken to Cooper hospital at Camden.

Among the killed was Walter Earl, engineer of the express, and James Birmingham, baggagemaster of the local train. Most of the killed were Italians.

The scene at the wreck is described by those who were present as horrifying. The two trains collided at full speed and both engines were completely demolished. The forward car of each train, in both instances a combination baggage and smoker, were entirely demolished also, and to add to the horror the wreckage took fire. The second car of the "Nellie Bly" turned over on its side and the passengers had to climb out through the windows. In this they were assisted by passengers from the cars that did not leave the track. The track at this point is so close to the Delaware and Raritan canal that the passengers in getting out of the overturned coach got into the canal, and many of the bodies of the dead and injured had to be taken from the water.

Thomas Lawrence of Trenton said he saw one man buried beneath the ruins and crying for assistance. He tried to pull him out, but found he could do nothing to help him. He believes the man perished in the flames. The scene of the wreck was far from outside assistance, and when the wrecking train arrived from Trenton it was after dark and the work of clearing up the debris and removing the bodies was necessarily slow.

The "Nellie Bly" was running in three sections, and it was the third section with which No. 330 collided. The local train had taken the siding to permit the express to pass, and it is believed that through some misunderstanding or mistake the local came out on the main track after the second section had passed, mistaking it for the third section.

The story of the wreck, as told by the passengers, is as follows:

The "Nellie Bly" express was made up of a day coach containing, as far as is known, about 24 Italians, who were en route to Atlantic City to do construction work; a baggage car, day coach, combination car and two more day coaches. The car with the Italians was directly behind the engine. The express had made frequent stops on the run down from New York, and was slowing up just north of Bordentown when the accident occurred. At this point there is a curve. The first thing the passengers knew was a sudden jolting of the train, caused probably by the engineer putting on the brakes, and the next moment a terrible crash. Both engines were reduced to a mass of broken and twister iron. The car containing the Italians was crushed to splinters, and all its occupants were buried under the mass of wreckage. The second car piled upon the first car and the third car crashed into the mass and tumbled into the dry canal alongside the railroad. The latter coach was filled with passengers from New York, and all went down with the car. Everyone, however, got out or was chopped free from this car, some of the passengers being quite seriously injured. The survivors said that if the canal had been filled with water many would have drowned before they could have escaped from their prison. The remaining three cars did not turn over.

The local train, which left Camden at 3:30 p. m., did not fare as badly as the express. It was made up of three cars, and the first two were badly splintered. As far as the passengers knew, no one was killed on this train, but several were badly used up.

Competition in the Field.

Pittsburg, Feb. 22.—The management of the Pennsylvania lines has arranged with the Erie company for through passenger service on two daily trains via Columbus and Akron to Buffalo, taking effect May 5, from St. Louis, Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus. This arrangement brings a new competitor into the field for Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo and Niagara Falls business and for New York business via Buffalo, from the territory in the west and south covered by the Pennsylvania and Vandalia lines and their connections.

Governor Interposed.

Akron, O., Feb. 22.—Gov. Nash has interposed executive objection to the match between Gibbs of Cleveland and Nickens of this city next Monday night. Judge Kohler Thursday received instructions from the governor to call the attention of the sheriff to the proposed match and to warn that officer of the law, and that his full duty would be expected. The governor, in his letter, makes the unequivocal statement: "The contest must not be allowed to take place." The match will formally be declared off to-day.

New Insomnia Cure.

Brown—Say, I've been trying the finest cure for insomnia that I ever heard of. It is for one to count each breath that he exhales while lying in bed.

Smith—Ah! Then you go to sleep.

Brown—No, but after a little while a fellow gets rather interested in the work, and the night passes away so quickly that he doesn't mind lying still so long.—Brooklyn Life.

A FIELD DAY.

Two Sensations Occurred in the House of Representatives.

Washington, Feb. 22.—For nearly two hours Thursday the senate had under discussion a resolution by Mr. Jones of Arkansas, to discharge the judiciary committee from further consideration of the anti-trust bill passed by the house at the last session and to bring it before the senate for consideration.

To some extent the merits of the measure were discussed, Mr. Hoar, chairman of the judiciary committee, Mr. Platt (Conn.), Mr. Spooner, Mr. Bacon, Mr. Pettigrew, Mr. Teller and others taking part in the debate. The majority maintained that the house measure clearly was unconstitutional. They protested, too, against taking up so great a question in the closing hours of the session. The resolution finally went to the calendar.

During the remainder of the afternoon the postoffice appropriation bill was under discussion. After a prolonged contest, the appropriation for pneumatic tube service was eliminated entirely, so that as the bill stands now the service will have to be discontinued after the first of next July.

The old controversy over the special appropriations for fast mail service engaged attention the rest of the day. It was decided to begin holding night sessions to-night.

The senate adjourned at 6 o'clock.

This was another field day in the house. Two distinct sensations occurred. Early in the day, during the consideration of an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill to prevent hazing at the naval academy, Mr. Hepburn of Iowa used exceedingly strong language while inveighing against the practice of hazing, charging that the habits of tyranny and oppression which had been formed by the officers of the army and navy at their academies was responsible for the refusal of sailors to enlist in the navy and for the large number of desertions from the army. Moreover, he alleged that the officers stood by each other when in trouble, saying that the commanders of 25 vessels of the navy lost since the civil war had, with one exception, escaped with slight punishment.

Mr. Cannon of Illinois and Mr. Dayton of West Virginia warmly defended the navy.

The stir caused by Mr. Hepburn's speech, however, was mild compared with the row which was kicked up later over some items in the bill for extra compensation to employes of the house. Mr. Dinsmore of Arkansas exposed the fact that one of the employes of the house, while occupying one position was drawing salary for another, and that the difference between the salaries was to be made up in one of the items in the bill. This led to a general ventilation of the domestic affairs of the house, during which Mr. Bailey of Texas declared that the situation was a scandal upon the integrity of the house. He charged that there were employes of the house who were dividing their salaries with others who performed no work, and challenged any one on the other side to deny his allegations. He offered to produce sworn testimony in substantiation of his charges if an investigating committee were appointed.

It was explained by Mr. Joy of Missouri and others that there was no law concerning the employes of the house. Mr. Cannon contented himself with saying it was evident matters were "very much mixed." At the close of the session Mr. Bailey offered a resolution for the appointment of an investigating committee, which was referred to the committee on rules upon the assurance of Mr. Payne, the majority leader, that it would be reported at once. The general deficiency appropriation bill—the last of the appropriation bills—was passed.

At 7 o'clock the house adjourned.

He Is After Fitz.

Cincinnati, Feb. 22.—Jeffries when seen Thursday as to the condition of his knee, said: "I do not feel any ill effects of it. I can give it proper rest now that I am not in training. You can rest assured I will never quit the ring, even if I lose my leg, until I get another crack at Fitzsimmons." Jeffries exhibited his knee to a party of surgeons yesterday. It is encased in a rubber bandage that holds it as firm as a plaster of paris cast.

Copy of Charter Filed.

New York, Feb. 22.—According to the Mail and Express, a copy of the charter of the new steel company which wants its capital placed at $800,000,000, was taken to the office of the county clerk in Jersey City Thursday afternoon and at the same time a special messenger started for Trenton to file the charter itself with the secretary of state.

The Only Thing.

A man once wrote to a western lawyer for information in regard to a person who had owed him a considerable sum of money for a long time.

"What property has he which I could attach?" he asked.

The lawyer's reply was brief and to the point:

"The man died six months ago. He has left nothing subject to attachment save a widow."—Youth's Companion.

A GOOD SHOWING.

There Are 17,334 Members of the G. A. R. in Michigan.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 22.—Assistant Adjt.-Gen. Pond of the Michigan department, G. A. R., Thursday made his report to national headquarters for the six months ending Dec. 31 last. The report shows 375 posts, with a membership of 14,930 in good standing, while there are 2,404 delinquents still under the jurisdiction of the order, making a total membership of 17,334.

During the period covered by the report, four new posts were organized and five went out of commission. The total loss of membership was 238. Of this number, 158 were by death, 60 on delinquent reports and 20 by honorable discharges.

The amount of cash expended from post funds for relief was $673.88, but Col. Pond says that this is but a small portion of the relief afforded through the connections with the order. The report further shows that for the entire year 1900 the death loss of the Michigan department was 383, while the total loss in membership was only 206. The addition of new recruits for the year was 729. This showing is a remarkable one, owing to the average age of the veterans. In 1896, when the present assistant adjutant-general assumed his duties, there were 373 posts and 16,766 members. The total loss during the five years has been 1,836, and of this number 1,764 were by death. During the three years preceding 1896 there was a death loss of 1,101, while the total loss was 3,702.

Thursday night a new post known as Stansell post, No. 456, was mustered at South Lyons.

Held Up Traffic.

Mt. Clemens, Mich., Feb. 22.—A Mexican mustang held up traffic on the Rapid Railway Wednesday night for three hours, necessitating the transferring of passengers from one car to the other. The horse, which had been standing for some time in the cold, broke away and started down the Gratiot road. At the Clinton river bridge a closed toll gate was encountered and a dash for the Rapid's bridge was made. The horse's feet slipped down between the ties, holding it fast. The wrecking crew was sent for, but the obstacle being out of the ordinary, considerable time was required to remove it.

Fifteen Bodies Recovered.

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 22.—The bodies of seven of the three score miners who perished in the Cumberland mine explosion last Friday were recovered Thursday. Eight were taken out Wednesday, making a total of 15 recovered. Some of those found yesterday were lying under fallen timbers and debris, having evidently been crushed to death, while others apparently died from the effect of after damp.

Denies the Report.

Youngstown, O., Feb. 22.—President Shaffer of the Amalgamated association Thursday made an emphatic denial of the published statement that he had gone to Andrew Carnegie and asked that organized labor be given a fair show when the Carnegie interests are transferred to the Morgan interests. Mr. Shaffer says he has done nothing to warrant such a statement being made.

Gasoline Explosion.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 22.—Mrs. W. M. Marshall was covered with blazing oil Thursday morning by the explosion of a gasoline stove. She ran out of doors and a policeman, who happened to be passing, threw her into a snow bank. The flames were extinguished, but she will probably die.

Many Old People.

Maple Rapids, Mich., Feb. 22.—A canvass of this village shows 30 residents who are over 70 years of age. Eight of them are octogenarians whose average age is 83 years and 6 months. The ages of the three oldest, viz: Elias Williams, 89; Mrs. Nancy Drake, 88, and Mrs. Rachel Call, 86, make 263 years. Adding that of Mrs. Jerusha Berdan, 84, makes 357 years for the four.

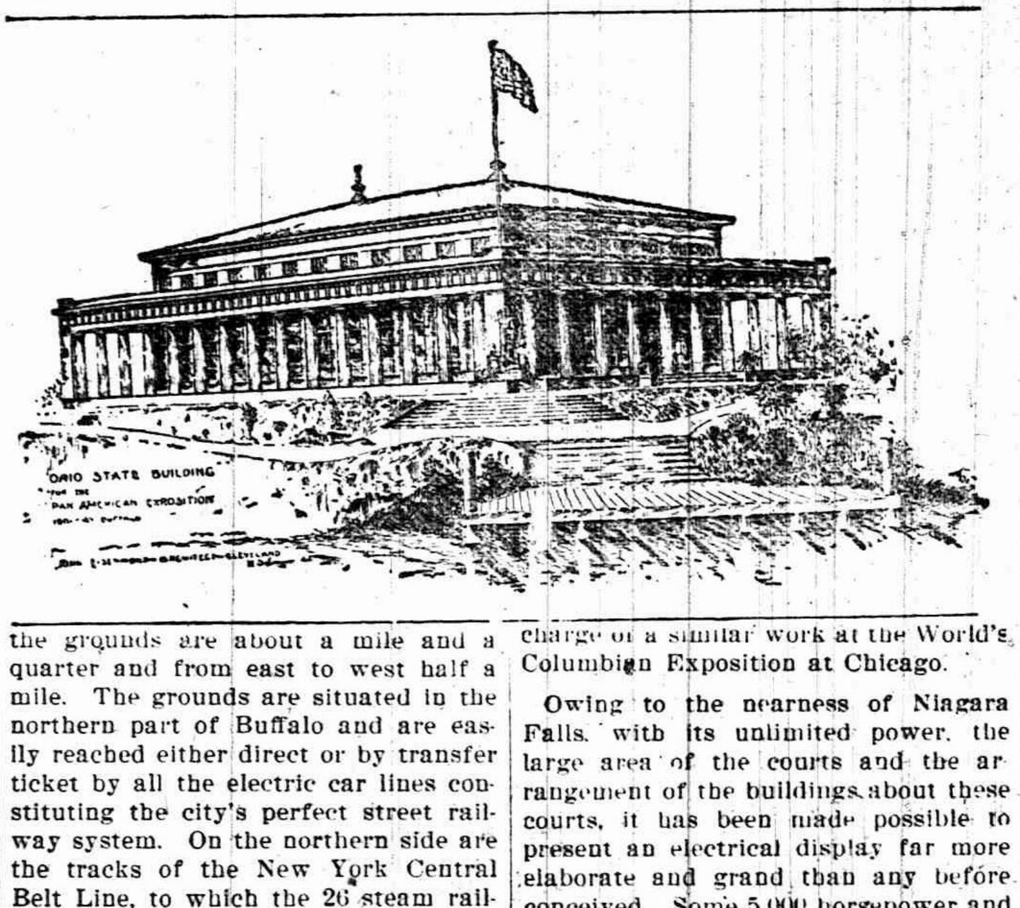
Pan-American Outlook.

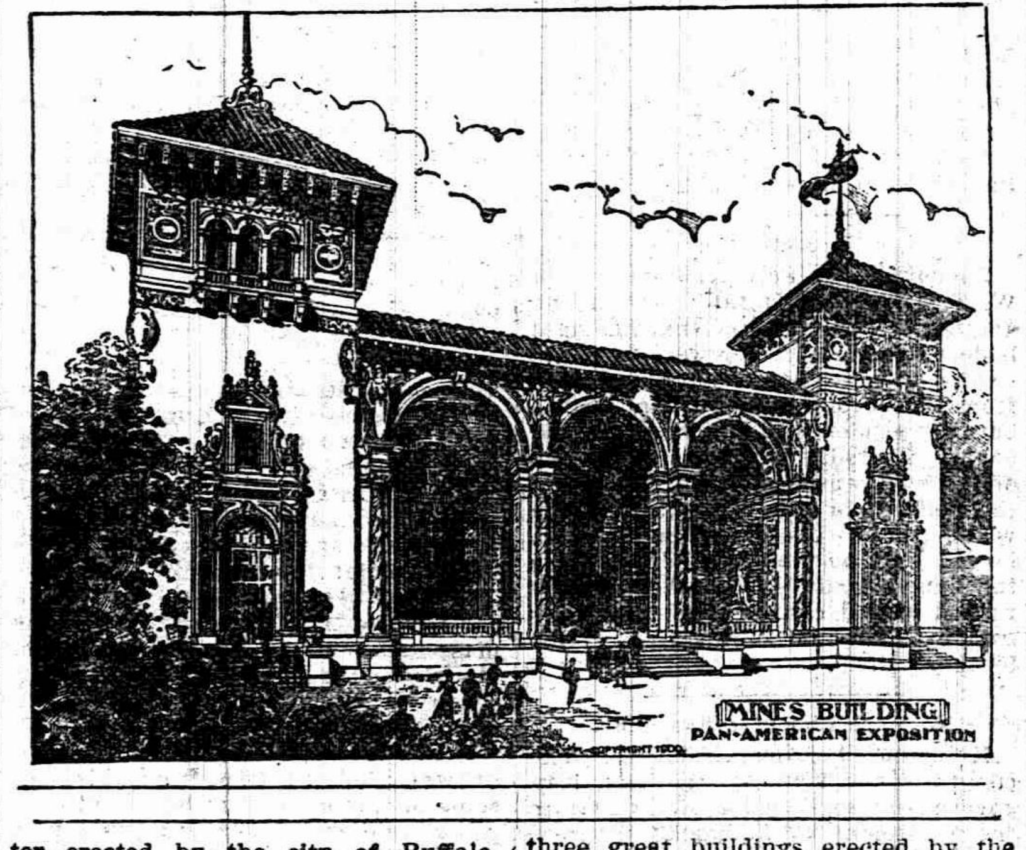
The Big Exposition Promises to Exceed All Expectations.

Exhibits From All the States and Countries of the Western Hemisphere—More Than a Score of Great Buildings to Shelter the Displays.

The Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo during the summer of 1901 will be not only big, but beautiful. In many ways it will excel every similar enterprise in the history of the world, and chief among its merits will be the fact that everything can be easily seen and comprehended. System and originality are conspicuous in every detail. The revised plan shows a plot comprising 350 acres. From north to south the grounds are about a mile and a quarter and from east to west half a mile. The grounds are situated in the northern part of Buffalo and are easily reached either direct or by transfer ticket by all the electric car lines constituting the city's perfect street railway system. On the northern side are the tracks of the New York Central Belt Line, to which the 26 steam railways entering Buffalo will have access during the Exposition. The southern portion of the grounds is a part of Delaware Park and contains a lake of irregular shape more than half a mile long, indicated by letter B on the ground plan. This part of the Exposition plot is already very beautiful, the city of Buffalo having spent many thousands of dollars in planting shrubs and trees of many rare species and in producing landscape effects that give to the eye a beautiful vista from every point of view.



The main southern entrance of the Exposition is on Lincoln Parkway, indicated by the letter A. At the left as you enter will be the beautiful Albright Art Gallery, built of white marble and costing upward of $350,000. This is the gift of a citizen of Buffalo, Mr. J. J. Albright, and will be a permanent fireproof building for public uses devoted to art. On the right is the beautiful new boathouse and shelter erected by the city of Buffalo. Crossing the bridge between the lake and the North Bay, the New York State building may be seen on the north bank of the bay. This also is of white marble, fireproof and a permanent structure. It will be devoted, after the Exposition, to the uses of the Buffalo Historical Society.



Continuing up the slight grade across the bridge, we now come to the "Approach" (D), where we get the first broad view of the wonderful group of buildings devoted to the various exhibit divisions of the Exposition.

It will be noted by reference to the ground plan that the buildings are grouped around a system of courts which have been aptly described as in the form of an inverted letter T. The transverse court, corresponding to the cross of the T, is the Esplanade, capable of accommodating 250,000 people. North of this, corresponding with the perpendicular of the T, are the Court of Fountains and the Plaza, which reach almost to the northern limits of the grounds. On either side of the Court of Fountains are the subordinate courts known as the Court of Cypresses and Court of Lilies. These several courts have a combined area of 33 acres, which is far more extensive than the courts of any former exposition, and, on account of the unusual area, greater opportunity is given for elaborate and beautiful decoration.

In all the courts are to be large pools into which beautiful cascades and wonderful fountains will throw their crystal streams. To the water features will be added the garden effects. These will comprise large sunken gardens, with formal beds of rare and beautiful flowers, and many plants of a highly decorative character will be displayed throughout the courts. The grounds outside the main group of buildings are also to be richly adorned with horticultural and floral features. The horticultural exhibits, to which about seven acres are devoted in the southern part of the grounds, will contribute much to the decorative effect. In this exhibit will be over 500 beds, many of them containing hundreds of plants of a single variety of flowers.

The exterior walls of all the buildings of the Exposition are to be of staff. All cornices, corners, window openings and entrances are receiving very elaborate adornment in modeled plastic work. This ornamentation is of a far more elaborate and intricate character than heretofore used on any exposition. The roofs of all the buildings are to be of red tile, and the outer walls are to be painted in harmonious colors, giving a most pleasing effect to the eye.

This Exposition will stand pre-eminent in point of original sculpture. There will be more than 125 groups of magnificent original works by some 30 or more American sculptors of note. This grand scheme is under the personal direction of Karl Bitter, who was in charge of a similar work at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago.

Owing to the nearness of Niagara Falls, with its unlimited power, the large area of the courts and the arrangement of the buildings about these courts, it has been made possible to present an electrical display far more elaborate and grand than any before conceived. Some 5,000 horsepower and more than 200,000 incandescent electric lamps will be employed in this wonderful illumination. The centerpiece of this display will be the Electric Tower, a structure of superlative beauty standing between the Plaza and the Court of Fountains. This glorious work, designed by John Galen Howard, is 375 feet high. In its southern face is a beautiful cascade, 30 feet wide and 70 feet high, falling upon a terraced base. This cascade and all the fountains of all the courts will be richly illuminated at night in a great variety of colors, giving an effect of fantastic and enchanting beauty.

Standing in the Fore Court (E) and looking north, immediately in front, is the Triumphal Bridge (G). This bridge will be one of the most beautiful works of the Exposition, having four great piers surrounded and surmounted by sculptured groups modeled by Mr. Bitter and others. Crossing the bridge we may see on the extreme right the three great buildings erected by the national government for the shelter of its extensive exhibits gathered from all departments. On the extreme left are the Forestry and Mines, Horticulture and Graphic Arts buildings. At the northeast corner of the Esplanade and Court of Fountains is the Ethnology building, and on the opposite corner is the Temple of Music. Next north, on the right, is the Manufactures and Liberal Arts building and on the left the Machinery and Transportation building. North of the Mall, on the right, is the Agriculture building and on the left the Electricity building. In the center is the Electric Tower. In the northeast corner of the grounds is the Stadium, with its large entrance building (Z). Opposite, on the west side of the Plaza, is the large entrance to the Midway. On the north is the Propylæa, or monumental entrance, and beyond this the great building but recently found to be necessary for transportation exhibits and, forming a part of this, the splendid railway station. Two new buildings, one devoted to dairy products and the other to agricultural machinery, are being erected, but not shown in the plan. The live stock display is east of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts building. In the southeastern part of the grounds are the State and Foreign buildings, the Six Nations Indian exhibit, the Philippines, Ordnance and Forestry exhibits.

The exhibits to be made at the Pan-American Exposition embrace every line of human effort. They have been classified as follows: Electrical Machinery and Appliances; Fine Arts: Painting, Sculpture and Decoration; Graphic Arts: Typography, Lithography, Drawing, Engraving and Bookbinding; Liberal Arts: Education, Engineering, Public Works, Hygiene and Sanitation, Constructive Architecture, Music and the Drama; Ethnology, Archæology; Agriculture, Foods and Accessories, Agricultural Machinery and Implements, Dairy Products and Appliances; Horticulture, Viticulture, Floriculture; Live Stock: Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Swine, Poultry and Pet Stock; Forestry and Forest Products; Fisheries, Fish Products and Apparatus; Mines and Metallurgy; Machinery, Manufactures, Railways, Vessels, Vehicles, Ordnance; exhibits from states and countries of the western hemisphere.

One of the chief architectural features at the Pan-American Exposition will be the splendid Temple of Music. This will be the center for musical interests at the great All-American Exposition. Music lovers will naturally wend their way to this building very soon after arrival upon the grounds and both here and from the band stands in the great Esplanade and in the Plaza they will always find some entertainment in progress which will appeal to their love of musical art. The Music Temple is well along toward completion. Its architecture is a free treatment of the Spanish Renaissance, it being octagonal in form, with pavilions at the corners. The grand entrance is at the corner of the Esplanade and Court of Fountains, the spacious courts upon which most of the principal buildings of the Exposition have their frontage. The cornice and balustrade are of elaborate composition, the latter bearing names familiar to the musical world. The interior of the temple will be particularly fine in its sculptural and color decorations. The exterior of the building will be ornate in architectural features and groups of sculpture designed to illustrate the purpose and character of the building. A dome whose crown is 130 feet above grade and whose interior is brilliant with golden tints and other rich hues gives an imposing finish to the structure. Star shaped windows in the drum of the dome admit abundant light to the large auditorium. This will seat 1,200 persons, and with the additional seating capacity afforded in the balconies fully 2,000 persons can be accommodated. The decorations of the interior will illustrate such subjects as the grand divisions of Music, Oratorio, Grand Opera, Symphonic Music, etc. The sculptor will typify such subjects as religious music, lyric music, gay music, heroic music, etc.

The great organ for the Temple of Music, which is to cost $10,000, is under construction by Emmons Howard & Son, and already there is much eagerness among the leading organists of the United States to have the privilege of playing upon it during the Exposition. Two recitals by prominent exponents of this branch of musical art will be given each day. Concerts by the leading instrumental organizations of America and Europe will be given every day during the progress of the Exposition in the Music Temple and from the band stands in the Plaza Esplanade and other parts of the grounds. In connection with the subject of music at the Pan-American Exposition mention should be made of the notable attractions to music lovers to be provided at the great Saengerfest of the North American Saengerbund, which will open in Buffalo on Monday evening, June 24, 1901.

Why Cables Get Tired.

There has been some question, says The Electrical Engineer, as to the reason why certain cables lose their conducting properties and have in some instances to be replaced. A learned Frenchman has submitted a paper on the subject to the Academie des Sciences. In this paper he states that when cables lose their electrical properties it is because they are always used for one kind of current only, either positive or negative. If used sometimes for positive and sometimes for negative, they will, he states, preserve their conductive qualities indefinitely. Experiments with nine wires running from Paris to Dijon demonstrated this, he says.

Unsympathetic.

"You haven't much sympathy for the request from your employees for shorter hours."

"Not much," answered Mr. Cumrox. "It goes to show that men don't know when they are well off. If they had been invited around to musicales and dragged through Europe by Mrs. C. and the girls like I have, maybe they'd appreciate the privilege of staying in a nice, comfortable, businesslike office nine or ten hours a day."—Washington Star.

Still Anxious.

"Have you fastened the windows, dear?" she asked, as they were about to retire for the night.

"No. What's the use? I gave you the last dollar I had to buy that new hat, and we needn't fear burglars."

"But they might sit down on the hat, you know."—Washington Post.

Took a Mean Advantage.

A supernumerary in Richard Mansfield's company who had been, to use a Scotch phrase, continuously and continually "heckled" by the manager at rehearsals and between the acts for alleged displays of stupidity on the stage, was informed that a near relative of his had departed this life and had left him a competence, so he decided to leave the dramatic profession and, to quote him, become respectable. Before leaving he determined to take his revenge on Mansfield for the attacks on his amour propre that gentleman had made.

The play was "Richard III," and the super was one of the soldiers who led away the Duke of Buckingham when the king orders his demise.

In due time Richard remarked, "Off with his head!" and this was the super's opportunity. Advancing, he touched his helmet in the style of a footman and replied loudly and genially:

"That'll be attended to, old chap. We'll take care of old Buck. It'll be all right!" and retired gracefully. When the infuriated Mansfield came off to commit murder, he found the super had fled.—Chicago Chronicle.

WEST WIND.

The years go by, though the days are long to a hungry heart.
I was feeling content last night before the wind arose—
A wind from the rainy west, tossing the wet, green boughs;
It called me and mocked me; it filled my soul with a thousand woes.

O wind from over the sea, voice from a dear land lost,
Why need you seek me here, waking the old time pain?
Sure my life is hard enough; there is not much joy to spare;
My heart must break or follow if you call me like that again!

O wind from across the wave, wet with the wild sea spray,
Were I but free, like you, I never would ask to roam
From the darling land you left and the scent of the heath clad hills!
Did you come to break my heart, dear wind from the hills of home?

GREASE AT LAUNCHINGS.

Big Cost of Getting a Battleship Into the Water.

"The mere act of getting a war vessel into the water costs a lot of money, time and trouble," said an engineer, speaking of the recent launching of several new torpedo boats. "I spent a year and a half in the designing room of the Cramps' yard," he continued, "and happen to know what I am talking about. Of course the launching of a little torpedo boat is comparatively easy, and the cost is not over a few hundred dollars, including flowers and souvenirs and even the bottle of champagne used in the christening. But when it comes to a big armored cruiser or a first class battleship it is a horse of a different color, and the actual expense seldom falls below $4,000 or $5,000. I've known it to go as high as $8,000.

"The building of the ways for the ship to slide down over is the main item, and then comes the greasing. Every inch of timber over which the vessel slides must be covered with a lubricant. Different firms use different substances, but soap and tallow form the main ingredients of them all. At the Cramps' we used a layer of beef tallow and a layer of soft soap, and, taken altogether, between 1 and 1½ tons of the stuff were required to put a move on the average battleship. The tallow is spread on first to the depth of about three fingers, and the workmen use big flat trowels to make the surface as smooth as possible. Then they pour over the soft soap, which is just thick enough to run, or about the consistency of tar.

"As a general thing, the double coating answers the purpose admirably, and the ship glides into the water as if it was sailing on air. If it sticks, as has happened in a few cases, it is likely to spring some of its plates, and accidents of that kind are so costly that nothing is spared to avert them."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Expert.

"Do you think those two letters were written by the same person?"

"I really couldn't say," answered the handwriting expert.

"Oh, I see! You haven't studied them?"

"Yes, I have; but I haven't as yet been retained either by the prosecution or the defense."—Exchange.

Particular About His Name.

"Don't drag my name into print in connection with this absurd affair!" cried the indignant citizen. "But if you do be sure to spell out my middle name in full."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HE WON IN A CANTER.

"LUCKY" BALDWIN MADE HIS JOCKEY RIDE SQUARE.

The Horseman Used an Argument That Made the Crooked Rider's Teeth Chatter While He Got Out All the Speed In the Animal.

In the lobby of a hotel the other evening a number of men were discussing sports and sporting men when the subject of nerve and grit came up. One of the party, a well known Californian, who knew "Lucky" Baldwin in the old days, said:

"Baldwin was about the hardest man to be chiseled out of anything he set his heart on getting that I ever met up with. A whole lot of people tried to put it on him in business and other sort of deals, but none of these ever succeeded in catching 'Lucky' Baldwin sufficiently asleep to make their plans stick.

"Horsemen still talk about a funny game in which Baldwin figured on one of the Chicago race tracks a number of years ago. Baldwin had brought his magnificent string of thoroughbreds to Chicago to make an effort to annex the swell stakes that were then on tap on the tracks in the windy town, and he got them home first or in the money in many of the biggest events. Well, he had one of his finest horses entered in a valuable long distance event, and Baldwin was particularly anxious to win this race, not so much for the purse end of it as for the glory of capturing the stake. His horse just about figured to win, too, and Baldwin intended to 'go down the line' on the animal's chances, not only at the track, but at all of the big poolrooms in the country. He stood to clean up considerably more than $100,000 on the horse if the brute got under the wire first. Baldwin's regular stable jockey was taken sick on the morning of the race, and the old man had to hustle around for another boy to ride his horse in the big event. From another horseman he bought for a big round sum the release of a high grade rider, who was to have taken the mount on a thoroughbred that didn't figure to get near the money in the stake race. Baldwin gave the jockey his instructions as to the way he wanted the horse ridden, and then, when the betting opened, his commissioners dumped Baldwin's money into the ring in such large quantities that the horse became an overwhelming favorite.

"A quarter of an hour before the horses were due to go to the post a well known bookmaker, to whom Baldwin had often exhibited kindness in less prosperous days, ran to where the old man was standing, chewing a straw, in his barn.

"'Baldwin,' said the bookie to the old man, 'there's a job to beat you, and you're going to get beat. They wanted me to go in with 'em, but you've always been on the level with me, and I wouldn't stand for it. The ring has bought up your jock, and your horse is going to be snatched.'

"'Much obliged for telling me that,' replied the old man. 'I'll just make a stab to see that the boy doesn't do any snatching, though.'

"Baldwin borrowed another gun from one of his stable hands (in those days he always carried one of his own about as long as your arm), and with his artillery he strolled over the infield and took up his stand by the fence at the turn into the stretch. He hadn't mentioned to anybody what he was going to do, and the folks who saw the old man making for the stretch turn simply thought that Baldwin wanted to watch the race from that point of view. He did, for that matter, but he happened to have another end in view.

"Well, the horses got away from the post in an even bunch, and then Baldwin's horse went out to make the running. The jockey's idea was to race the horse's head off and then pull him in the stretch, making it appear as if the animal had tired. Baldwin had instructed the jock to play a waiting game and make his bid toward the finish. The horse simply outclassed his company, however, and he didn't show any indications of leg weariness whatever as he rounded the backstretch on the rail a couple of lengths in front of his field. Baldwin could see, however, that the crooked jock was sawing the horse's head off in his effort to take him back to the ruck. When the horses were still a hundred feet from him, Baldwin let out a yell to attract his jockey's attention, and then he flashed his two guns in the sunlight and bawled at the jock:

"'Leggo that horse's head, you monkey devil, and go on and win or I'll shoot you so full of holes that you won't hold molasses!'

"The jock gave one look at those two guns that Baldwin was pointing straight at him. Then he gave Baldwin's horse his head, sat down to ride for all that was in him, and the horse under him cantered in ten lengths to the good on the bit. As long as 'Lucky' Baldwin was on the eastern turf after that no jockey ever tried to yank one of his horses."—Washington Post.

Two Killed.

Grand Haven, Mich., Feb. 22.—Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hunter, old and respected residents of Crockery township, met death on the Grand Trunk tracks at Ferrysburg Thursday forenoon. They were going to Muskegon with a team of horses which became unmanageable and ran over the crossing, when the engine of the train due here at 11:10 o'clock struck the sleigh in the center, killing Mr. Hunter instantly and terribly mangling Mrs. Hunter, who died 30 minutes later. This is the fourth death at this crossing in the last six months.

Local Option.

The law in Michigan states that petitioners in any county can obtain a vote on the question of "local option" by presenting a petition from names of one-third of the number of people who voted at the last general election. For the last few weeks people have been at work on such a petition getting signers, but at this time have not obtained a sufficient number to cause the supervisors to call the election. The adjourned meeting of the board commences on Monday, March 4, and by that time no doubt a sufficient number of names will have been secured to call for the vote.

It would seem that on top of the trouble the people of Kansas are having at the present time, both with the lawlessness of the saloon keepers and the crusaders against them, that the citizens of Lenawee county would desire nothing to do with prohibition.

So far, the prohibition laws have been a total failure. Saloons run wide open without paying license of any amount and the amount of drunkenness is in many instances more than doubled. So far no state has been able to elect men to office who could be made to carry out the law, and the only relief the people have had from the open selling and dispensing of liquor and beer by anyone who desires to do so, was at some special time when the crusaders were at work.

It makes no difference whether prohibition is right or wrong so far it has been a failure, and in the opinion of the HERALD never will be a success unless adopted by the whole country and the laws enforced by Uncle Sam's officials. To Lenawee county alone the course would be suicidal both to the business interests and general prosperity of the community. The conservative minded people of this county do not desire prohibition and lawlessness, but will insist on sobriety and proper obedience to all laws. It would be well for every person who has the interest of the county at heart to vote against local option at the coming election.

Corporation Ticket.

Last Tuesday the HERALD printed a republican corporation ticket and last evening an independent ticket was nominated as follows:

President—James Elliott.
Clerk—Don H. C. Bowen.
Treasurer—Jas. T. McKinney.
Assessor—Will J. Ingersoll.
Trustees—Henry Wagner, Will H. Hayden, B. P. Anderson.

It would seem that in case either ticket is elected the village will have an Elliott for president. It is understood that Mr. Heesen refused the nomination for president on both tickets.

THE CHURCHES.

Subject of morning sermon at the Presbyterian church next Sunday, "Why Men do not Accept Christ." Evening subject, "How to Live in the World."

Dr Ryan, of Ann Arbor, will be present at the quarterly meeting of the Methodist conference Saturday evening and will preach at the M. E. church Sunday evening.

Adjourned.

The administrator's sale of the A. P. Coddington farm was postponed till Saturday, March 9, at one o'clock p. m. at the same place. There is much interest in this sale and there will, no doubt be a good crowd at the adjournment.

To Stop a Cold.

After exposure or when you feel a cold coming on, take a dose of Foley's Honey and Tar. It never fails to stop a cold if taken in time. Take nothing else. J. J. Orr.

From Mrs. Colp.

Through the kindness of Mr. Russell, we are again allowed to print a very interesting letter from Mrs. Lucy Colp.

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Jan. 14th.

DEAR UNCLE:

January 6th we were at Curazao, a Dutch town of the West Indies and a commercial port for the whole world; a most restful place to see. The houses and streets are so clean that they give one the impression of having taken a bath each morning. The convicts of the jail are kept busy sweeping the streets, on which there never seems to be one particle of dirt. The prisoners wear shirt and trousers half blue, half white, with red suspenders—suspender rather, as it goes over one shoulder only. The Dutch colors are red, white and blue as well as the United States. We were at that town two days and left with regret.

From Curazao we went to Port Cabello, Venezuela. "Cabello" is a Spanish word meaning "hair." Columbus gave the name to the port because the water was so calm that he said the ships could be held in place by a hair. There we went to see our American counsel, Lieut. Ellsworth, from Cleveland, O., a very cordial and genial man, with whom we passed some pleasant hours. He and a charming niece from Cleveland, who is visiting him, went to the boat with us and remained until we were ready to start.

There is a revolution in Venezuela—quite a common thing—and at the next port we were not allowed to go ashore, although the captain obtained permission to anchor and discharge the cargo. Two guards were sent out to our ship who stayed until we left port, to be sure that no one went on the shore.

While we were lying there a poor fisherman, a Venezuelan, who was out with a gun, was shot by the soldiers who mistook him for a revolutionist. We had anticipated going to Caracas, the Paris of South America, and were disappointed at not being allowed to land. From Port Cabello to the English island of Trinidad at the mouth of the Orinoco river, we were crowded with Venezuelan families leaving their country until the revolution is quelled.

Yesterday, the 13th, we reached Trinidad and went ashore at the Port of Spain, an English town, with its streets shaded with tropical trees and parks filled with brilliant flowers, and a very beautiful hotel, the Queen's Park Hotel. There we found some American tourists. It is quite an up-to-date town, but the street cars are drawn by mules, however there is an electric car line connecting Port of Spain with another town a few miles away. This line was built by Americans from the United States. As the curious is more interesting to me than modern improvements, we took the horse car and visited Coolie town where live natives of Calcutta, who are brought to the island under a five years' contract to work the plantations. When the time has expired they are paid a stipulated sum and are sent back to Calcutta if they wish to go, or remain here. The women wear ornaments in the nose and ears with rings on fingers and toes, while men, women and children wear bracelets on wrists and ankles.

We passed a hospital for lepers which we were told has several hundred patients at present. It is surrounded by a high fence enclosing a large piece of ground.

The island of Trinidad, like that of Hayti, is mountainous. On this island are lakes of the pitch from which asphalt is made. They are worked exclusively by Americans who have a concession from the government. All of the pitch can be taken from these lakes—holes we would call them—and in a few hours they are again filled.

This is a perfect day. The ocean is so calm that not a ripple is to be seen on its surface and so blue that the horizon is scarcely visible. There are American, French and Spanish warships, ships of commerce and sail vessels all around, yet, to look over it all, only peace and rest are suggested. In an hour we start and our voyage will end ere the week does. As ever

Your niece,
LUCY HAIGHT-COLP.

THE SCHOOLS.

The North branch school is holding Washington's birthday exercises today.

Janitor Saul and the grip are having a tussel but the hustling janitor manages to keep his head up and keep on the go.

Miss Nyland is teaching the first primary room in the west branch school while Miss Corey is detained at home by sickness.

Little Anna Schreder got hurt the other day while trying to catch on a bob. It is rather risky work and children would do well to be more careful.

English Literature are going to take their final examination next week and study American Literature, Medieval History will leave that subject for Modern History.

Misses Moore and Thomas will receive life certificates on their college diplomas on Saturday of this week. The certificates are granted by the State board of education without examination.

The 7th and 8th grades rendered a very pleasant program yesterday for Washington's Birthday. The pupils had decorated the room very attractively with flags and blackboard drawings and the songs and recitations were all very good. About 30 invited guests were present.

And Yet He Could Write.

Among the public servants who are worried by foolish questions the superintendent of mails in the postoffice gets his full share. One of his visitors on a certain occasion was a man who said to the deputy who answered the call at the window:

"I am going out of town today and want to get a letter to my brother, who is on board the Majestic, and she is not due until Wednesday. I don't know where he will stay in New York or where he will go from here. Can you help me?"

"Certainly we can," said the clerk. "A mailboat goes to meet the steamer, and if you address your letter properly and put domestic postage on it it will be delivered all right."

"But how shall I address it—where shall I send it?"

"Address it 'John Smith, passenger on board incoming steamer Majestic, due in New York, Dec. 12.' That will reach him."

"No city? No nothing?"

"That's all—just as I told you."

The man thanked the clerk and went away, and came back a little later with an addressed letter in his hand.

"Say," he said to the clerk, "about that letter. I've addressed it and stamped it all right, but the man's name isn't John Smith. How about that?"—New York Tribune.

The Old Home Paper.

Noting the fact that many country bred men in the large cities take the local paper in their old home, the Philadelphia Record says: "The head of a large Market street wholesale business house, a man now advanced in years, has been a regular subscriber to one of the Bucks county papers for 50 years. 'He wouldn't give it up for anything,' said this man's son. 'He gets more real enjoyment from it than from anything he reads. A daily edition has been started within the last ten years, but he doesn't want that. He only gets the weekly edition, which prints gossip of a personal nature from the various towns throughout the county. He will pore over this by the hour, and his comments on the various items of news are often amusing. Scarcely a name is mentioned that he doesn't say, "Why, I used to go to school with his father," or "I once licked his Uncle Jim for tying my clothes up when we used to go swimming in the Neshaminy."'"

The Shipmaster's Cow.

A certain farmer is telling mean things about a Rockland shipmaster. "The shipmaster," he says, "bought a cow of a man down my way; good critter—nothin the matter with her. But it seems the captain's wife one day thought the milk tasted funny and segested that p'raps she'd been eatin spruce boughs; said the milk tasted like spruce. And what does he do but go out in the pasture to watch the cow, to see what she did eat. The cow was layin down, chewin her cud, and he went erlong and run his finger in her mouth to see what she was eatin. Then he was mad. He put a rope on the cow and started off with her. He met a neighbor, who says, 'Where are you goin with the cow?' 'Goin to take her back to the feller that sold her to me. He's cheated me, and I won't stand it.'

"The man wanted to know what was the matter, and he went on to tell about it and says: 'She wasn't eatin boughs, but she was chewin gum; that's what's the matter with the milk and makes it taste like spruce. And,' he says, 'that ain't all. She's so addicted to the habit that she's worn all her teeth out. She ain't got an upper tooth in her head. Back she goes, quick.'

"Of course, the man told him that it was all nonsense—that cows never had no upper teeth. But he didn't believe a word of it and went on and had a tarnal row with the man that sold him the cow. Guess he was never satisfied about it or knew what a darned fool he was makin of himself."—Rockland (Me.) Opinion.

A Writer's Aspirations.

They were looking through the library. "If you had the divine gift what would you rather write?" asked the romantic young woman.

"Checks," replied the sordid young man.—Philadelphia Record.

Called to an Easier Field.

We wonder if any men with white skins are called to the ministry after the fashion described by Booker T. Washington in his autobiography. He says: "A colored man in Alabama, one hot day in July, while he was at work in a cotton field, suddenly stopped and, looking toward the skies said, "O lawd, de cotton am so grassy, de work am so hard, and de sun am not so hot dat I b'lieve dis darky am called to preach!" —Chicago Standard.

Learning the merits of Doan's Ointment,

Plenty of proof that Doan's Ointment will cure piles, eczema, or any itchiness of the skin.

Read the testimony of a Battle Creek citizen.

Mr. A. G. Ayers, book binder, of 197 West Main street, Battle Creek, says: "My hands became so sore from eczema that it was with difficulty I could bend my fingers. The skin cracked open, large scabs formed and in addition to the spots being tender they itched intolerably. I tried everything I could hear about or get hold of to stop the trouble but I was unable to do so until I procured Doan's Ointment. I had heard it spoken about by several people but as I thought it would act like all other preparations which I had tried I waited some time until I was compelled from the condition of my hands to do something. Doan's Ointment cured me. Up to date and this is some months after I stopped the treatment. I have had no indication of any return."

What Frightened Him.

While crossing the isthmus of Panama by rail some years ago the conductor obligingly stopped the train for Mr. Campion to gather some beautiful crimson flowers by the roadside. It was midday and intensely hot. In his "On the Frontier" Mr. Campion tells a peculiar story of this flower picking experience.

I refused offers of assistance and went alone to pluck the flowers. After gathering a handful I noticed a large bed of plants knee high and of delicate form and a beautiful green shade. I walked to them, broke off a fine spray and placed it with the flowers.

To my amazement I saw that I had gathered a withered, shriveled, brownish weed. I threw it away, carefully selected a large, bright green plant and plucked it. Again I had in my hand a bunch of withered leaves.

It flashed through my mind that a sudden attack of Panama fever, which was very prevalent and much talked of, had struck me delirious.

I went "off my head" from fright. In a panic I threw the flowers down and was about to run to the train. I looked around. Nothing seemed strange. I felt my pulse. All right. I was in a perspiration, but the heat would have made a lizard perspire.

Then I noticed that the plants where I stood seemed shrunken and wilted. Carefully I put my finger on a fresh branch. Instantly the leaves shrank and began to change color. I had been frightened by sensitive plants.

A Bit of Red Tape.

The absurdities of officialism have perhaps never been better illustrated than by the incident in the career of Lord Shaftesbury which the author of "Collections and Recollections" relates:

One winter evening in 1867 he was sitting in his library in Grosvenor square, when the servant told him that there was a poor man waiting to see him. The man was shown in and proved to be a laborer from Clerkenwell and one of the innumerable recipients of the old earl's charity.

He said, "My lord, you have been very good to me, and I have come to tell you what I have heard." It appeared that at the public house which he frequented he had overheard some Irishmen of desperate character plotting to blow up Clerkenwell prison. He gave Lord Shaftesbury the information, to be used as he thought best, but made it a condition that his name should not be divulged. If it were, his life would not be worth an hour's purchase.

Lord Shaftesbury pledged himself to secrecy, ordered his carriage and drove instantly to Whitehall. The authorities there refused, on grounds of official practice, to entertain the information without the name and address of the informant. These, of course, could not be given. The warning was rejected, and the jail was blown up.—Youth's Companion.

Her Wedding "Tower."

An accommodation train on a distant railroad was dragging along, when a long, lean and sallow woman, in what appeared to be subdued bridal finery, leaned across the aisle of the car and said seriously to a lady sitting opposite her:

"Dear me! It's a kind of a solemn thing to be travelin with two husbands, now, ain't it?"

"I do not know what you mean," replied the lady.

"Oh, mebbe not. Well, you see, my first husband died 'bout a year ago an was buried over in Patrick county, an last week I was married ag'in, an me an my second husband have been over in Patrick county on a little weddin tower, an I thought I'd kind of like to have my first husband buried in the graveyard nigh where I'm goin to live now, an my second husband was willin, so we tuk my first husband up, an he's in the baggage car along with our other things. My second husband is settin out on the platform takin a smoke, an I been settin here thinkin how solemn it is to go on a weddin tower with two husbands. It's a turrible solemn piece of bizness when you come to think of it."—Laurence Lee in Lippincott's Magazine.

STRATAGEMS IN WAR

THEY ARE NOT CONFINED TO THE FIELD OF BATTLE.

Devices That Are Resorted to by the People When Provisions Are Exhausted—How It Feels When Things Begin to Give Out.

Dr. S. A. Steele, in a lecture at Chautauqua on the privation endured by the people in some parts of the south during the war between the states, gave this interesting account of how it felt when things began to give out:

"Things began to get very scarce at our house. They had not been any too plentiful in some lines up to this time, and now they began to give out entirely. Have you ever been where things gave out? I have. If you have been there, you will never forget it.

"Coffee gave out. Instead of Rio we had rye; instead of Mocha we had okra; instead of Java we had potato. We had all sorts—beans and goober peas and oats and everything you ever heard tell of and a great deal besides—but the potato was the favorite brand. We took sweet potato, cut it into little bits, dried them, parched them, ground them up and made Confederate coffee. Blessed was the man or woman who didn't drink coffee in those days. I don't want to interfere with people's business here, but you will please say nothing to me about your modern substitutes for coffee. I don't want any.

"Sugar gave out. It seemed to me that the abominable Yankees had got around every place where there was any sweetening, and we had to have sorghum—'long sweetening,' we called it. Not only did luxuries give out, but medicines gave out. We couldn't get any unless we would go inside the Union lines, and we couldn't go in there and come out without taking the oath of allegiance to the United States. We wouldn't take the oath, so we had to take our own medicine.

"Shoes gave out. My father paid the presiding elder $50 for a pair of shoes with the distinct understanding that he wouldn't ask any questions about it. Whatever that meant it meant something. A friend living inside of the Union lines got some shoes for my mother and a pair for my sister—they forgot me—and when my sister went about the house with her store shoes creaking over the floor I said I wouldn't wear Yankee shoes nohow. We had some pretty good shoemakers among the negroes, but we didn't have leather and didn't know how to make it, but we got a hide and got the hair off, and after soaking it a long time while it was soft we cut out and made a lot of brogans and never wore them. We couldn't. I went barefooted all that winter of 1863. I tried to get a little comfort thinking the southern people were the Valley Forge people, but all you want of Valley Forge is about 20 minutes on a cold day. It takes all the inspiration out of you.

"Clothes gave out. Fortunately my mother had a large supply of quilts. She cut up one and made me a suit of clothes. It didn't fit just exactly like a tailor's cut, but it was comfortable, and my father looked real nice in his overcoat.

"One day my mother said to my father: 'The salt is out. What are you going to do about it?' Now, that was the most serious announcement that I heard made anywhere about our house during the whole war, except, of course, the announcement at the close of it that we were whipped. It got us into more danger than anything else that happened.

"You have seen that little saltcellar on the table and haven't thought anything about it, but I want to tell you it is one of the cornerstones of civilization.

"We wouldn't trade with the Yankees because that would be helping the government, so we took the big old blocks of the smokehouse and the bench on which we had salted the meat down in better days, which were more or less saturated with salt, split them up, put them into a pot, boiled and simmered down and got a little salt. That gave out. Then we dug up the earth under and around the smokehouse, put it in a hopper, poured water on it, dripped it and got a little brine to dip the chicken or squirrel in before cooking. As long as it lasted it was all right, but it gave out, and my mother asked what we were to do.

"My father said, 'Well, I reckon we will have to starve,' for the spirit that was in our people was the spirit that was willing to starve if it was necessary to win success.

"But my mother said, 'We won't starve.' She and I soon after went to the United States provost marshal's to get a permit to take out some salt.

"He said, 'Madam, you just step into the other room and take the oath of allegiance, and we will give you a permit to take out some salt.'

"She indignantly refused and said, 'Give me a pass to go home.'

"He said: 'You step into the other room and take the oath, and we will give you a pass to go home. You ought not to have come here unless you were willing to take the oath.'

"My mother stamped her foot in rage and gave him a terrific piece of her mind.

"She lived and died declaring she never took the oath. She said the room was full of people, she heard a man repeat something, but she finally clinched her teeth and said nothing. After that was all over we got the salt and returned home."

Even Buds Grow Old.

According to Professor Adam Sedgwick, says The Youth's Companion, there is reason to believe that buds share in the growing old of the parent plant. He illustrates his meaning in this way: Suppose the average life of an individual plant—say a tree—to be 100 years, then a bud removed when the parent plant is 50 years old will also be virtually 50 years of age, and if transplanted by grafting will be able to live on the graft only 50 years more.

Enough For a Swallow.

"You must keep your mouth shut when you are in the water," said the nurse, as she gave Bessie a bath. "If you don't, you'll swallow some of it."

"What if I do?" asked Bessie innocently. "There's plenty more in the pipes, isn't there?"—Exchange.

A Missionary Antidote.

A great cloud of murky Mersey fog enveloped Liverpool harbor and the passengers on the tiny tender could scarcely see the shape of the great liner close beside them which was just weighing anchor for Bombay. On the quarter deck of the steamship were 50 missionaries of both sexes bound outward on a mission to convert the heathen. They were singing a favorite gospel hymn and as the sound of their voices floated across the water one of the passengers on the tender, a manufacturer from Birmingham, suddenly burst into tears.

"Isn't that a noble, an inspiring, almost a 'arrowing sight?" he exclaimed, dropping a tear and an h at the same time. "I wouldn't 'ave missed seeing them noble creatures going out to meet their fate in the field of foreign missions—not for £5 note, I wouldn't."

"Have you any relatives among them?" asked another passenger sympathetically.

"Oh, no; no relatives," wailed the man from Birmingham. "But we are all brethren in religion, and the sight of their departure touched me deeply. I shall pray night and morning that their ship may have a safe passage."

"But if you're not related to any of them I don't quite see why you're so anxious," said a flippant young man. "Missionaries sail for India almost any day."

"Yes," replied the man from Birmingham, assuming a more business-like tone, "but it isn't every day in the week that I've got such an interest in a ship's cargo. I'd be pleased to have you know, young man, that in the hold of that ship is a consignment of 5,000 idols which I have just shipped to one of the native princes."—Exchange.

Where We Meet Russia.

In Bering strait Russia and America shake hands. Big Diomede island and Little Diomede stand side by side, the former Russia's outpost, the other our own. A little strip of narrow sea lies between the two, and so clear is the air on a fair day that it seems as if from one island you could easily reach across a hand to the other. North, across Kotzebue sound, is Point Hope, a barren sand spit, extending far into the Arctic sea. It is the home of a tribe of Eskimos, who go to the mission school and church and learn to sing hymns, to speak a little English and to use soap.

Women are Like Flowers. Healthy and strong they blossom and bloom. Sickly, they wither and die. Every woman ought to look well and feel well. It's her right and duty, but she might as well try to put out a fire with oil as to be healthy and attractive with disease corroding the organs that make her a woman. Upon their health depends her health. If there is inflammation or weakening drains or suffering at the monthly period, attend to it at once. Don't delay. You're one step nearer the grave every day you put it off. Women can stand a great deal, but they cannot live forever with disease dragging at the most delicate and vital organs in their body. You may have been deceived in so-called cures. We don't see how you could help it—there is so much worthless stuff on the market. But you won't be disappointed in Bradfield's Female Regulator. We believe it is the one medicine on earth for womanly ills. There is as much difference between it and other so-called remedies as there is between right and wrong. Bradfield's Female Regulator soothes the pain, stops the drains, promotes regularity, strengthens, purifies and cleanses. It does all this quickly and easily and naturally. It is for women alone to decide whether they will be healthy or sick. Bradfield's Regulator lies at hand. $1 per bottle at drug store.

THE GRIP EPIDEMIC.

The Disease More Prevalent than Ever and Quite as Fatal. The Best Treatment.

The grip has surprised the doctors and health authorities this season by its rapid spread and by some novel symptoms. While it spares nobody it is proving especially dangerous to middle aged and elderly persons. In many cases either a fatal onset of pneumonia, or a complete breakdown of health and strength, is apt to follow an attack of grip.

The wise course for all is prevention By wearing a Benson's Porous Plaster on the chest and back you protect the lungs from cold and chill and (with ordinary care) you are safe from grip.

For those who are already suffering from grip, or from the usual winter coughs and colds, Benson's Plasters are a sure and speedy relief and cure. Highly medicinal and scientific.

Refuse imitations and substitutes. Only the genuine are effective. Examine when you buy. Seabury & Johnson, Manufacturing Chemists, New York.

A STRENGTHENER

Vinol Promptly Overcomes Weakness.

DEBILITY OFTEN PRECEDES COMPLETE COLLAPSE.

We Want Every One to Know How to Get Strong.

OUR VINOL IS A STRENGTH CREATOR.

The saddest sight on earth is a broken-down man or woman.

We see such people every day right here in our city.

It is pitiful to see a man that should be in his prime dragging himself through life dejected, discouraged and broken down, due to some premature weakness. It does not make any difference whether this weakness is the result of dissipation, indiscreet living or disease; it can be overcome.

We have known of many very serious cases of debility quickly overcome by Vinol.

Vinol is a scientific rebuilder and strength creator. It contains the active curative principles of Cod-Liver Oil in a highly concentrated form. The benefit that can be derived from the use of these properties is so well known that there is no need for us to enter into that subject.

We could quote many instances where Vinol has done good; as an example, here is one coming from Jane S. Fenfren, a prominent member of the W. C. T. U., and a resident of Suncook, N. H. She writes:

"I was run down, was in bed from May to March. Was so nervous and sickly that every one thought I was in a most precarious condition. My weight was reduced to 120 pounds. I was advised to take Vinol, which I did, and am now very much better, and am able to be about again. As a rebuilder and a strength giver nothing can equal it. Vinol is a God-blessing to anybody."

Because Vinol is delicious, and because it does contain these much-sought-after medicinal properties we endorse it, and we unhesitatingly proclaim that it is better than any preparation of cod-liver oil or tonic rebuilder we have ever had in our store.

WANT GRAND JURY

Grand Rapids People Want Water Scandal Investigated

COUNCIL DEFERRED ACTION

Until a Special Session—The City Attorney Indicted at Chicago and Admitted to Bail—He Left for Grand Rapids Monday Night.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 26.—A resolution was offered by Ald. Gallmeyer in the council Monday night petitioning the circuit judges to call a grand jury to investigate the water works scandal. Ald. Doran and Forbes thought such a petition would be premature, and Forbes said that while he favored an investigation, he thought that to take such action might be doing a gross injustice "to a poor fellow" who has his deepest sympathy. Both urged that action on the resolution be deferred until to-night. An adjourned session of the council will be held then, and it is expected that Mr. Salsbury will appear before the council and make a statement.

Petitions to the court were circulated yesterday, asking the circuit court to summon a grand jury, and they were numerously signed. Public sentiment is strongly in favor of it, and the jury will no doubt be called. It will not only investigate the water scandal, but will go into several other things, including the scandals in the campaign last fall. The political sensation will hit some high up heads.

The text of the bill amending the board of public works act, introduced in the legislature last week, and which caused all the trouble when the referendum clause was attached, was produced Monday. It gives the council extensive powers to enter into contracts, transferring these powers from the board of public works; also permits the purchase of the hydraulic company's plant. D. R. Crowe of the hydraulic company was one of the fathers of the bill, though he does not appear publicly in the transaction. The scheme seems to have been to buy the hydraulic company at a fancy price and then to go to Lake Michigan.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Under a capias issued on a new indictment by the Cook county grand jury, Lant K. Salsbury was formally placed under arrest yesterday on a charge of embezzling $50,000, placed in escrow some two weeks ago as part of an alleged fund to be used in securing a $4,000,000 contract for the construction of municipal water works a. Grand Rapids, where he is city attorney. He was released on bonds of $5,000, after having been in custody only a few hours in the office of Chief Deputy Sheriff Kunz, and never getting closer to the county jail than within sight of its frowning portals as he approached the criminal court building on the way from the quarters in which he had been technically a prisoner for more than 40 hours.

It was announced by Salsbury's attorneys in Chicago that he had left last night on a late train for his home in Grand Rapids. Before Salsbury had departed a statement was issued by the attorney of Guy C. Barton, the Omaha millionaire contractor, from from the $50,000 had been obtained. In this statement Attorney L. K. Crofoot, the Omaha representative of Mr. Barton, refers to the $50,000 as a portion of a fund needed in the water works deal "for legal and promotional expenses."

He asserts that "under the circumstances Mr. Barton would personally much prefer not to be instrumental in continuing the prosecution of Mr. Salsbury, but that the case is in the hands of State's Attorney Deneen and will have to take the usual course."

War with Spain: Widows, etc.—Anna M. Ennis, mother, Emory, $12. Original—Joseph W. Clark, Kalamazoo, $6. Additional—John S. Curtis, Buchanan, $8. Restoration and reissue—George C. Raymond, dead, Grass Lake, $50. Renewal and increase—James Smith, Byron, $12. Increase—John Chambers, Otsego, $24; Samuel Davis, Smyrna, $17; Wesley Reeder, Sebewa, $8; Charles Fenner, Shelby, $12; Nicholas Lake, Howell, $17. Original, widows, etc.—Martha E. Raymond, Grass Lake, $12. Renewal—Anna Maria Mulheim, Miner Lake, $8. War with spain, original—Ralph A. Farr, Plainwell, $6.

Declared Unconstitutional.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 26.—The Wayne circuit court judges handed down a decision Monday morning, declaring that the recent act of the legislature with respect to the board of works is entirely unconstitutional. The court held that the legislature had no power to place the appointment of a superintendent for a definite term in the hands of the governor under the guise of a provisional appointment. The decision was written by Judge Frazer and signed by all the six judges.

Sues for $10,000 Damages.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 26.—Geo. Cantwell and wife have each brought suit against the city for $10,000 damages for injuries received from falling down an unguarded embankment on Washington street. About a year ago he got judgment against the Brennan boiler works for injuries received in a pulley, but the supreme court overruled the judgment.

An Epitaph.

In the churchyard of Leigh, near Bolton, will be found a tombstone bearing the following amazing sentence: "A virtuous woman is 5s. to her husband." The explanation seems to be that space prevented "a crown" being cut in full, and the stonemason argued that a crown equals 5s.—Notes and Queries.

IN CONGRESS.

The Spooner Philippine Amendment Considered in the Senate.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The real struggle for insular legislation at this session began Monday in the senate. The army appropriation bill was under consideration and the Philippine amendment was reached. In addition the Cuba amendment was offered and the general debate on these propositions began.

Sharp opposition to the Philippine amendment developed on the democratic side, beginning with a point of order which the senate overruled, and followed with speeches by Senators Tillman, Rawlins, Caffery, Bacon and Morgan. The amendment was defended by its author, Mr. Spooner, who pointed out the necessity for the legislation.

Senators Vest, Hoar, Bacon and Rawlins offered amendments tending to limit the powers conferred by the Spooner amendment. Senator Morgan made an extended speech, severely criticising the proposed legislation. An evening session was held to allow time to continue the debate.

The house Monday jettisoned the authorizations for two battleships and two cruisers, which were in the naval appropriation bill as it passed that body. The senate had rejected the proposition, and against the appeals of the house conferees the house yesterday voted by a big majority to agree to the senate amendment striking out the authorizations. Chairman Cannon of the appropriations committee contributed largely to this result by a vigorous speech in favor of the senate amendment. A partial conference report on the naval bill was agreed to and the bill went back to conference. The house also agreed to the conference report on the bill to create a commission of five to adjudicate the claims of United States citizens against Spain assumed by the United States under the treaty of Paris. Just before adjournment, Mr. Tawney, chairman of the St. Louis exposition committee, asked unanimous consent to disagree to the senate amendments to the exposition bill, but Mr. Shepherd (Tex.) objected.

At 6:10 the house adjourned.

BOERS ATTACK RICHMOND.

But British Are Reported Closing On Gen. De Wet.

Cape Town, Feb. 26.—The Boers are attacking the village of Richmond, in the central part of Cape Colony, and reinforcements have been dispatched from Hanover Road.

De Aar, Cape Colony, Feb. 26.—Gen. De Wet, accompanied by Mr. Steyn, recrossed the railroad north of Kranskuil and south of Orange River station yesterday.

The Orange river rose five feet Sunday evening. A heavy rain is still falling and it is believed to be impossible for the Boers to cross the stream. They are being closely followed by Col. Thorneycroft, who left here Sunday by rail. Several other columns are converging on Gen. De Wet.

Cape Town, Feb. 26.—It is reported here that Commandant General Botha, with 2,000 Boers, has broken away from Gen. French's pursuit in the direction of Komatopoort.

Experiencing Difficulty.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The friends of the Louisiana purchase exposition bill are considerably exercised over the parliamentary difficulties still in the way of the final passage of that measure. The appropriation of $5,000,000 went through because of the pledge in the last year's sundry civil bill that this amount would be given. But since the senate has added a provision for the Charleston, S. C., exposition which had not previously been pledged, there is considerable doubt whether the friends of the bill can get the recognition of the speaker. They are hoping, however, to get the matter into conference, but the few days remaining gives added cause for anxiety.

Charged With Extortion.

Washington, Feb. 26.—Senator Chandler has reported favorably from the senate committee on privileges and elections resolutions to pay Hiram R. Revels, a United States senator from Mississippi 30 years ago, $4,847 in salary, and Joseph C. Abbott, a United States senator from North Carolina 32 years ago, $6,548 in salary. They came in during reconstruction days to fill vacancies and were paid from the time they took their seats. The resolutions give them pay for the full term.

Bubonic Plague.

Cape Town, Feb. 26.—Thus far 31 cases of bubonic plague have been reported in Cape Town, including six Europeans. There have been six deaths from the disease, one European being among the number. It is expected that several cases still under treatment will prove fatal.

Caused a Disturbance.

Vigo, Spain, Feb. 26.—The importation of a force of Portuguese workmen to take the places of Spanish strikers here led to a disturbance. The Portuguese were stoned and shots were fired. Gendarmes were compelled to intervene to restore order.

No Venture About It.

"Is this your first venture in matrimony?" the preacher asked while the bridegroom was out in the vestibule giving certain instructions to the best man, who was also his head clerk.

"My dear Mr. Goodleigh," she replied, almost blushing, "this isn't a venture at all. He has given me deeds to more than $60,000 worth of property already."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Inherited.

"Pa," said little Willie, looking up from his arithmetic, "what is a linear foot?"

"Why—er—a linear foot," replied pa, temporizing, "why, it's one that's hereditary. Didn't you never hear tell of a linear descendant?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

BLISS AND THE SENATE

Controversy Over the Appointment of Tax Commissioner the Center of Interest.

GOVERNOR'S VIEW OF THE MATTER

Legislature Swamped with Bills as Usual, Only More So—Anti-Trust Legislation.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 26.—Every one is speculating on what the outcome of the controversy between Governor Bliss and the senate over the appointment of state tax commisioner will be. As the matter now stands there is but one legally qualified commissioner, unless the contention of Robert Oakman that he was legally confirmed two years ago and cannot be superceded for four years to come is correct, and very few persons take any stock in it. Under the act creating the commission, a commissioner appointed to fill a vacancy during the recess of the legislature serves only until the convening of the next regular session of the legislature. This express provision effectually disposed of Commisioner Freeman even though Governor Bliss had not taken the extra precaution to withdraw his nomination from the senate when the latter threatened to confirm him in place of Charles D. Lawton. The rejection of the latter, therefore, leaves James C. McLaughlin, who was confirmed several weeks ago, the "whole thing," as it were.

How the Governor Views the Case.

Governor Bliss is not borrowing any trouble or worrying over the situation, although he would, of course, have matters run a little smoother in this connection. He entertains the old fashioned notion that when he took oath to discharge the duties of chief executive of the state to the best of his ability, it was his own ability that was to govern, and not that of the senate. He appears to believe that the discretion which the constitution and the laws contemplate he shall exercise in the matter of making appointments is his own discretion, and not of the senate or any other body or individual. Feeling thus, and having conscientiously discharged his duty as he saw it, he very naturally objected when a majority of the senate waited upon him through a committee and demanded that he withdraw his nominations and substitute others proposed by the lawmakers. He simply informed the committee that he conceived it to be his duty to make the nominations and he had done so conscientiously, conceding to them the right to confirm or reject these nominations as they saw fit, but denying any right on the part of the senators or any one else to dictate the nominations.

Regarded as a Big Joke.

That is the present status of the controversy, and there is thus far no indication that the governor will yield. The talk that the senate rejected Lawton because they believed that one of the old commissioners should be retained is regarded generally hereabouts as the most stupendous joke of the session, it being pretty well understood that the regard for the old commissioners was of mushroom growth never having existed in fact until some excuse for rejecting Lawton was being looked for. It is no sure thing that either Freeman or either of the other commissioners could muster enough votes to secure his confirmation should the governor send in his name now.

The Avalanche of Bills.

The situation regarding bills is simply appalling, all records having been broken. The grand total of bills introduced when the time limit expired last Wednesday at midnight was 1,963, or 186 more than found their way to the clerks' desks two years ago. The senate showed a total of 566 as against 541 two years ago, and the house 1,357 as against 1,196. This is not at all reassuring to those legislators who hoped to make the present session not less than thirty days shorter than that of 1899, but nothing daunted, they propose to work even harder than ever to bring about this much-desired result. These gentlemen comprise the leaders in the two houses, and the best feature of their programme is that it provides for the killing of bills by the score, not to say hundred.

Little Show for the Primary.

At the beginning of the session there was some signs that quite a start would this year be made toward abolishing party caucuses in Michigan, but these signs died out one by one, until the best that can be hoped for is that the experiment will be tried in the city of Grand Rapids this spring. The bill passed at first applied to all of Kent county, but the senate amended it so as to apply to the city alone, and, realizing that this was the best that could be had, the house concurred in the amendment. Representative Burns of Grand Rapids, who introduced this bill, has another designed to reform convention methods. It provides for a vive voce vote in all nominating conventions, thus doing away with the secret ballot and all of its eccentricities. The purpose of the bill, as will readily be seen, is to insure the casting of the vote of a delegation just as intended by the constituency which elected such delegation. Representative Colby, whose primary election bill affecting Wayne county was so ruthlessly slaughtered in the senate, has loaded down the house calendar with similar bills applying to almost every county in the state.

Disposition of Liquor Tax Money.

A bill in which will be of more than ordinary interest to every township and city in the state was introduced by Representative Totten of Kalkaska, who proposes to change the method of disposing of liquor tax money. Under the present law this money is divided equally between the town where the saloon is located and the county. The amendment proposes that all such money remaining in the county treasury at the close of the year, and not required for the expense of prosecuting criminal cases, shall be paid back to the township or city whence it came.

Down on the Quick Marriage Industry.

The opponents of the so-called "quick marriage" industry as carried on at St. Joseph during the past two years have not only introduced a bill providing that five days shall elapse between the time of procuring a marriage license and the solemnization of the marriage, but have also had introduced a measure which requires that county clerks shall not issue a license unless at least one of the contracting parties has resided in the county one month or more. The indications are that this matter is going to precipitate a very pretty fight. The opponents of these bills are preparing for the fray, having already compiled statistics which show that the persons married at St. Joseph since it became a world famed Gretna Green were not yearlings, their average age having been nearly 28 years. They also contend that the movement to amend the law is being fostered by the county clerk of Cook county, Ills., who mourns the loss of fees which would be his were the industry to be abolished in Michigan. Furthermore they argue that it is in the interests of morality and social purity to make marriage easy instead of difficult. A hearing will be had on the bills shortly, when prominent clergymen of most of the Protestant denominations will speak in their favor.

Nevins' Anti-Trust Ideas.

As for a number of previous sessions an anti-trust bill is one of the important measures introduced last week. Its sponsor is Representative Nevins of Allegan, who would make it unlawful for any firm or corporation to effect a combination of any sort. The bill provides that no certificate of stock or other evidence of interest in such a trust or combination shall have any standing in any of the courts of the state, preposition being to outlaw the entire affair. The bill makes it the duty of the secretary of state immediately the proposed act becomes operative to correspond with each corporation doing business in the state and inquire whether such corporation has merged any portion of its business or business in that of any other corporation. Refusal to reply to such communication is made cause for the immediate revocation of the charter of the offending company, while corporations admitting such trust relations will be given ninety days in which to void them, otherwise their charters are to be revoked. The bill embodies heavy penalties for violations of its provisions.

Bill Hits the Wrong Man.

Representative LaFlamboy, who is seeking to increase the revenues of the state by providing for a tax of 3 per cent. on royalties, is likely to encounter a serious obstacle to one of his measures. One bill provides for a tax on royalties received for rights in mineral lands of any description, while the other taxes royalties from patent rights, the object, of course, being to require the person to whom the royalties are paid to contribute to the public revenues. An upper peninsula correspondent, however, calls attention to the fact that all mining leases expressly provide that the person or corporation to whom the lease is executed must pay all taxes of whatever description levied in connection with the property. It is argued, therefore, that the mining royalty bill would simply increase the taxes of the operator and not hit the owner of the fee at all.

Make a Note of This.

The senate has passed a bill which it will be well for all voters of the state, except those residing in the city of Detroit or in cities having special acts controlling the matter, to take careful note of. It changes the time of registration from two days to two weeks previous to election day, the object being to, as far as possible, prevent the colonization of voters a few days prior to election. The two weeks' time will afford an opportunity to look up all suspected cases and ascertain if they actually are entitled to a vote in the precinct where they are registered.

Two Important Measures.

Two unusually important measures were introduced by Representative Dingley. One is a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution under which the plan of Attorney General Oren for the separation of state and county taxes can be enacted into a law, and the other proposes a constitutional amendment providing for the regulation of the salaries of state officers by the legislature. Both of these amendments will be submitted at the fall election next year if the resolutions pass. It is generally conceded that the salaries of the elective state officers are woefully meager, and it is figured that they can be increased only in some such manner as indicated. The idea of paying the secretary of state, for instance, $800 per year is just a trifle mortifying to a citizen of a great state like Michigan.

Saloonists Favor This Bill.

It develops that the Kelly bill providing for the prohibition of the serving of free lunches in places where intoxicating liquors are sold is likely to be advocated not only by those people who believe that its passage would lessen the consumption of such liquors by removing one excuse for frequenting saloons, but also by many saloonkeepers who find the custom very expensive and won't abandon it unless their competitors are compelled to do so. So long as one saloonkeeper sets out an attractive lunch all the others in the community are compelled to do so in order to hold their custom.

Humphrey Is After the Tanglefoot.

Senator Humphrey appears to be taking the lead in the matter of anti-liquor legislation this year. He has bills requiring druggists to make sworn reports to the prosecuting attorneys of all sales of liquors and prohibiting the maintenance of any opening between a saloon and any other place of business, thus requiring solid walls to enclose a place where liquor is sold. He has also introduced a joint resolution providing for the submission to the people of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor in Michigan. Although Representative Gordon has introduced the bill which created so much excitement two years ago to permit saloons to be kept open on certain legal holidays, it is said that the saloonkeepers are not urging the passage of the bill, believing that if they can prevent restrictive measures from passing they will be in good luck without attempting to procure any concessions.

JAMES V. BARRY.

Arrived Safe.

Punta Delgada, Azores, Feb. 26.—The Portuguese steamer Peninsular, from Lisbon Jan. 29, via St. Michaels Feb. 2, for New York, which was reported spoken Feb. 11 in latitude 38, longitude 55, disabled with a broken shaft, arrived here safe Monday, in tow. She has on board 200 passengers.

Dropped Dead.

Guthrie, O. T., Feb. 26.—Maj. I. N. F. Crozier, a merchant of Cushing, O. T., and vice-president of the Bank of Indian Territory, dropped dead in a barber shop Monday. He served with the Canadian forces in the Louis Riel rebellion and was given a badge for special bravery.

Application for Bail.

New York, Feb. 26.—Albert C. Wall and Marshall Van Winkle, counsel for Thomas G. Barker, who shot Rev. John Keller at Arlington, appeared before Judge Blair in Jersey City Monday and made application to have their client admitted to bail. Judge Blair postponed action until to-day.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, Feb. 26.—Monday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $145,065,795; gold, $78,065,014.

Reported Better.

New York, Feb. 26.—Ex-Senator Wm. M. Evarts, who has been in a particularly feeble condition the last few days, was reported at his residence Monday to be much better.

WILL LEAVE CHINA

Minister Conger Coming Home on a Six Months' Vacation.

EVERYTHING IS ARRANGED

Li Hung Chang Says Court Will Return to Pekin When Foreign Troops Evacuate the City and That No Further Difficulty Is Possible.

Pekin, Feb. 26.—Monday morning Mr. Conger turned over the affairs of the United States legation to Mr. W. W. Rockhill, particularly the conduct of the negotiations with the Chinese plenipotentiaries, and he will shortly return to the United States for a six months' vacation.

Americans here feel that this arrangement is a confirmation of the report that everything is practically settled, for Mr. Conger felt it his duty to finish the negotiations satisfactorily. The Pei Ho river will open next week and then the exodus of diplomats, correspondents and others will begin.

Li Hung Chang says he expects that the imperial court will return to Pekin as soon as notification is given that the troops of the allies are evacuating the capitol. He also asserts that no further difficulty in the negotiations is possible.

Some old residents here think there may be difficulty in connection with the ceremonial of receiving the ministers of the powers by the court, but the ministers themselves do not anticipate any.

The German and Russian barracks for the guards of their respective legations will be ready in a month.

Mr. Rockhill yesterday attended for the first time a meeting of the foreign envoys in an independent capacity. No business of importance was transacted.

London, Feb. 26.—The Reuter Telegram Co. has received the following from Shanghai, dated Feb. 26:

"Prince Tuan, Prince Chwang Lu and Gen. Tung Fu Hsiang are still taking refuge at Ning-Hia-Fu, province of Kan-Su. Two native Christians from Kul-Hua-Cheng, in the northern part of the province of Shan Si, report the massacre of 20 male and female missionaries and nine children, who have been missing since October."

Washington, Feb. 26.—Edward T. Williams, claiming to be a native of Ohio and recently interpreter at Shanghai, has been appointed Chinese secretary to the United States legation at Pekin.

Berlin, Feb. 26.—The Lokal Anzeiger has the following from Pekin, dated Feb. 25: "The execution of Chih Siu, former grand secretary, and Hsu Cheng Fu, son of the notorious Hsu Tung, to-day by the hangman will occur upon the same place where last summer two pro-civilization mandarins were beheaded. The spot is within the German zone.

"All the other officials whose lives are demanded by the ministers of the powers will be beheaded in Sian-Fu.

"The opinion largely prevails in Pekin that Prince Tuan's punishment will necessitate the choosing of another heir to the throne than his son."

Charged With Extortion.

New York, Feb. 26.—Etienne Boyer, a former detective sergeant; Louis Levene, a lawyer; Julius Boyer and Louis Gampel were held in $1,500 bail each by Magistrate Hogan Monday on the charges of extortion. The arrests were the result of a complaint made to Magistrate Hogan by Edward H. Alcott, a saloonkeeper. The police allege that Etienne Boyer and Louis Levene were at the head of what was known as the "New York Anti-Vice society." Julius Boyer is the son of Etienne and is charged with being implicated with his father in demanding extortion money, and Gampel is a barber who, it is said, was used as a go-between. The specific complaint of Saloonkeeper Alcott was that the men had extorted $100 from him by threatening to have his license revoked on the ground that he kept a disorderly place. In the district attorney's office it was said that many other saloonkeepers beside Alcott had undoubtedly been victimized. It was thought the number would reach 20.

American Victorious.

Newcastle on-Tyne, Feb. 26.—"Jack" O'Brien of Philadelphia defeated Harry Smith of Birmingham, Eng., in the third round of a 15-round boxing contest here last evening for a purse of £200. The referee stopped the fight before the third round was completed, Smith at that time being helpless and without any chance of winning. O'Brien weighed in at 152 pounds and Smith at 158. From the outset the Philadelphian showed greater cleverness, aggressiveness and power. He quickly wore down his opponent. O'Brien challenged all English heavyweights, and "Jack" Scales will accept.

New Commissioner Took Hold.

New York, Feb. 26.—Commissioner of Police Murphy took hold of his duties Monday, and after making an address to all commanding officers down to and including captains, he issued a proclamation delegating to former Chief Devery the command of the forces and all the powers he formerly enjoyed with the exception of those touching the appointment or transfers of men.

Danger of Trouble Passed.

London, Feb. 26.—"The danger of trouble in the Balkans seems to have passed," says the Vienna correspondent of the Times, "but it has required the plainest possible speaking on the part of Russia, supported by both Austria and Great Britain, to prevent an outbreak in Macedonia. There is reason to believe also that Prince Ferdinand has been admonished from an exalted quarter."

Both of the sons of Thomas Jefferson were members of congress from Virginia while he was president. One of these was Thomas Mann Randolph and the other John W. Eppes.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Senate Did Quick Work in Confirming an Appointment.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 26.—The senate met for 25 minutes Monday night. Gov. Bliss sent in the name of Will A. Graves of Manistee as colonel and aide-de-camp on his staff. Without leaving the senate chamber, Senator Atwood, chairman of the committee on executive business, got the members together, framed a report in favor of confirming, and presented the report. It was adopted in open session by 25 to 0.

The senate adopted a concurrent resolution to adjourn on Wednesday until next Tuesday evening at 9 o'clock. The purpose is to give legislators an opportunity to attend the Grindley club banquet on Wednesday night, and the republican state convention at Grand Rapids Thursday; also to have the legislature remain adjourned over Monday on account of the inauguration of President McKinley at Washington, which some of the members of the legislature are planning to attend.

When the resolution reached the house, Rep. McKay moved that it be tabled, and the motion was adopted. Members of the house would like to have the adjournment end on Monday night.

The house, in committee of the whole, agreed to Rep. Alward's bill to prohibit the writing of tontine diamond contracts. Violators of the proposed law are to be deemed guilty of committing a misdemeanor, and on conviction they are to be sent to prison for a period not to exceed two years, or to jail not longer than one year, or to be fined from $100 to $1,000, at the discretion of the court. Such an offender may be both fined and imprisoned.

Senate bill No. 157, authorizing the village of Lake Linden to borrow $7,500 for public improvements was passed.

Rep. Mason's resolution to have a committee appointed to investigate charges of extravagance made against the game warden's department, was made a special order for Tuesday.

Another Carnegie Library.

Ishpeming, Mich., Feb. 26.—At a special meeting of the city council Agent W. H. Johnston of the Oliver Iron Co. advised the council that it was possible for the city to get a donation of a public library building, provided the city will agree to contribute 10 per cent of its cost annually for its maintenance. It is presumed that the offer comes from Andrew Carnegie, although Mr. Johnston is not making known the names of the contributors at this time. The council will consider the proposition at its regular meeting next Wednesday evening.

Took Morphine.

Ypsilanti, Mich., Feb. 26.—Charles W. Osborne, of Michigan City, Ind., who disappeared about 10 days ago, committed suicide Saturday night in a room at the Hawkins house by taking morphine. Another package labelled strychnine was found in the room. He was an engineer on the Michigan Central railroad and brooded over the fact that the company had made an undesirable change in his run. He registered here Friday night as "C. J. Smith, city," and left, returning the next morning, registering from Chicago. He was found Sunday night.

Fighting the Boers.

Niles, Mich., Feb. 26.—Orville Mattiford, a young man who disappeared mysteriously from this city a few months ago, has written his parents from South Africa, where he is fighting the Boers, having enlisted with the English.

Emulated Mrs. Nation.

Millville, N. J., Feb. 26.—Mrs. Emma Hughes of this city created great excitement in South Millville Sunday night by emulating Mrs. Nation in smashing a saloon which her husband frequented. Armed with a hatchet, she entered the place and smashed every bottle of beer, after which she took her husband by the arm and hustled him home. The temperance people indorse the action of Mrs. Hughes, and a reform movement will be started.

Will Continue Papal Delegate.

Rome, Feb. 26.—It is understood that Archbishop Martinelli, the papal delegate in the United States, after he has been created a cardinal at the consistory to be held at the end of March, will remain for some time papal delegate in the United States and will later be replaced by Mgr. Falconi, the papal delegate in Canada.

Association of Ideas.

The 3-year-old son of a flat dweller, who had heard his father complain occasionally because the janitor was drunk and "in no condition to attend to his work," went to the flat above his own last week and rang the bell. When Mrs. Blank answered it, the young man said:

"Please, Mrs. Blank, can't your little girl come down and play with me?"

"Not today," said Mrs. Blank; "she is in no condition to play."

"What's the matter?" asked the boy anxiously. "Is she drunk?"—New York Sun

Pan-American Outlook.

The Big Exposition Promises to Exceed All Expectations.

Exhibits From All the States and Countries of the Western Hemisphere—More Than a Score of Great Buildings to Shelter the Displays.

No feature of the Pan-American Exposition will be of more importance than the exhibit of mines and metallurgy. The building to be devoted to these exhibits is one of a group of three magnificent structures, arranged in the form of a horseshoe, at the western boundary of the Esplanade. The Mines building is the southernmost of the group and is connected with the Horticultural building by one of the conservatories which flank the Horticultural building on the north and south. It is 150 feet square, and at each of the four corners it has a square tower 90 feet high. The eastern facade, looking upon the Esplanade, shows three high recessed arches between the towers, forming an open loggia elaborately and beautifully ornamented with plastic detail and decorated in brilliant colors. From this loggia are the main entrances to the building. There are also entrances in the corner towers. The ornamental detail is very picturesque and interesting. The design is by Peabody & Stearns of Boston.

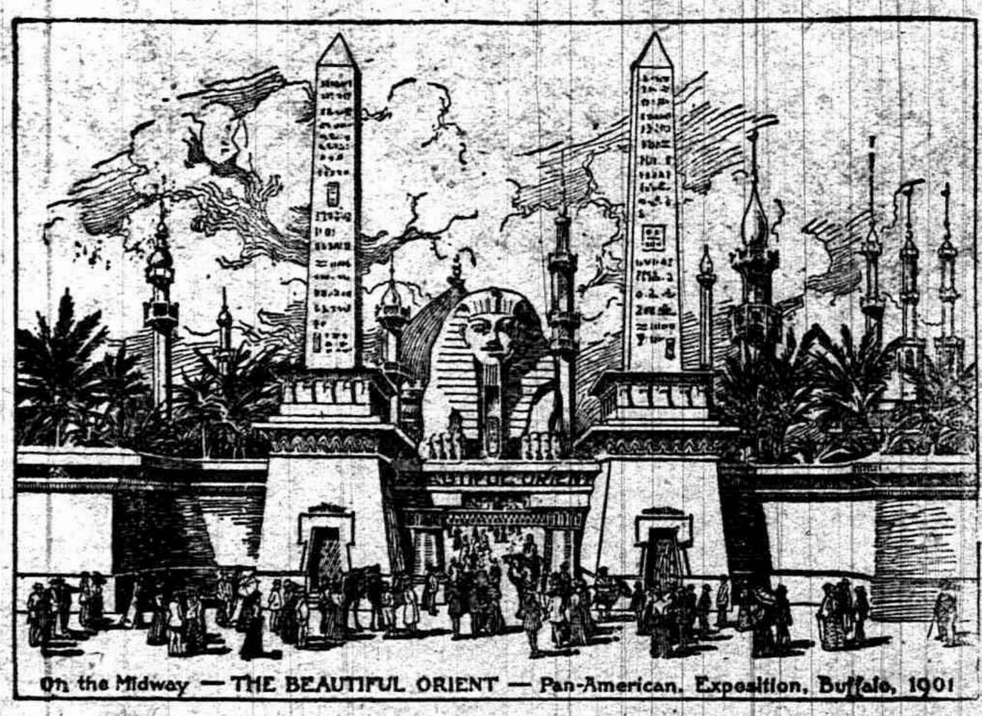
Never was the science of metallurgy or skill in mining more highly developed than in the present day. The golden decorations of King Solomon's Temple are estimated to have cost $250,000,000. Ever since the account in the book of Genesis of finding gold along the river Pison, a stream which flows from the Garden of Eden, the seeking for and mining of gold have been among the most fascinating industries. The production of gold throughout the world during the present century has steadily increased. The production in the United States in 1899 amounted to $72,500,000, while that of the whole world is given at $315,000,000, thus giving the United States the first position in production of gold of any country. In the matter of copper the United States produces 223,000 tons annually, or more than one-half of the world's output. The United States and Mexico are the two greatest silver producing countries. In other mining productions, the commercial value of which is considerably greater than that of the precious metals, the countries of Pan-America also lead the world. During the last year the coal output of the United States reached the enormous amount of 225,000,000 tons. This, as compared with Great Britain's output of about 200,000,000 tons and Germany's 100,000,000 tons, makes the question of the future production of coal, considering the rapid increase in America and the fact that European production has reached its limit and is already declining, especially noteworthy at this time. The Canadian output of coal and iron is an item of great importance. The near proximity of iron and coking coal and the proper fluxes gives Canada a great advantage in the manufacture of iron and steel. The advancement of these industries in North America during the past decade has been phenomenal, the total production of the United States last year amounting in value to $413,758,414 and of nonmetallic substances to a total of $601,872,631.

Nearly $3,000,000 will be required to construct and equip the wonderful Midway at the Pan-American Exposition. The greatest care has been taken to prevent any approach toward the "fake" show, and the visitor may rest assured that he will not be subjected to fraud or extortion so long as he remains upon the Exposition grounds. It is difficult to single out any attraction in this section as more prominent or worthy than another, for all have their special merit and novelty.

The subject of the accompanying illustration, the Beautiful Orient, will represent life as it existed in the East before the advent of the modern tourist. Gaston Akoun, director of this concession, is arranging to have native representative characters to convey proper impressions of oriental customs and manners of living. He will have plenty of room in which to display the different salient features that would appeal in the strongest terms to people accustomed to our western civilization. A holy Mecca will be the meeting place of tired and worn pilgrims who will constantly arrive, make their offerings in the various mosques or religious temples and disperse. Eight streets will diverge from this objective point, each representing a distinctive local section of the orient. A street in Constantinople will be thoroughly Turkish, even to the vagabond dogs. Morocco will be represented by a street which will illustrate the life and habits of the Moors. Algerian life will receive attention, and a street will be borrowed from Algiers for the purpose. Typical illustrations in a like manner will be taken from Egypt, Tunis, Persia, Tripoli and Turkey in Asia. While looking through these sections visitors could easily imagine themselves in the midst of the ancient city, the counterpart of which they are visiting.



On the Midway — THE BEAUTIFUL ORIENT — Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, 1901

A Bedouin Arab encampment will lend variety, and Sahara desert nomads will live in their interesting characteristic way. Natives from all countries will live on the grounds with their camels and different domestic oriental animals, cabins, tents and huts. Restaurants, teahouses, shops and fruit stands for the sale of oriental goods of great variety will be provided. The Beautiful Orient is under the same management as the Streets of Cairo, which was so popular at the World's fair, though it will be three times as large. About 300 orientals will be employed in different ways with this attraction, a conglomerate eastern city with distinct local features—a history in a nutshell.

Within 500 miles of Buffalo are the homes of more than 40,000,000 people, which is more than the entire population of the country at the time of the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. It is about twice the number living within the same distance of Chicago. The great Falls of Niagara constitute an important attraction to tourists who expect to visit the Exposition, as they are only half an hour's ride from the Exposition grounds, and excellent railway accommodations are provided between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls. Near at hand also is the great summer school in the grove on Lake Chautauqua's shores, known as the Chautauqua Assembly.

Buffalo has a population of nearly 400,000, and this is the first great Exposition held in the east since the Centennial, 25 years ago. For the several reasons here noted it is expected that the attendance to the Pan-American Exposition will be very large and that the results will be very gratifying in the promotion of trade among all the states and nations of the western hemisphere and in the establishment of more cordial relations among all the people of the western world.

MARK BENN[illegible]

The Athenian of Today.

The Athenians dine late the year round and, whenever the weather will permit, in the open air. As the heated season advances the dinner hour is set later and later until in August 9:30 or 10 becomes the common thing. Fancy going to the theater after that! Yet the open air performances are liberally patronized, and they do not begin, of course, until after dinner. The legend "Curtain rises promptly at 9" is a snare and a delusion, as many a foreigner has found, to his extreme annoyance.

The out of door dining and the sky roofed theaters are so typically Greek that they serve as a link between modern and classical times. The old Greek, as everybody knows, was an outdoor man, his house serving as little more than a sleeping place and storeroom. The Athenian of today dines in a garden, on his terrace or in a park. If he is too poor to possess any of these accessories, he sets his table upon the sidewalk. Many of the cheap restaurants appropriate the walks for dining rooms. One is often compelled when taking an evening stroll to dodge in and out among dozens of tables covered with reasonably clean linen and lighted by means of candles, whose flames are protected from the wind by means of glass globes.—Scribner's.

Doctors' "Cat Naps."

The "cat naps" indulged in by the late Dr. William Pepper constituted a standing joke among his intimate friends. He had the faculty of going to sleep at will and waking up when he willed. He would sometimes when under a mental strain keep a roomful of patients waiting while he slept soundly in his private office for three minutes or five minutes, or as long as he wished. Then he would resume his duties, greatly refreshed.

Another prominent physician has a queer habit of napping, although he only takes one a day and that directly after luncheon, which with him is a hearty meal. He repairs to his office and throws himself in a chair at a point where the polished wood floor is not covered by the rug. He holds a bunch of keys between the forefinger and thumb of his right hand, which is allowed to hang loosely over the arm of the chair. Then he dozes off, but it is never more than a doze, for the moment his fingers relax the keys drop to the bare floor, acting as an alarm clock. It is scarcely a nap—just a brief relaxation of the mental and bodily faculties. The doctor calls it his siesta, and if he misses it he says he doesn't feel quite himself for the rest of the day.—Philadelphia Record.

Charley's Aunt.

Mr. Penley, otherwise Charley's Aunt, told the following: "A military man, a friend of Mr. Penley, took his daughter to the stalls and, having a busy and tiring day, went calmly to sleep in his easy seat during the interval between the curtain raiser and 'Charley's Aunt.' The daughter sympathetically allowed him to remain in peace until the curtain went up for the commencement of the play of the evening; then she gently nudged him in the ribs and whispered 'Charley's Aunt!' to remind him of his whereabouts.

"The gentleman still slept on, and his daughter tried again. She gave her father an extra push and murmured, with emphasis: 'Papa, do wake up! "Charley's Aunt!"'

"This time it was effectual, for the colonel leaped to his feet and cried, 'Bless me, so it is!' and began to shake hands furiously with a demure old lady who happened to be passing along the stalls in front of him on the way to her allotted seat. 'Bless me, so it is! How do you do, madam? And how is Charley?'"—London Answers.

Russell and the Solicitor.

It is said that once when the late Lord Russell, then Sir Charles, was on circuit he became so indignant with every one in general and his solicitor client in particular that he seized his large and heavy brief and smote the solicitor on the head with it. The solicitor indignantly collected his papers and hurried out of court, murmuring that he would never brief Sir Charles again.

Some time afterward a shipping magnate came to the same solicitor with a big case. "Brief Russell," he said. The solicitor said he was sorry, but it was impossible, as Russell had never apologized. "Then give me my papers," said the shipowner, "and I'll go to some one who will."

Eventually the unhappy man of law, not wishing to lose his best client, had to apologize to Sir Charles Russell for leaving the court when assaulted.—Pearson's Weekly.

"So On."

Lady Dorothy Nevill is one of the wittiest women in London society. Some time ago there was a rich and ambitious man in society who went in for entertaining largely and especially for making his parties interesting and representative. A marked falling off began to take place after awhile in the quality of his guests. Lady Dorothy, commenting on this deterioration, said, "Once we used to meet Browning and Whistler and Henry James and so on there; but now we only meet—so on."—Chambers' Journal.

A FAMOUS BANK NOTE.

The One That Cruikshank Drew and the Crowds It Drew.

One day about the year 1818 George Cruikshank was passing Newgate on his way to the exchange, when, seeing a crowd collected, he went forward to learn what was the matter and saw that it was the execution of several men and women. He was horrified at the spectacle and on inquiring learned that the woman was being hanged for passing counterfeit £1 notes. He learned also that this punishment was quite a common thing, even though the poor wretches often sinned in ignorance, being the dupes of men who sent them to buy some trifle and return the change to them. Wrung with pity and with shame, Cruikshank went home and immediately, under the inspiration of his feeling, sketched a grotesque caricature of a bank note. He called it a bank restriction note—not to be imitated. He represented on it a place of execution, with spaces about filled in with halters and manacles, a figure of Britannia devouring her children and transport ships bearing the lucky or unlucky ones who had escaped death to Van Diemen's Land or Australia, while in place of the well known signature of Abraham Newland was that of "J. Ketch."

He had just finished this, when his publisher Hone entered, and seeing it, begged to have it for publication. So Cruikshank etched it and gave it to Hone, who exhibited it for sale in his window with startling effect. Crowds quickly began to gather and purchased so eagerly that the issue was soon exhausted.

Cruikshank was kept hard at work making more etchings, the crowds grew so great that the street was blocked, and the mayor had to send soldiers to clear it. Hone realized over £700 in a few days.—Good Words.

BRITISH BANK CLERKS.

Sumptuary Laws Trying on Those With Slim Purses.

Bank clerks generally look so sleek and comfortable and are almost invariably so well groomed that their grievances rarely receive patient hearing.

One who was recently dismissed for the terrible crime of smoking a pipe in a city cafe during one of the hours sacred to what is called by city courtesy lunch writes, giving a list of restrictions which he declares are absurd.

No clerk is allowed to smoke a pipe in the streets during banking hours or at lunch.

The average clerk's salary is not so very high, but nevertheless he must wear a silk hat and cane to the office, dressed as one with double the salary. Wearing a cap to business is not to be thought of, as it is an unpardonable offense in the eyes of the bank officials.

The salary of the average bank clerk ranges from about 38 shillings a week, but in many banks the salary is much lower and the chances of promotion very small.

A clerk's money is greatly diminished by his having to subscribe to numerous funds, such as a "sports" fund, to keep the cricket or football grounds in order, which he himself is never able to see.

Saturday is no holiday for him, as he does not leave the office on those days until about 4 or 5 o'clock.

It must not be supposed that the day's work of a bank clerk ends with the closing of the bank to customers. In fact, it only begins at that time.—London Express.

The Man With a Paper.

The man with a paper during the morning and evening hours in New York city is legion. There are about 400,000 of him. A man without a newspaper on an elevated train, in a street car, aboard a ferryboat or in a railway coach, morning or evening going to or from business is conspicuous.

He is a rare bird indeed, and looks as though he were wrecked and floating alone on a sea of tossing papers. He is sure to feel lonesome and almost outside the pale of civilization, for his fellow men, with their faces to their regular diet of daily news, hardly notice him.

If you have time to spare a moment from your morning paper, just look about you, in car or boat, observe and listen. You will see every mortal man—with often hundreds in view at one time—religiously bowing at the altar of the news in silence that is only broken by a continuous rustle as the scores of leaves are turned. There is no more devout newspaper reading community than is found in the metropolis.—New York Herald.

Guarding Her Teeth.

It is easy to misunderstand and easy to be misunderstood, and sometimes, happily, it is easy to give and to accept an explanation.

"I did think I would never come to see you again," said a cousin of the prominent society woman who had come to the country to visit her and was about to start homeward. "It's kind of you to ask me, of course, but I remember that when I was at your house in the city, two years ago, you did not seem glad to see me. You were kind and hospitable, of course, but I remember you did not smile once during the entire two weeks of my stay."

To her astonishment, her city cousin burst into a fit of laughter.

"Maria," she said, "just before you came I had the misfortune to break the porcelain 'crown' from one of my new front teeth, and as my dentist was out of town on his vacation I had to wait for his return. I didn't dare to smile when any one was looking at me, for fear of showing the ghastly metallic 'back' to which the porcelain had been attached. It was a strain, Maria, but I was equal to it, and I did not want to have to explain."

And her smile, now without a mechanical flaw, re-enforced the renewed invitation.—Youth's Companion.

Animals That Bloom.

Anemones, sponges, the sea cucumbers and certain other growths which bloom and apparently behave in all respects like plants are really animals.

The petals of the anemone, resembling those of a chrysanthemum, are really tentacles to catch food and put it into the hollow tube which forms the stomach, where it is digested. The sea cucumber has a flattened body. It occasionally moves at a snail's pace over the mud or sand, digging its petals, or arms, into the sludge for food, to obtain which it swallows a fair proportion of mud. It has power to sting and so keeps away its enemies.

The sea lily so exactly resembles the common lily that it is difficult to realize that it is an animal and belongs to the starfish family. It has a stalk two feet long, with a disk for a body. The tentacles close round the disk, which has a mouth, and completes the deceptive likeness. They are the oldest form of animal life on earth, and their fossils are called "stone lilies."

These creatures were believed to be plants and many people still refuse to believe otherwise.

Emerson's Last Lecture.

In his "Eccentricities of Genius" Major Pond tells the pathetic story of Ralph Waldo Emerson's last lecture, delivered in the Old South church in Boston for the fund to save that building from demolition:

"As he began reading his lecture the audience was very attentive. After a few moments he lost his place, and his granddaughter, sitting in the front row of seats, gently stepped toward him and reminded him that he was lecturing. He saw at once that he was wandering, and, with the most charming, characteristic, apologetic bow, he resumed his place, an incident that seemed to affect the audience more than anything else that could possibly have occurred. A few moments later he took a piece of manuscript in his hand and, turning around with it, laid it on a side table. Just then one of the audience said to me (I think it was Mrs. Livermore or Mr. Howe), 'Please have the audience pass right out,' and, rushing up to Mr. Emerson, said, 'Thank you so much for that delightful lecture;' then, turning around, waved the audience to go out.

"He probably had been speaking about 15 minutes. The audience passed out, many of them in tears. It was one of the most pathetic sights I ever witnessed."

My Captive

By Joseph A. Altsheler

The plot is laid in Revolutionary days and the three important characters are an American cavalryman, a beautiful English girl and a most intelligent horse. The young man makes the girl a prisoner of war. From intense hate of her captor the feelings of the heroine change by gradual stages to that of loyal love. The feeling extends to the horse and is reciprocated by both man and beast. The story is charmingly written.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

The Farmers' Union, of Lenawee county protests against the passage of an act by the legislature of the state of Michigan, requiring a license to be taken out by all hunters and fishermen, as such a law would be in the interest of organized clubs and unjust to the farmers and people of Michigan, inasmuch as it prevents their shooting anything upon their own farms without first securing such a license. Therefore, they urge all farm organizations to petition their senator and representative to oppose the passage of such a message.

Mrs. Josephine H. Hall, of this city, grand chief of the Rathbone Sisters, had a distinguished honor forced upon her last week at Tecumseh, when the temple of that order was instituted there. Mrs. Hall and Miss Rose Chaloner instituted the temple which started in with a membership of 73, making it one of the largest ever instituted in the state. It was named the Josephine H Hall temple in honor of our worthy and talented townslady, and Hudson bows with pride to her sister city in grateful appreciation of the splendid compliment.—Hudson Gazette.

Lenawee republicans met in county convention to name delegates to the spring State Convention at Grand Rapids. Prof. Mr. W. Hensel was renominated for school commissioner. B. P Anderson and F. J. The Monday Club meeting at Mrs. Gillespie's yesterday afternoon was a decided success. The entire program as announced was carried out with the exception of one paper. The sleighing was fine and the weather too was favorable to a large attendance. Mr. Haight and Mrs. Hicks constituted themselves a committee on transportation and two sleighloads of club folks filled the Gillespie parlors quite comfortably. After the program the guests were bountifully served with refreshments by their hostesses and returned to their homes quite thankful for the club's out-of-town membership which is this winter giving them a series of delightful afternoons.

LITERARY NOTES.

Fiction readers will turn first, in the March Century, to the opening pages of a new story by Irving Bacheller, author of the record-breaking "Eben Holden." The title is "D'ri and I," the general theme is American border life at the time of the War of 1812, and the leading characters are Col. Raymon Bell, U. S. A., a Southerner, and Darius, a typical Yankee.

* * *

The leading article in McClure's Magazine for March will be a character study of Edward VII, written by George W. Smalley, the American correspondent of the London Times, and illustrated by a remarkable collection of photographs.

* * *

The March Modern Culture opens with a charmingly written and beautifully illustrated article on the "Social and Domestic Life of the Modern Greek," by B. F. Fisher, in which the author compares the character, customs and achievements of the Greeks with those of the Italians of our day, and draws a picture much to the advantage of the former.

GRAND BANQUET

Given by the Odd Fellows and Rebekahs to Friends and Neighboring Lodges.

One of the most elegant and bountiful banquets the opera house has ever seen was given by the Odd Fellows assisted by the Daughters of Rebekah last Friday evening to visiting lodges of their order from neighboring towns. The stage was handsomely decorated with the national colors in commemoration of Washington's birthday. There was a profusion of palms and other greenery for background, with the Tecumseh orchestra in the foreground, flanked on either side by a live goat well tethered and at a safe distance from the bass viol.

All the chairs were removed from below and replaced by tables arranged transversely from corner to corner of the room forming an immense star at which three hundred and sixty covers were laid. The table arrangement was designed by Mr. Tansley and decorated by Mr. Henderson with palms, daffodils and other potted plants. From gallery to dome festoons of pink and green bunting, the Rebekah colors, showed whose skillful hands had prepared the bountiful feast.

Delegations from Adrian, Blissfield and Clinton lodges with a few invited guests from Tecumseh filled the galleries. G. H. Tansley, as master of ceremonies, invited all the members of visiting lodges below to find seats at the tables, guests from Tecumseh following, until all were seated at the board, when P. C. Snell, as chaplain, said grace and Deputy Grand Master C. E. Williamson gave the address of welcome, in which he referred to their order as the oldest fraternal organization and said "their deeds are not all of the past, we are making history every day. Occasions like this have done much to promote good feeling among us." The opening address had the ring of genuine hospitality, was heard in every part of the hall and put the guests in good spirits to receive the stirring music of the orchestra, which played never better. Miss Bessie Bates was pianist and all through the supper hour the banquet was enlivened with good music and national airs. The serving of so many people with so little apparent trouble was quite wonderful and reflects great credit on the committee and the waitresses.

Mr. Tansley, financial secretary of the order, took charge of the program in a very happy manner with a few well chosen remarks introduced Prof. Kellogg as toastmaster of the evening. Mr. Kellogg paid a glowing tribute to the history of the order, and referring to the three links of Friendship, Love and Truth, called upon Dr. Tuttle, of Clinton, to respond to the toast "Friendship."

Dr. Tuttle performed the task very pleasingly. He said he was dismayed to find himself down for a toast but one's condition might always be worse and when reflected that he might have been assigned to one of the other links he was reconciled to speaking on "Friendship" for he knew nothing about "Love" and "Truth" and he were strangers. The doctor may have told the truth about himself in regard to ignorance of his subject, but he certainly was a great success as an after dinner speaker.

Master Ross Ferguson gave a declamation on Washington and W. H. Dolf, of Blissfield, responded to the next link "Love." He said it was fraternal love that the middle link represented and gave a fine illustration of his subject in a description of the battle of Santiago where enemies in war were friends and brother and ready to help each other as soon as the cannon ceased firing. His response was embellished with poetry and polished with rhetoric and made a good impression.

Miss Laverne Askin gave a solo "Goodbye to Summer" by Paoli Fosti. She was accompanied on the piano by Miss Ella Fowler and sang in a fine contralto voice that penetrated to the remotest corner of the large banquet hall. Arthur Oram, of Adrian, responded to a toast on "Truth." He gave many examples of his subject, commencing with Washington and cited a long list of women, who had been true to their convictions, Victoria, Francis Williard, Harriet Beecher Stowe and Mrs Nation.

Miss Anna Ferguson recited in her very best manner, "Elder Jones' Chestnut Mare" and responded to an enthusiastic encore. Miss Josie O'Niel, of Adrian, gave a response to "Queen Esther," which was one of the brightest things of the evening. Comparing Rebekahs of old with the present day daughters, Miss O'Niel said the 20th Century had produced a woman whose name would be handed down on the pages of history with the immortal George and his hatchet, beside whom we would place Mrs. Carrie Nation and her little hatchet.

Miss Dora Mallroy, of Blissfield, responded to "The Oddfellow" in a finely rendered recitation, proposing a health to the Oddfellow and another to the Rebekah who rules him. Miss Metta McKinney sang, Miss Fowler accompaning on the piano. The song was well received and enthusiastically encored, Miss McKinney kindly responding.

"The Temple of Oddfellowship" was a toast responded to by Mr. Downing, of Blissfield. The carefully prepared speech was somewhat marred by guests whom the lateness of the hour compelled to leave the table, but those were few and the majority of the banqueters heard a fine discourse on the progress of science and the progress of the order which the speaker had said had grown from five to seventy-five thousand. It was a speech well worth listening to hear and it was unfortunate that it was interrupted by retiring guests. The last number on the program was by Mr Dolf, of Blissfield, who answered affirmatively the question "Shall we Meet Again" in some charming verses.

The two societies and their guests have to thank the committee, of which Wm. Askin was chairman and Messrs. Tansley and Blesing, the other members, for one of the finest spreads they have ever enjoyed. Mrs. P. C. Snell had charge of the committee from the Rebekah lodge, who made the affair a thoroughly enjoyable one for all who were fortunate enough to attend.

Will Be Published in This Paper

It is a story of Revolutionary times and recounts the thrilling adventures of a brave young American cavalryman who took as his prisoner a venturesome and handsome English girl, the daughter of a British officer.

Their enforced association as prisoner and captor under trying circumstances showed to each the worth of the other, and in the end both became prisoners each to the other. The tale is most cleverly told and is full of life.

KNOWING HOW PAYS.

The Moral of this Old, Old Anecdote will Save a Heap of Trouble and a Pile of Money.

Something had gone wrong with some simple part of a stationary engine and the stoker could not fix it. After spending a day or two on it, he was forced to ask the aid of a more competent workman. He failed also and someone suggested the employment of a local celebrity, a sort of tinker at any mechanical job. There is generally one in every locality. He gave two or three raps with his hammer and touched up a rod or two when the pounding or whatever ailed the machine ceased. When asked to make out his bill, it read as follows: Fixing engine, $ 50; knowing how ,$10; total, $10.50.

This anecdote clearly demonstrates that it pays to know how. Engineer J. J. Jeffries, of the Royal Cycle Works, at Marshall, Mich., residing in that city at No. 141 S. Marshall St., tells in the following of his experience with the little conqueror. It will pay you to know how he got rid of a troublesome companion. He says:

"My kidneys troubled me more or less for years and finally became so bad that I was compelled to give up locomotive engineering on account of the jarring of the train and seek employment as a stationary engineer. When the attacks of kidney complaint occurred I could not rest or lie comfortably in any position and often in the mornings after a restless night, I was more tired and worn out than when I went to bed. When the attacks were at their height I was unable to stoop or lift anything and. despite the use of every remedy that came to my notice, preparations recommended to me by my acquaintances, numerous plasters of all kinds worn day and night, I was unsuccessful in procuring anything to help me until I tried Doan's Kidney Pills. The first box helped me. I steadily improved while taking the second and I stopped the treatment when I had finished the third as I considered there was no more necessity for continuing the remedy."

He Certainly Was a Fiend.

The stage was rolling along the canyon trail when suddenly the horses reared back on their haunches as a lone highwayman with a Winchester appeared on the scene.

"Step out of the hearse, gentlemen, and hands up!" he ordered.

One by one they climbed out, with elevated hands.

The highwayman relieved the party and several times was forced to remind one nervous little man to keep his hand from his pocket.

"What's the matter with you?" he finally roared. "You make another move like that, and I'll pump the slugs in you!"

"Please let me," pleaded the little man as his hand again slid toward his pocket.

"Please let you!" roared the desperado. "Please let you perforate me? You're imposing on my generosity, sonny. Look out! Look out! Keep your mit away from that pocket, or by the Eternal"—

"But it won't hurt you!" protested the little man. "It won't hurt you at all! Stand just as you are now and keep your rifle leveled. There! That's it!"

And while the highwayman was recovering from his astonishment the little man had flashed his kodak and snapped the button.—Indianapolis Sun.

Love and Thrift.

The late Professor Shuttleworth of London was particularly fond of telling how, when he once acted as locum tenens in Devonshire, he had to proclaim the banns of marriage of a young yokel and a village maid. A fortnight later the young swain called at the professor's lodgings.

"You put up the banns for me," he said.

"Yes, I remember," replied Mr. Shuttleworth.

"Well," inquired the yokel, "has it got to go on?"

"What do you mean?" asked the professor. "Are you tired of the girl?"

"No," was the unexpected answer, "but I like her sister better."

"Oh, if the original girl doesn't mind, you can marry her sister."

"But should I have to be 'called' again?"

"Certainly, that's necessary," answered Mr. Shuttleworth.

"But should I have to pay again?"

"Yes, it would cost you three and sixpence."

"Oh, would it?" rejoined the yokel after reflection. "Then I'll let it remain as it is." And he did.—London Telegraph.

They Eat Themselves.

From various causes, such as anger and fear, many animals eat their own flesh. Rats, when caught in a trap by the leg, will gnaw off the captured member, and mice in captivity have been known to bite off their tails. But there are some creatures which go much further and actually eat parts of themselves if left for too long a period without food.

A hyena belonging to a menagerie was kept by the proprietor without food in order to tame it. One morning he was horrified to find that the ferocious creature had actually eaten part of its own leg.

An eagle in the zoo a few years ago was noted for the fact that it would now and then pick pieces of flesh out of its own legs and eat them.

Certain caterpillars and toads devour their cast off skin. This may be due to fear, but it looks like economy.

There is just a trace of this characteristic in human beings. Children when in rage sometimes bite their own hands and arms, although it must be admitted that they desist when it begins to hurt.

One Way of Getting Even.

"There is a fellow in our office who is a chronic borrower," said a young man employed in a large Market street establishment recently. "He got into nearly everybody in the place before we all made up our minds to stop lending. He has owed me $2 for nearly a year, but I'm nearly square. although he has never paid me a penny of it. That sounds queer; but it is the truth. I'll tell you how I've worked it.

"Every once in awhile one of the fellows will say, 'I'm going to make So-and-so give me what he owes me next pay day or know the reason why.' That's my chance, and I casually remark, 'I'll bet you a quarter you don't get it.' Usually the fellow takes me up, and when pay day comes he loses his bet, for So-and-so never pays. In small bets of quarters and dimes, luncheons and cigars I have nearly got back the amount I originally loaned to the chronic borrower."—Philadelphia

It's Easy To Take

Thin, pale, anæmic girls need a fatty food to enrich their blood, give color to their cheeks and restore their health and strength. It is safe to say that they nearly all reject fat with their food.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

is exactly what they require; it not only gives them the important element (cod-liver oil) in a palatable and easily digested form, but also the hypophosphites which are so valuable in nervous disorders that usually accompany anæmia.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is a fatty food that is more easily digested than any other form of fat. A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health. You can get it in this way.

We have known persons to gain a pound a day while taking it.

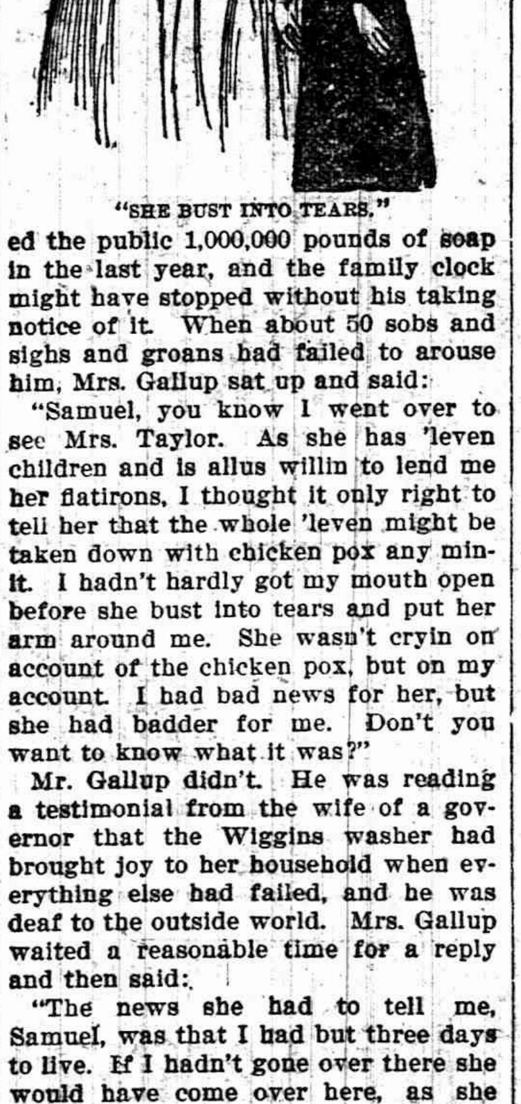
MRS. GALLUP MOURNS

A SIGN WARNS HER THAT HER TIME HAS ABOUT COME.

So Between Sobs She Has a Little One Sided Talk With Her Devoted Husband About the House and the Things That Are In It.

[Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.]

When supper had been concluded, Mr. Gallup sat down to read a pamphlet descriptive of the Wiggins washing machine, and Mrs. Gallup flung a shawl over her head and ran over to a neighbor's to give warning that the chicken pox had broken out in a town only ten miles away and would probably sweep the whole country before it could be staid. It was hardly a quarter of an hour before she returned, and her first action was to pitch forward on the lounge and roll over three times before she got settled down into a comfortable position to do some weeping. Her conduct ought to have attracted immediate attention, but it didn't. Mr. Gallup was reading a declaration from the sole inventor and proprietor that the Wiggins washing machine had saved the public 1,000,000 pounds of soap in the last year, and the family clock might have stopped without his taking notice of it. When about 50 sobs and sighs and groans had failed to arouse him, Mrs. Gallup sat up and said:



"SHE BUST INTO TEARS."

"Samuel, you know I went over to see Mrs. Taylor. As she has 'leven children and is allus willin to lend me her flatirons, I thought it only right to tell her that the whole 'leven might be taken down with chicken pox any minit. I hadn't hardly got my mouth open before she bust into tears and put her arm around me. She wasn't cryin on account of the chicken pox, but on my account. I had bad news for her, but she had badder for me. Don't you want to know what it was?"

Mr. Gallup didn't. He was reading a testimonial from the wife of a governor that the Wiggins washer had brought joy to her household when everything else had failed, and he was deaf to the outside world. Mrs. Gallup waited a reasonable time for a reply and then said:

"The news she had to tell me, Samuel, was that I had but three days to live. If I hadn't gone over there she would have come over here, as she thought I ought to be makin ready. That's Mrs. Taylor all over. She's allus doin sunthin for other folks. You must remember when Saray Ann Spooner died? And you remember when Uncle Goodrich was hooked to death by a cow? Waal, Mrs. Taylor had warnin three days ahead that both of 'em was goin to perish. Her clock suddenly stopped with a whir-r-r-r, and both hands p'inted in a certain direction. At 5 o'clock this afternoon the clock stopped ag'in and the hands p'inted right toward our house. That meant me. In three days from now I'll be sailin around among the clouds."

Mr. Gallup didn't dispute it. He was reading that the Wiggins washer would do the work of ten women at the washboard, and he was giving the inventor credit for being a bigger man than P. T. Barnum or Dan Rice.

"I'm glad it's come, Samuel," continued Mrs. Gallup in more cheerful tones. "You know I hev bin expectin to die any minit for the last 25 years, and it has kinder kept me upsot. You'll be glad, too, because you don't like the smell of camphor and mustard plasters around. You may feel a little lonesome for two or three days after I'm gone, but with playin checkers, goin to the debatin society and lookin around for a second wife you'll soon chirk up and git your appetite back. I ain't goin to ask you who you shall take for your second wife, but before I go I want to talk with you about the house. Will you talk with me, Samuel?"

Mr. Gallup refused to commit himself. That Wiggins washer was being sold for $10 when other and inferior machines were foisted on the public at $15, and he was saying to himself that Wiggins ought to have the gratitude of the nation. Mrs. Gallup shed seven or eight tears, caught a sob between her teeth and went on:

"In the first place, the oven door to the stove needs a new hinge. It got broke seven years ago, but I have got along with it so as to save expense. Then the snout is broke off our two quart pitcher, and the handle is off the gallon jug. If I was goin to stay right along on earth, I shouldn't tell you that we ought to hev a new set of teaspoons or that there are three holes in the dishpan, but I'm goin fur, fur away, and your second wife won't put up with things as I hev. We are still sleepin on the same feather bed mother gave me when we was married, and the feathers ought to hev new tickin. If I was to live on, I could make the old sheets do fur a year more; but, as it is, I guess you'll hev to buy at least two. You ought to hev some pillarslips too. Down cellar you'll find half a barrel of soft soap, two jars of peach pickles and six gallons of apple butter. I hope your second wife will be as careful of 'em as I hev bin. Many a time I hev wanted a peach pickle in the middle of the afternoon, but I wouldn't go down arter it and be a pig. Did I tell you about the cider vinegar, Samuel?"

Mr. Gallup was holding his breath over the statement that the Wiggins washer washed a shirt for the governor of Arizona in 13 seconds, and of course he didn't answer.

"The cider vinegar ain't no good, Samuel. It didn't work, and you might as well throw it away. Before you marry ag'in you ought to fix the leak in the roof, git a new pump for the well, whitewash the kitchen and buy a new mop handle. First wives can git along most any way and make one mop last for 20 years, but second wives begin to kick right away. I ain't tellin you these things because I'm jealous, Samuel, but because it's my duty as a dyin wife. I don't want you to hev to go huntin the house all over after I'm gone to find things. Remember, your dyin wife, who hain't asked you to buy her a hairpin for 17 years, tells you that you've got three shirts, four pairs of socks, five collars and two handkerchiefs in the bureau, and hangin up in the clothespress is two old suits and one old hat. In the top drawer of the bureau you'll find a piece of crape for your hat, and in the bottom drawer is some farewell verses I writ out a year ago. I don't owe none of the nayburs no tea of coffee or sugar, and none of 'em owes me anything. Now, that's all, and if you want to kiss me and say you're sorry I've got to go and hope I'll watch over you, why, then I'm ready."

She looked full at Mr. Gallup for the first time. His eyes were still glued to that pamphlet. It was stated that the Wiggins washer was so constructed that it could be attached to a potato slicer or an apple parer and no reader's interest could help but grow.

Mrs. Gallup waited 60 seconds for an answer, and then as none came she softly rose up and went out into the kitchen and began to get things ready for breakfast. She had been gone ten minutes when Mr. Gallup smiled. He didn't smile because he heard her singing a verse of "The Old Oaken Bucket," but because Mr. Wiggins finished his pamphlet with the declaration that no matter who wrote the poetry of America, he proposed to wash the shirts of the nation.

Generous Great Britain.

Britain's "earth hunger" is a common sneer on the continent, but look at what we have given away without the least reason!

We took the Ionian islands in 1809 and handed them over to Greece for nothing about 50 years afterward. Corsica shows George III as its king, but we abandoned it three years later, and the French naturally grabbed it.

Tangier came to us by the marriage of Charles II. We abandoned it at the end of 22 years.

We took Cuba in 1762 and handed it back to the Spaniards, after holding it for 10 months. We took the Philippines and returned them to the same country for £800,000—which was never paid.

Here is a short list of other places which we once held and gave up without compulsion; Minorca, Sicily, Sardinia, Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Java, Pondicherry, Celebes, Moluccas, Elba and about 50 other places.

We took Cape Colony in 1795, but gave it up again to the Dutch. In 1806 we took it again—and kept it.—London Standard.

The Coughing Bean.

To the ordinary housemaid the falling of a house plant into a violent paroxysm of coughing is naturally disconcerting. Yet there are plants which will do this when the broom or the duster begins to make dust fly. This singular plant is the "coughing bean," known to the botanist as the Eutada tussiens. It is a native of warm and moist tropical countries and cannot and will not stand dust. When dust settles upon the breathing pores in the leaves of this plant and chokes them, a gas accumulates inside the leaves, and when it gains sufficient strength forcibly "blows off," clearing the pores of dust and making a sound exactly like coughing. At the same time the leaves tremble and the plant actually "gets red in the face," through the sinking of the green chlorophyll grains and the appearance of red particles on the leaves. This plant is sometimes used as a house plant, and sweeping the room sets it coughing, to the intense astonishment of persons not familiar with its peculiarities.

Missed His Guess.

An American who was sojourning in Spain at the time says that on the day when Dewey was destroying the Spanish squadron at Manila a representative audience, including some of Spain's bravest and best, were attending a patriotic bullfight in Madrid, applauding these words of the famous matadore: "With the ease with which I have killed this noble animal, the bull, will the glorious Spanish nation uphold the traditions of the past and keep green the laurels of their illustrious fathers by triumphing over the Yankee pig."

Was Ready to Compromise.

A very small pile of coal lay on the sidewalk in front of a house on A street southeast. A correspondingly small son of Ham was sauntering along and, seeing it, scented a job. He rang the doorbell.

"Am dat yo' all's coal?" he asked the lady at the door.

"Yes."

"Want it toted in?"

"Yes."

"Kain't I git de job?"

"Why, you're pretty small, and then you might charge too much. You might ask more than I could pay."

"How much is yo' got?" asked the small man of business. "Kin yo' raise a dollah?"

"Oh, my goodness, no!"

"Seventy-five cents?"

"No; run along and don't bother me." And she started to close the door.

"Mebbe so yo'll gib 50 cents."

"No, no; run along."

"I reckons yo' all ain't got er qua'tah?"

"No."

"Ner a dime?"

"No, not even a dime," replied the woman, beginning to laugh.

"Well, how much is yo' got?" questioned Ham, showing his ivories. "I sut'nly does wanter git de job."

"I've got just a nickel."

"Well, I'm jus' a-lookin fer nickel jobs." And he straightway began.—Washington Star.

Steam Navigation.

The rise of steam navigation was slow. Like most things new, it had opposition. In the sixteenth century an unsuccessful Italian genius tried to apply steam to navigation. In 1736 a British patent was taken out for a steamboat. It was 1807 that witnessed Fulton sailing up the Hudson in a boat driven by steam. In 1838 steamships crossed the Atlantic.

Force of Habit.

"Is the boss in?" asked the stranger, entering the drug store.

"No," replied the absentminded clerk; "but we have something just as good."—Yonkers Statesman.

A finished sailor is a much more expensive article than the finished soldier, as a soldier can be trained in a year or two, while a sailor is a technical craftsman, whose education is long and elaborate.

He who makes no mistakes makes nothing else.—Atchison Globe.

On the Atlantic.

Mother—That gentleman seems very attentive to you, Clara. What sort of a young man do you find him?

Clara—Oh, he seems all right, but a little empty, perhaps.

Mother (who always takes things literally)—My dear Clara, what a very shocking remark. I know he was very ill the first few days out, but fancy noticing such a thing.—Pick-Me-Up.

Men Who Handle Millions.

The government is more trustful of the employees in its financial center than is any private corporation. In the United States treasury the whole output of the nation's currency is handled by men who are under neither surveillance nor bond. The paying teller handles $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 a year. The exchange clerk has every day $60,000 in change at hand. The money in charge of the keeper of the cashroom runs from $170,000,000 upward, and the chief of the issue division handles millions every day. Any of these men could get away with enormous amounts of money and be reasonably secure against detection for a considerable length of time. Nevertheless, peculations from the treasury have been few and small in amount during its history. There is an axiom in the department which runs as follows:

"Wherever money is handled there is a point at which the honesty of the individual must be the main reliance."

And so the treasury dispenses with the services of spotters. However, private business interests involving the handling of large sums of money are not likely to follow this example. Spotters may be an evil, but they are a necessity in the present phase of human development, and until some psychological chemist devises a preparation to make men honest the type is likely to persist.—S. H. Adams in Ainslee's.

A Precocious Baby.

The baby was only 4, but she was an only child and had lived with her parents largely in hotels, and she was a self possessed little maiden. She was always a model of propriety as to manners, so that when one day a young man, a friend of her papa's and mamma's and a great admirer of the little girl, asked to take her out to luncheon all by herself she was allowed to go. A very tiny girl may go without a chaperon sometimes. The little girl was to do the ordering. She undertook this responsibility with confidence and, taking up the menu, studied it with as much gravity as if the letters were not as unreadable to her as Greek would have been to her mamma.

"I will have some meat and some potatoes," she said gravely, "and by and by I may have some ice cream."

The order was given, the cream followed, and the little lady was an altogether charming, dainty and sweet little companion for luncheon. The meal ended with the dignity with which it had begun, the young woman donned her wraps, and as the young man was preparing to escort her to the door she remarked gravely:

"And now I will have some flowers."

It was the last touch of grown upness, and it was the proudest young man in New York who took home a pretty and dignified baby with a big bunch of roses in her arms.—New York Times.

A Patent Hole.

Of the many extraordinary things for which patent protection has been granted a hole seems to be the most useless and impossible. Yet there are many patents for holes, and, what is more, the patents are valid and valuable. One of the best relates to holes in ships' bottoms for the admission and escape of water to the condensers.

Every one who has seen a screw steamer under way will have noticed a stream of water issuing from her side, a little above the water line; that water is pumped into the ship for the purpose of condensing the waste steam that leaves the cylinders and returning it as water to the boilers.

At last it occurred to a genius that if a hole were made in the bottom of the ship forward of the condenser and another abaft it, the water would circulate around the condenser without the aid of a pump. It is for the shape of these holes, so that they will offer less resistance to the water when the ship is traveling fast, that several patents have been granted.

A Testamentary Puzzle.

An Englishman who recently died had three children, one son and two daughters, and he mentioned all of them in his will.

The first clause is, "I leave my piano to Mary Elizabeth, when Arthur has done with it." The other clause is, "To Susan Jane—she may take whatever Arthur wishes to give to her."

There is no doubt of Arthur's standing in the document, but the pointed question is raised, Are Mary Elizabeth and Susan Jane beneficiaries under the will?

"As Mad as a Hatter."

Probably very few persons who frequently use the expression "As mad as a hatter" have any idea as to what it means or why a hatter is necessarily any more subject to fits of anger than a plumber, a blacksmith or a carpenter. The expression is said to have come into use half a century ago, when the manufacture of hats was done wholly by hand. The most striking thing about the process was that of the beating up of the felt. The hatter first dipped the mass of wool and hair frequently into hot water; then, seizing a stick in each hand, he belabored the mass most vigorously, stopping now and then to get his breath, until the material was matted together in a rough sort of felt. The lively beating administered to the felt, as if the workman were actually incensed, gave rise to the familiar simile.

Pleasure Versus Pain.

It is said that "no one knows pleasure until he has known pain." If this is so, what pleasure there must be in store for the Rheumatics! It is absolutely impossible, however, for them to know pleasure until they get rid of their Rheumatism. The surest way for them to do this is to use Ath-lo-pho-ros. It has given pleasure to over 50,000 people by curing their Rheumatism. It will give pleasure to everyone that uses it. One bottle of Ath-lo-pho-ros will give immediate relief. A few bottles will cure. It is folly not to try it. After the first bottle you will know pleasure as you have known pain.

An Uneven Contest.

"They had a lively boxing match at Splinter's the other night."

"How was that?"

"Splinter came home late, and as he passed through the hall his wife's tallest palm touched him on the cheek. Splinter was in an excited condition and thought it was somebody's fingers. So he struck out wildly with both fists and succeeded in knocking over two palms and severely bumping his own head."

"But why do you call it a boxing match?"

"Because Splinter put up his knuckles against his wife's palms."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE GRIP EPIDEMIC.

The Disease More Prevalent than Ever and Quite as Fatal. The Best Treatment.

The grip has surprised the doctors and health authorities this season by its rapid spread and by some novel symptoms. While it spares nobody it is proving especially dangerous to middle aged and elderly persons. In many cases either a fatal onset of pneumonia, or a complete breakdown of health and strength, is apt to follow an attack of grip.

The wise course for all is prevention. By wearing a Benson's Porous Plaster on the chest and back you protect the lungs from cold and chill and (with ordinary care) you are safe from grip.

For those who are already suffering from grip, or from the usual winter coughs and colds, Benson's Plasters are a sure and speedy relief and cure. Highly medicinal and scientific.

Refuse imitations and substitutes. Only the genuine are effective. Examine when you buy. Seabury & Johnson, Manufacturing Chemists, New York.

After Sickness

Take Vinol—Our Great Strength Creator.

IT GIVES ONE A SPLENDID APPETITE.

AND QUICKLY REBUILDS THE SYSTEM.

We Will Refund the Price of Vinol if It Fails.

The worst part of sickness, frequently, is getting over it.

The patient's strength is depleted, his system is generally demoralized, relapses are continually feared, and naturally.

The one thing to aid recovery is to give the patient that which will enable him to get strong, and at the same time give strength direct to the different organs of the body.

Nothing will do this like Vinol.

It acts directly on the stomach, creates a healthy appetite, and enables the digestive organs to obtain the necessary elements to increase the weight of the patient and to make new healthy flesh and muscle tissue and pure, rich, red blood.

The following is a letter showing where Vinol was taken and did good after a case of sickness. It reads as follows:

"I wish to certify to the very great benefit which has been derived from the use of Vinol in my family. My wife was very sick with the grippe and afterward was wholly run down. One bottle of Vinol places her on her feet in better condition than she had been before in six months. I heartily recommend and endorse it."—HENRY F. STURTEVANT, 81 Huntington St., Brockton, Mass.

Everything that is in Vinol is plainly printed on the label of each package.

We know Vinol is a splendid preparation, and in many cases we have been able to see for ourselves the wonderful results it brings about.

Remember that we guarantee Vinol and refund the purchase money if you are not satisfied.

MICHIGAN MATTERS

Republican State Convention was Well Attended.

MONTGOMERY RENOMINATED

Frank W. Fletcher Renominated for Regent and Henry W. Carey Named as His Running Mate—Other Michigan News of Interest.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 1.—At the republican state convention, held in this city Thursday, Richard T. Montgomery, at present justice of the supreme court, was renominated by acclamation to succeed himself, and Frank W. Fletcher was renominated for regent and Henry W. Carey was also nominated for regent. The convention was called to order promptly at 11 o'clock by Chairman Gerrit J. Diekema of the republican state central committee. Rev. Daniel F. Bradley of Grand Rapids offered prayer. E. D. Conger of Grand Rapids, temporary secretary of the state central committee, read the call.

Chairman Diekema, in his opening address, expressed gratification that there was so unusually large an attendance of delegates for a spring convention.

Wm. A. Norton of St. Johns was presented as temporary chairman. His speech was interesting, bright and breezy.

The usual committees were appointed, and then at 12 o'clock the convention adjourned till 1:30 p. m.

At the afternoon session the committee on permanent organization and order of business recommended that Wm. A. Norton of St. Louis be made permanent chairman and Frank T. Lodge of Detroit permanent secretary. Nominating speeches were limited to five minutes, seconding speeches to three.

The work of the convention was soon accomplished, but the committee on resolutions failed to make a report, being, it is reported, engaged in a jangle until after the convention adjourned.

Test the Governor's Power.

Lansing, Mich., March 1.—The state tax commission held a meeting here Thursday afternoon. Freeman O. Gullifer of Detroit was appointed secretary of the commission. Fred M. Twiss will become chief clerk. R. H. Marsh of Washtenaw was given a clerkship.

Commissioner Robert Oakman says he will lend Wm. T. Dust, who has been appointed to succeed him, every assistance in getting the question settled as to the governor's right to make another appointment. It will go to the supreme court, and a stipulation of the facts involved will be signed. Oakman and Dust are good friends and the proceedings to be commenced by the latter will be an amicable one. An information in the nature of quo warranto will be filed. In the meantime, Oakman will continue to do the work and draw the salary, as he is the de facto officer.

Causes Good Feeling.

Benton Harbor, Mich., March 1.—The best of feeling exists among marine men and business men over the announcement made by Congressman E. L. Hamilton, that the secretary of war had declared the Paw Paw river navigable, and ordered all bridges to be made movable. This will cause the reconstruction of the railway and several highway bridges in order to allow the passage of boats. This action will be the means of opening up several miles of new water front, and will afford an excellent site for factories. An effort has been made for over a year to have this river declared navigable.

Lapeer G. A. R. Hall Dedicated.

Lapeer, Mich., March 1.—Turrill post, No. 144, G. A. R., dedicated a fine new hall here Thursday night. A banquet preceded the dedicatory exercises, which were held at the opera house. Supreme Court Justice J. B. Moore gave the dedicatory address and Dr. Edward Collins of Detroit made a neat speech. W. E. Brown of Lapeer spoke on "Civil war memories." Hon. J. L. Starkweather of Romeo presented the post with a picture of Andersonville prison, giving a vivid description of it.

Michigan Man Elected.

Chicago, March 1.—At Thursday's session of the superintendence department of the National Educational association the following officers were reported elected by the secretary: President, T. R. Glenn, Atlanta, Ga.; first vice-president, H. T. Emerson, Buffalo, N. Y.; second vice-president, F. W. Cooley, Calumet, Mich.; secretary, John W. Deitrich, Colorado Springs, Col. Chicago was chosen as the meeting place for the next annual session.

Will Test the Bill.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 1.—Populists have called a caucus in the fifth ward and will nominate an alderman and constable and then demand that the nominees be given a place on the ticket. If this is refused, as it will be, the case will be taken to the supreme court by mandamus and the Burns primary election bill will be passed upon immediately.

At Grace Hospital.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 1.—The state L. O. T. M. will dedicate a free bed at Grace hospital at Detroit next Sunday afternoon. The object of the endowment is primarily for the treatment of lady Maccabees. Emma E. Bower, grand record keeper, has sent $5,000 for this purpose. A number of lady Maccabees from this city will attend the dedication ceremonies.

To Raise Salaries.

Washington, March 1.—Senator Butler has given notice of an amendment he will offer to the sundry civil bill increasing the salaries of senators and members of congress to $7,000 per year.

As a Remedy.

"I want to get copies of your paper for a week back," said the visitor to the newspaper office.

"Wouldn't it be better to try a porous plaster?" suggested the facetious clerk.—Philadelphia Record.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

Band of Insurgents Made Attacks, But Were Repulsed.

Manila, March 1.—A band of 70 armed insurgents entered the town of Suog, in the province of South Plocos, Luzon, where they killed one native and abducted five. On midnight of the same day they attacked the town of Santa Maria, burning 50 houses. The insurgents were repulsed by the Americans, who had one man wounded; one native scout and two civilians were killed. The insurgents retreated to the mountains, closely pursued; their losses were not learned.

The projectors of the conservative party have asked the American Philippine commission to inspect their platform, but Judge Taft postponed action in the matter until Tuesday. They subsequently visited Gen. MacArthur and outlined to him their program, saying that the ultimate views of the party would be submitted later and would in no way conflict with the principle of American sovereignty. Gen. MacArthur responded that any Philippine party, under the present circumstances, should have the establishment of peace throughout the islands for its primary object, and advised the avoiding of the discussion of other political principles until peace should be declared. He said the situation to-day did not permit the encouragement of extreme party ideas. The conservatives are apparently receiving encouragement from those church authorities who oppose the federal party.

The ports of Inabango and Quindulman, on the island of Bohol, have been closed to inter-island commerce on account of the withdrawal of American troops.

The news that the Spooner amendment prohibits the sale of land, timber and mining concessions has alarmed those here who are dependent upon such concessions for their business success. Three chambers of the commerce of Manila, the international, the Spanish and the American, are wiring protests.

Maj.-Gen. S. B. M. Young and staff, with the Thirty-fourth United States volunteer infantry and nine companies of the Thirty-third, have embarked on the United States transport Logan and will sail to-day. En route they will stop at Candom, on the western coast of Luzon, to take on board Companies C, E and M, of the Thirty-third United States volunteer infantry, who have been released from the quarantine imposed by reason of a slight outbreak of smallpox. There have been festivities at the town of Catbalogan, on the island of Samar, under the auspices of the federal party and on the occasion of Washington's birthday; that evening and during the festivities the insurgents attacked the town in force, but were quickly driven away in disorder. There were no American casualties. It is rumored that the insurgents from neighboring islands are concentrating on the island of Samar.

Will Be Investigated.

San Francisco, March 1.—Capt. Hodgeson of the Fort Point life-saving station notified Major Blakely, superintendent of the life-saving service, Thursday morning that Mark Ellingsen, the guardsman on duty in the lookout tower the morning the steamer City of Rio de Janeiro was wrecked, had confessed to him that he heard the Rio's signals of distress, but paid no attention to them and neglected to arouse the station. Capt. Hodgeson immediately suspended Ellingsen. In the afternoon Ellingsen appeared at the office of Maj. Blakely and denied emphatically that he had made the confession related by Capt. Hodgeson. He made his denial in the presence of Capt. Hodgeson, who very positively reasserted that Ellingsen had made a clean breast of negligence. Ellingsen maintained that he heard only two short signals of perhaps ten seconds' duration and that he had attached no importance to them, as they were not long blasts. The matter will be investigated by the proper authorities.

Becoming Serious.

Marseilles, March 1.—Several steamers arrived here from Algiers and Oran, Algeria, with early fruits and vegetables, are unable to discharge their cargoes owing to the strike of dock laborers, 3,000 of whom yesterday voted to declare a general strike on account of the refusal of contract orders to dismiss certain overseers. It is feared that a number of ocean steamers will be unable to sail. The strikers met Thursday and enlarged their claims. They now demand a reduction in hours of work and increased pay. The strikers are encouraged by the sympathetic attitude of the mayor of Marseilles, a socialist, who is president of the international dock laborers' union. The contractors refuse to make any concessions, claiming that the men are violating a previous agreement. The stokers are now threatening to strike, but the ship-owners declare they would rather lay up their steamers than yield to the demands of the strikers, which are classed as exorbitant.

A Lively Experience.

New York, March 1.—The White Star line steamer Teutonic, which reached this port Thursday, had a lively experience on Sunday. While the ship was riding in fair weather and going at her usual speed, she was struck by a tidal wave. The ship went down in the hollow of the sea and immediately there was crashing of iron work and a mass of water boarded her on the starboard side, thundering down on hatches and deckhouse. The ship recovered suddenly, throwing more water aboard. The wave broke high up, throwing down the men in the crow's nest and rushed on, leaving them bruised and badly shaken. John Michaelson, a steerage passenger, was hurled down and caught his foot in such a way that it was almost completely torn off at the ankle. The passengers generally became so frightened that they were on the verge of a panic, so that Capt. McKinstry was obliged to go into the saloon and assure them that there was no danger.

More Plague.

Cape Town, March 1.—One fresh case of bubonic plague has developed here and three at Somerset West; they are all among colored men.

Killed by a Snowslide.

Boulder, Col., March 1.—John Kittredge, a mining engineer, and his assistant, John Fields, of Nolton, Kan., were carried down Crittenden mountain, two and a half miles above Eldorado, by a snowslide Thursday. Kittredge caught hold of a stump and saved himself, but Fields was carried 1,000 feet to the bottom of a gulch, buried by the slide and killed.

A Tariff War.

Kingston, Jamaica, March 1.—A tariff war has commenced between the Royal Mail line of London and Elder Dempster & Co. of Liverpool, on freight between England and Jamaica. Both lines are cutting rates heavily and the end is not yet reached. Shipping circles here are much interested in the outcome.

PAID THE PENALTY

Rosslyn Ferrell Electrocuted in the Ohio Penitentiary.

FOR MURDER OF HIS FRIEND

His Wonderful Nerve Sustained Him to the Last—He Had Nothing to Say—Review of His Brutal and Cowardly Crime.

Columbus, O., March 1.—There is no diminution of the wonderful nerve that has been characteristic of the man since the time of apprehension for the premeditated murder of Charles Lane last August, Rosslyn Ferrell, at 12:06 this morning, walked calmly to the electric chair of the Ohio penitentiary and expiated his crime.

Up until 7:30 yesterday evening Ferrell was in company with his three brothers in his room at the penitentiary. At that time the brothers were asked to retire and Rev. Fathers Kelly and O'Reilly entered the room and remained with the condemned man until he was pronounced dead. They administered the sacraments in the early part of the evening, and the rites had scarcely been concluded until Ferrell proposed a game of checkers with one of the clergymen. Tiring of this after a time, he played his guitar and sang until he was summoned to the death chamber. He walked into the room as calm as if he were merely a spectator. His face did not change color and his steps were strong and resolute. He was asked if he had any last message and replied, in a voice full of strength and without tremor: "I have nothing to say." The officials made the last preparations, the fatal circuit was turned on and at 12:09 he was declared dead.

Columbus, O., March 1.—Rosslyn Ferrell, who Thursday night paid the penalty for his crime in the electric chair of the Ohio penitentiary, shot and killed Express Messenger Charles Lane on the night of Aug. 10, 1900. He had been in the employ of the Adams Express Co. and had lost his position. He had represented to Miss Lilian Costlow, to whom he was to have been married on the coming Thursday night, that he had a considerable sum of money in the bank and that he still retained his situation with the company.

He was desperate. He was without money and his wedding day was approaching. He had a peculiar pride which prevented his telling the plain truth to the girl, and he determined to have money by murder. He boarded the express car of an east-bound Pennsylvania train on the night mentioned, being permitted to ride by his old friend Lane. The two men talked pleasantly until the train reached Plain City, about 15 miles from this city, when Lane was preparing to make his express delivery for that station, a small town in Madison county.

When the messenger's back was turned Ferrell shot, the ball taking effect in Lane's back. The killing was just before coming to Union, Madison county. Ferrell fired again and again until the chambers of his revolver were empty. Lane lay on the car floor dead. Ferrell took gold, bank checks and bank notes amounting to $2,400 from the safe and when the train stopped at Plain City he leaped off. The stop was but for a moment, and the crime was not discovered until the car was opened when the train reached this city.

Ferrell stayed all night at a hotel in Plain City and the next day went to Miss Costlow. He was arrested at her house the following Sunday, and his trial and conviction followed. He admitted the crime, and it has been shown that his reason for it was infatuation for the girl he was to marry. She has repeatedly visited him since he was condemned to die.

Under Military Protection.

Springfield, Ill., March 1.—After being confined in the county jail here since Dec. 28, 1900, Albert Shenkle, wanted in Green county for rape, will be taken there to-day at 4 o'clock on a special train under guard of four companies of national guard to prevent mob violence. These companies were mobilized in the armory last night awaiting the trip. They were ordered to rendezvous here by Col. J. S. Culver and will probably be commanded by Adjt.-Gen. Reece. Orders were issued at the request of Sheriff Isaac Conlee of Green county, on the approval of Gov. Yates. On Sunday night, Dec. 23, 1900, Shenkle assaulted Grace Giller, aged 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Giller, prominent residents of Whitehall, Green county. He was captured and taken to Carrollton and lodged in jail. Mobs formed and it became necessary to remove him to avoid lynching, and he was finally removed to Springfield.

Emperor Shaken Up.

Berlin, March 1.—About noon Thursday Emperor William had a narrow escape from serious injury while crossing Unter den Linden, when his carriage came into collision with an electric street car near the Schloss, to which he was returning. The brake of the car did not work effectively and the emperor's coachman barely succeeded in stopping the horses. As it was, the car shook the carriage roughly and somewhat damaged it. The emperor was thrown against the side of the carriage and slightly bruised, but almost immediately thrust his head out to ascertain the cause of the accident.

Treaty May Fail.

Washington, March 1.—Nothing has been received here from British sources to indicate the character of that government's response to the senate amendments to the Hay-Pauncefote Nicaraguan canal treaty. Neither Lord Pauncefote nor Secretary Hay have any information on the subject. The general belief prevails that the treaty will be permitted to fail.

Kicked by a Broncho.

Cheboygan, Mich., March 1.—A broncho kicked Arthur Byrnes in the head Wednesday night at East Mullet Lake. He was brought to the city yesterday afternoon. Byrnes is badly injured.

Reed Released.

Indianapolis, Ind., March 1.—"Doc" Reed, who was arrested on a charge of assaulting Miss Dorothy Darter of Irvington and who was identified by her Wednesday, and whom the authorities had difficulty in preventing being lynched, was Thursday afternoon again taken to the Darter home, and after carefully scrutinizing the prisoner Miss Darter declared he was not her assailant. He was then released from custody, as the authorities were satisfied he could prove an alibi.

CONGRESSIONAL BUSINESS.

Proceedings in the Senate Very Serene—House Considers Revenue Bill.

Washington, March 1.—The serenity of Thursday's proceedings in the senate was in sharp contrast with the tempestuous discussion of Wednesday. An immense amount of business was disposed of and not a single point raised was sharply controverted. The river and harbor bill, carrying appropriations of more than $50,000,000, was passed without a word of discussion, and the senate adopted the conference report on the war revenue reduction measure without disturbing in the least the mill pond smoothness of the proceedings.

Final conference reports were made and agreed to on the diplomatic and consular and the agricultural appropriation bills, and another conference on the postoffice bill was ordered. Conference reports on several other measures were agreed to and several bills of a minor character were passed.

The last hour and a half of the session was devoted to consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and without completing it the senate, at 6:35, adjourned.

The house cleared the decks yesterday of a number of important conference reports without much difficulty. The conference report on the war revenue reduction bill proved generally acceptable to both sides and was adopted without division. Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, acquiesced in it as the best that could be done, although he stated that the minority still believed the war taxes should be reduced $70,000,000.

Final reports on the diplomatic and consular and agricultural appropriation bills were adopted. The major part of the day was devoted to the bill to promote the efficiency of the revenue cutter service. Although the bill is a house measure, its friends were very persistent and in the face of many difficulties hung on to it with bulldog tenacity and finally forced the bill into such a parliamentary situation that it will be voted upon after five minutes' debate to-day.

At 6:10 the house adjourned.

FATAL ACCIDENTS.

Railroad Collision and Mine Explosion Cause Loss of Life.

Pittsburg, March 1.—Two dead, three badly hurt and a passenger train burned is the result of a head-on collision between passenger train No. 16, south-bound, and a local freight on the Pittsburg, Virginia & Charleston railroad Thursday evening at Coal Valley, five miles from McKeesport.

Immediately after the collision the passenger cars took fire and soon were totally destroyed, only one car escaping the flames.

The trains in collision were the Uniontown express, south-bound, and the local freight coming toward Pittsburg. The local was standing on a siding between the north and south-bound tracks delivering freight at the time. For some reason as yet unexplained, the express instead of keeping the main track, shot off into the siding and telescoped the other train. All of the victims were on the express train, which carried between 50 and 60 passengers. The engineman of the freight jumped when they saw the collision was inevitable.

South McAlister, I. T., March 1.—An explosion occurred Thursday night at mine No. 5, one mile northeast of this city, which resulted in the death of three men and the probable injury to many more. All three men were shot-firers and had just gone into the mine to work when the explosion occurred. It is supposed that the pit was overcharged with gas. A rescuing party is working to reach the dead men, but as the force of the shock resulted in great damage to the mine, slow progress is made. The mine is the property of the Osage Coal & Mining Co., which is owned by the Missouri Pacific railroad.

A German Deserter.

Vienna, March 1.—The man who who arrested here Wednesday having in his possession jewelry of the value of £5,000, supposed to be the proceeds of burglaries and robberies in London and New York city, and who then gave the name of "W. A. Morley," asserting that he resided in New York city, now confesses that his name is Carl Heinrich Wolf and that he is a deserter from the German army. Wolf is accused of stealing jewelry belonging to James Brittain, of London, the alleged theft having been committed last Saturday.

To Prevent Smuggling.

New York, March 1.—The Mail and Express says: "The treasury department has decided to take radical steps to prevent wholesale smuggling by ocean tourists, and within a few weeks the granting of passes for the admission of friends to the piers of incoming vessels will be stopped. The passes for use on the revenue cutters to meet friends down the bay will also be considerably reduced, if not altogether abolished, except in the case of ship news reporters."

Milk.

An English physician, commenting on the tendency of London bred persons to die young, says that they drink too little milk. Even in the country "milk is not such a common article of diet as it was in past years, and children are not nourished according to hygienic laws."

A new virtue is ascribed to milk by The Practical Druggist, which says it is the best general preventive of the absorption of poison by the human system.

INDIGNANT DENIAL

Made by German Newspapers of Reports From China.

NOT MAKING NEW DEMANDS

Concerning Executions or Lands—Mr. Conger is Leaving China at His Own Request, as He Desired Leave of Absence.

Berlin, March 1.—The statements of a number of English and American newspapers that Germany purposes to make new land acquisitions in China and is constantly formulating new demands on the Chinese government—the most recent of which are alleged to be the executions of additional provincial authorities for anti-European outrages—have caused intense indignation in Berlin, as the facts do not seem to warrant them.

The Post and the Berliner Neueste Nachrichten prints strongly worded semi-official denials.

"Germany has good reason to suspect," said a high official Thursday, "that such demands as are attributed to her really emanate, on the contrary, from the United States and England, both of whom have lost missionaries and other white citizens in the Chinese provinces, which is also the case with France and Italy. On the other hand, Germany has not lost a single missionary, but is backing up the demands of the United States and England so as to preserve the solidarity of the powers at Pekin."

The Post says, "that under such conditions as these it is impudent to talk about Germany's demands in the premises."

The details regarding the Russo-Chinese agreement as to Manchuria, Mongolia and Chinese Turkestan have caused no surprise here, as they corroborate what the German correspondents in China have been asserting from the outset. The Berliner Tageblatt says:

"By this convention English influence in North China is destroyed. Japan alone may be expected to oppose actively the Russian proceedings."

The Freisinnige Zeitung observes:

"This Russian protectorate is virtually annexation."

Washington, March 1.—A misunderstanding appears to exist in European capitals as to the conditions under which Mr. Conger was replaced at Pekin by Mr. Rockhill in charge of the negotiations for the United States. The impression seems to have gained currency that the change was made by the state department because of dissatisfaction with Mr. Conger's action. It is said at the department that Mr. Conger was relieved at his own request and his cable message of last week strongly urged that he be allowed to come home for 60 days, not intimating any purpose on his part to remain longer in the United States. In the same message, Mr. Conger recommended that Mr. Rockhill be charged with the conduct of the negotiations, and in so directing the state department has done nothing more than carry out the request of Mr. Conger. The leave of absence of 60 days will really cover more than double that period of time, for the leave only operates when the minister reaches the confines of the United States, and, according to the regulations, he is allowed 35 days to make the journey from Pekin to his home and as much time for the return trip. As it is not expected that he will be able to get away from Pekin owing to the ice much before the middle of March, he could not be expected to return to his post, even if he desired to retain his ministry, until the latter part of next summer.

Shanghai, March 1.—The native newspapers publish a second list of officials whose punishment is demanded by the powers. It includes Lu Chuan Lin, grand councellor and president of the board of rites.

Duke Lan has been arrested and awaits punishment. Prince Tuan has not yet been taken.

Rome, March 1.—An official note, issued Thursday, denies the report that the Italian government contemplates territorial occupation of the Bay of Nimrod, an important harbor south of Ning Ho, province of Che Kiang.

London, March 1.—The Pekin correspondent of the Daily Mail, wiring Wednesday, says: "Great Britain, Japan and Germany have unitedly advised China, through Li Hung Chang, I understand, against granting special concessions to the subjects of any nationality. These representations refer to the Russo-Chinese convention regarding Manchuria, which has not yet been ratified by China."

Failures for February.

New York, March 1.—Dun's Review says: Commercial failures in the United States during the month of February numbered 1,024, against 1,242 in January, and aggregate liabilities were $11,287,211, against $11,220,811. Of the month's total, 212 were manufacturing concerns, with an indebtedness of $4,398,741, and 757 were traders, for $4,444,873, while brokerage, real estate and transporting defaults numbered 55, and were $2,443,697 in amount. Banking and financial concerns are not included with commercial failures, and of these there were seven disasters in February, with liabilities of $432,132, compared with eight in January for $1,070,857.

To Succeed Boutelle.

Bangor, Me., March 1.—Ex-Gov. Llewellyn Powers was nominated Thursday on the first ballot for representative to congress to succeed Congressman Boutelle, at a convention of the fourth district republicans. He received 316 votes out of 431.

On Retired List.

Washington, March 1.—An order was issued at the war department Thursday placing Brig. Generals Jas. H. Wilson and Fitzhugh Lee on the retired list of the army.

Burglarized a Church.

New York, March 1.—Burglars entered the rectory of Grace church on Broadway early Thursday morning. Silverware and other valuables, amounting to about $300, were taken. The remarkable feature of the burglary was that windows leading to the basement were forced in the full glare of the electric light on the thoroughfare.

A Horrible Outbreak.

MAY BREAK OUT.

Woodsmen Chafe at Being Confined in Quarantine.

Lansing, Mich., March 1.—The smallpox situation in Chandler township, near Boyne Falls, has become serious and a number of woodsmen who are in quarantine at a lumber camp, have threatened to fight their way out. Secretary Baker of the state health board dispatched the state contagious disease inspector to the camp last night.

The indignation of the woodsmen is due to the fact that a prominent physician of Cadillac has declared that the disease is chickenpox, but the state authorities are confident that it is a mild form of smallpox. The inspector will also visit Gillmore township, Isabella county, the supervisor of which has written to the state board that his family is ill with a disease resembling chickenpox, and that practically all the inhabitants of the township have been exposed to the disease. As smallpox prevails in half a dozen localities in Isabella county, the state board has but little doubt as to the character of the disease.

The state board of health, in urging that people be vaccinated, calls attention to the result of 10 years of experience in Belvidere hospital at Glasgow, where the patients who were vaccinated showed a small death rate, the disease being mild. The percentage of deaths among the total number treated who had not been vaccinated was 46.30.

Benton Harbor, Mich., March 1.—A genuine case of smallpox is reported by Health Officer Ryno, at Coloma, a village a few miles north of this city. The victim is a young man who came from the north woods, and the case has been under quarantine. No new cases have developed and it is believed the disease will be held in check.

Struck by an Electric Car.

Northville, Mich., March 1.—Martin Peterson, a Northville farmer, was probably fatally injured by a Detroit & Northwestern car, which struck his sleigh between this village and Farmington. Both legs were cut off. He was taken to a Detroit hospital.

Strike at Devil's Lake.

Hudson, Mich., March 1.—One hundred men employed by H. S. Wood of Cincinnati cutting ice for Cincinnati parties, went on a strike Thursday morning at Devil's Lake, for higher wages. Both sides are firm and the end is not in sight.

Denies All Knowledge.

Washington, March 1.—In answer to an inquiry as to how the much discussed application of Gunner Morgan and the accompanying papers were made public property, Secretary Long has received a reply from Rear Admiral Sampson disclaiming all knowledge concerning the means by which the papers were obtained by the press.

Result in Doubt.

Washington, March 1.—A fruitless effort to agree in conference on the three submarine torpedo boats in the naval bill was made Thursday. When the discussion became somewhat personal, two of the senate conferees withdrew, making it impossible to proceed and leaving the result much in doubt.

Ordered to Manila.

Washington, March 1.—Orders have been issued for the third battalion of the provisional regiment, organized at San Francisco, to take passage on the transport Indiana on the 5th inst. for Manila. This battalion has been assigned to the Twenty-eighth infantry and will constitute the first battalion of that regiment.

Rear-end Collision.

Painesville, O., March 1.—A rear-end collision between Lake Shore railroad freight trains piled up four cars of the forward train 10 miles west of Painesville Thursday. Two tank cars of naphtha exploded and set fire to the wreckage, and the locomotive and 20 cars of the rear train were consumed.

Wanted to Broaden Him.

Charles B. Hanford while playing in a Texas town was approached by a young man in typical cowboy fashion, who said:

"Are you the manager of this play that comes tonight?"

Mr. Hanford said he was.

"Do you want to hire a man to help act?"

"No. My company is complete."

"Want to hire a man to help count money?"

"No."

"Want to hire a man to get out in the back of the theater and holler and applaud?"

"Not this tour. The audiences are attending to that very satisfactorily."

"Want anybody for anything on earth?"

"Not that I think of at present."

"Well, that's just our luck. We've got a man here who recites pieces in consideration of being treated. If he doesn't get treated, he'll hang around and make the barroom unpleasant for hours. We don't want to hurt him, for he's a good sort in the main. But he only knows three pieces—Mark Antony's oration, Hamlet's soliloquy and Rienzi's address to the Romans. We thought that if you could flatter his mind into the belief that he's a great genius and haul him around the country two or three trips, so that he can learn a few new pieces from you, we'd be willing to make up a purse that would come mighty near making it worth while."—New York Telegram.

His Exact Words.

Interviewer—Alderman Swelhed, I have come to get your views on the proposed change in the curriculum of the grammar school.

Alderman Swelhed—Curriculum! What's that? I'm ag'in it, whatever it is.

Alderman Swelhed, reading the report of the interviewer next morning: "Our distinguished townsman, Mr. M. T. Swelhed, was found at his charming home, surrounded by abundant indication of ripe scholarship and sturdy common sense. In reply to our reporter's question he said:

"'I do not desire to force my opinions upon the public, but this I will say, that I have given to this question long and studious attention, incidentally examining into the curricula of institutions of learning both at home and abroad, and, although I find in the existing course of study not a few matters for condemnation, still, upon the whole, I cannot say that I should advise any radical change until I have further time to examine into the subject.'"

"By George, that feller's got my exact language, word for word! And he didn't take no notes neither! By George, what a memory that feller must have!"—Tit-Bits.

Eugene J. Hall, the poet and publisher, says that one dose of Foley's Honey and Tar restored his voice when hoarseness threatened to prevent his lecture at Central Music Hall, Chicago. Nothing else as good. J. J. Orr.

MY CAPTIVE.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER,
Author of "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Sun of Saratoga," Etc.

[Copyright, 1900, by Joseph A. Altsheler.]

CHAPTER I.

A TRYING SITUATION.

I looked at the prisoner, and I was vexed by doubt. With a battle on one side of him and a woman on the other what is a man to do? She returned my gaze with great, pure eyes, which seemed to say I was a villain, a monster, yet I had been doing my exact duty, that of a faithful soldier in the cause of the Continental congress and freedom, while she, a woman, a girl, had presumed to turn from the things for which God had intended her and to meddle with war. I was more than vexed—I was angry, angry at her for attempting such a task and angry at myself for being forced into a situation so full of troubles.

On the right, in the fringe of woods a quarter of a mile away, the last rifle shot had been fired, and its echo was speeding across the far hills. The powder flashed no more, and the smoke rose in lazy coils over the ground on which men had fought and some had died. The victors, the captured detail with them, were riding away. I almost fancied I could hear the beat of their horses' hoofs, and the dead, I knew, lay with their faces upturned to the sun, waiting there until the last trump called to them to rise again. And here was I, an atom, left in the drift of the armies, cut off from my comrades and alone with this girl.

The horses shifted about uneasily, stamped their feet, and once mine raised his head and neighed, as if in truth he heard the beating hoofs of the galloping detachment. He knew that his comrades, too, were leaving him, though I cannot say that it was a desertion intended by either horse or man.

The girl's look of reproach turned to one of inquiry. She sat on a log, her little riding whip hanging idly in her hand. For the first time I took note of her face—the delicate but firm molding of each feature; the clear depths of her dark, blue eyes; the bronze gold of her hair, clustering in tiny curls around her forehead; the [illegible] of her cheeks, like a flush; her [illegible], young figure. Why is it that when God wishes to make women especially wicked and troublesome he makes them beautiful?

"Well, you rebel," she said, "when do you purpose to set me free?"

"When you give your word of honor that you will tell Cornwallis nothing about the strength of Morgan's forces and our present movements."

"That I will not do."

"Then you remain my prisoner."

Yet I would have been a fool even to have taken her word of honor. What woman has any regard for the truth in military matters? If she could find a chance, she would certainly give information that would bring Cornwallis, as well as Tarleton, on Morgan.

"I think that it is enough for Englishmen themselves to fight us without sending their daughters also against us," I said.

"My father did not send me," she said quickly. "I came of my own accord."

"So much the worse," I replied.

But nothing was to be gained by standing there and talking. Besides, it is never well for a soldier to dispute with his prisoner. It argues an insufficiency for his position. A captor should bear himself with dignity and reserve. I would show my quality.

I untied the horses and led them to the log on which she was sitting.

"Get up!" I said curtly and in a tone of command.

The natural rose flush of her cheeks deepened a little.

"You speak as if you were my master," she said.

"That is just what I am—for the present," I replied. "Mount your horse at once."

She gave me a sidewise look from eyes that flashed, but she stood upon the log.

"This log is too low, and the saddle is too high," she said.

I stepped forward and held out my hand to assist her.

"Don't touch me, you rebel!" she cried and leaped lightly into the saddle.

I felt hurt.

"I wish you wouldn't call me a rebel," I said.

"Why?"

"It's impolite."

"But it's true."

"Well, perhaps it is in a way, and in a way, too, I am proud of it. Are you proud of your king?"

"Yes."

"It doesn't take much to arouse English pride."

"You will think more of him when the war is over. It will pay you to do so."

"Meanwhile we will wait until then."

"What do you purpose to, do with me—keep me a prisoner?"

"It is my misfortune."

"The courtesy of a rebel."

"I shall take you to General Morgan."

"Then Tarleton will rescue me. Your Morgan cannot stand before him."

I was afraid that she spoke the truth. We were outnumbered, and besides more than half our force was raw militia. The odds were great against us, and knowing it I did not reply to her taunt.

While we were talking she sat in the saddle with the easy seat of a good horsewoman. I held my horse loosely by the bridle. She was twiddling the whip in her hands. Suddenly she leaned over and lashed my horse across the eyes with her whip. The blow was given with all her might, and the startled horse reared, jerked the bridle out of my hand and ran away.

"Goodby, Mr. Rebel!" she shouted, and drawing her whip across her own horse galloped off in the opposite direction.

I believe I swore. I was angry and alarmed, too, for this girl, with her messages and accurate news about us, was a formidable enemy, escaped, and might cause the destruction of the entire army of the south and the loss of all the southern colonies. I drew a pistol, it being my idea to kill the horse, but it was a shot that I could not risk. I thrust the pistol back in my pocket and ran after my horse. He was 30 or 40 yards away, half mad with rage and pain, his bridle swinging beside him.

I am a very good runner, but I do not claim to be as swift as a horse. Nevertheless I made speed as I ran after him, and I whistled and shouted with a vigor that must have convinced him of my intentions. I looked back once, and the girl and the horse she rode were growing smaller as they sped over the desolate and unfenced fields. My need of a horse, too, was growing more pressing. Mounted, there was hope; afoot, there was none.

I whistled all the calls that a friendly and well treated horse should know and meantime did not neglect to run after him with the best speed that I could command. Presently he seemed to understand and to remember that I was not responsible for the blow. He slackened his pace, looked back over his shoulder at me and whinnied. I whistled encouragingly, he whinnied again, and, remembering who I was, his best friend, came to a full stop, for he was a most intelligent horse. In a half a minute I overtook him, leaped into the saddle and turned his head the other way.

"Now, old horse," I cried, "you can gallop, but you gallop my way."

I wore my spurs, and I gave him a touch of the steel. That was enough, for he was always ambitious and proud of his speed, and away we flew over the fields after the disappearing girl. She was a full quarter of a mile away, and her figure was growing dim on the horizon. Another quarter of a mile and she would be in the woods, where the concealment of the trees would enable her to elude my pursuit. Moreover, these English girls are often daring horsewomen, and even at the distance I could see that she rode like a trooper. But I knew the country, and she did not, and I hoped to secure from it some chance that would enable me to overtake her.

I encouraged my horse. I did more than encourage—I appealed to his pride and his sense of gratitude. I reminded him how I had ridden him all the way from the Hudson when I came south with Greene; how I had tended him and cared for him and fed him, often when I was compelled to go hungry myself. I appealed to him now not to let that girl escape when so much depended on her capture, when I would be eternally disgraced, and he with me, if we permitted ourselves to be tricked and outwitted at such a time by one red cheeked English girl.

He was a sensible horse, and he understood. He said nothing, not even a little snort, but his stride lengthened, and the swift and regular beat of his hoofs on the turf was music.

"Good horse, Old Put, good lad!" I said. I had named him Put after Old Put, the famous old Connecticut general, because he was so reliable and steady. He shook his ears slightly as a sign that he would do his best for me, having no time to say more, and he ran a little faster. I kept a sharp watch for stones and holes in the ground, having no mind to risk a fall which might ruin all, and nursed my comrade's strength, for on land as well as sea a stern chase is a long one.

The figure of the girl and the horse she rode was growing larger, good proof that I was gaining, which was not enough, however, for I might continue to gain, and yet she could elude me in the woods unless I was close upon her when she reached them. Her long hair had fallen down and was streaming behind her like a ribbon of spray with the sunshine on it, but I felt like giving that yellow hair a jerk just then could I have put my hands upon it.

"Steady, Put!" I said to my faithful comrade. "Do you see that girl with the yellow hair? Yes? Well, note the horse that she is riding, a common troop horse, clumsy, ill bred, no pedigree. Are you going to let yourself be beaten by him?"

His ears wagged violently, and he ran a foot to the second faster. We struck a piece of beautiful turf, evidently an old field left to itself until it could recover its fertility, and with the soft grass deadening and easing his footfalls Old Put raced for life. I could almost count the yards that we gained, and still she was not in the forest. She had not looked back until then, and it was a hasty glance, followed by a quick lashing of her mount. I judged that she, too, had noticed the gain and would now be unmerciful to her horse. I was exultant, willing to boast of it, and I shared my feelings with Old Put.

"Notice that yellow haired girl again, Put," I said. "When we catch her this time, we will take care that she does not serve us such a trick again. If we cannot trust an Englishman, Put, how on earth can we put any faith in an English woman?"

Put had received a slight slash once from the saber of an Englishman who had offered to surrender to me and then tried to back out of it, and he knew what I meant. For the first time he uttered a slight snort, called one new muscle into play, and we steadily shortened the distance between us and the girl.

She would have got into the wood a few moments later, but she abruptly reined in her horse, turned him half about and galloped off to the left. I guessed the trouble at once. The heavy rains often wash great gullies in our South Carolina soil, and a kind providence, wishing to oblige me, had placed one of these in her way. It was equal to a gain of 200 feet without an effort, and I turned Old Put at once into the course she was taking.

"Don't you see, Put," I said, "that the Lord is on our side and she and that burnt brown cob of hers that has passed most of his life hitched to a sutler's wagon will be delivered into our hands?"

Old Put fairly neighed, his first real expression of triumph. He was as sure of the victory now as I was, and I had confidence in the judgment of my old comrade.

"Stop, stop!" I shouted to the girl. "If you don't stop, I'll shoot!"

I had a long barreled horse pistol, which I had drawn and was flourishing magnificently. I was within hearing though not shooting range, and I trusted that I would be able to frighten her into yielding.

But she did not stop. She had worn her whip into shreds, and thin red streams of blood zigzagged across the horse's sides, but she pounded on with the stump. I felt a genuine pity for her horse, hack though he was, but none for her.

CHAPTER II.

KEEPING A PRISONER.

No more gullies thrust themselves across the way, and she was within 20 feet of the wood. She took another hurried look at me, and seeing my rapid gain alarm appeared on her face. She drew a little toy pistol from the cloak she wore and leveled it at me, or at least that seemed to be her intention. I call it a toy pistol, because I, a full grown soldier, would have felt deep shame had I been caught with such a weapon in my possession. She pulled the trigger, and the bullet cut the uncomplaining air somewhere, but not in my neighborhood. This bombardment cost her at least 20 feet of gain, but she thrust the terrible weapon back in her cloak and galloped on, with Old Put thundering at her heels. Then she was into the wood, and I was not far behind, shouting to her to stop; that I would surely overtake her and she was merely wasting the breath of both our horses and our own. Still she paid no heed, guiding her horse between the trees and through the bushes with considerable skill.

But, seeing the wood thicken presently, I was tempted to laugh. It was obvious now that the end of the race had come and I was the winner. The wood became so dense, the bushes clustering in thickets and the vines interlacing from tree to tree, that it formed an impenetrable wall. What I had feared would help her had been my best ally.

She stopped short and sat stiffly on her horse, her back turned to me. I wondered if she would draw out that amazing pistol again and threaten me with it, but she made no such attempt, evidently having arrived at wisdom at last. She dropped the stump of her switch on the ground and kept the back of her head toward me. Some beams of sunshine came through the tall trees and gleamed across the long curls of tawny gold, tingeing them for the moment as if with fire.

I rode up by her side, and then, as she seemed to reprove me, I asked Old Put to take me around in front of her. There I could see her face. It was pale, sad and reproachful, and a tear ran down either cheek. For the moment I felt a little pity for her despite her perverse nature and all the trouble she had given me.

"I am sorry I have to do this," I said.

"Sorry for what?" she asked.

I saw that I had made a mistake. One should always be polite to a woman, but never apologetic.

"That I had to overtake you," I said.

"Yours is the better horse," she said, wiping away the tears with an angry little brush of the hand. "I like to ride, and I always enjoy a good race. That was the reason I challenged you to it, though I did not know you had such a good horse."

This was a new view of the case, but I had a thought, or, rather, a reflection.

"It was a good race," I said, "but wasn't that a false start?"

"How so?"

"Didn't you take an advantage?"

"I was entitled to it. I am a woman."

"So women expect to carry that rule even into warfare?"

"Certainly."

I was glad that I had never been forced to wage war with a woman before and hoped never to meet the necessity again. One likes to stick to the rules in military matters, and then he has some idea what to expect.

"The horses are very tired," I said.

"They look like it," said she.

The poor animals were panting, and their coats were damp. I took the reins of her horse from her hand and held them firmly in mine.

"What are you going to do?" she asked.

"I think I'd better hold the reins of both," I said. "Will you please dismount?"

I set her a good example by jumping down myself. She could not say that the prisoner was compelled to walk while the captor rode. I stepped forward to assist her, but again she refused my help and sprang to the ground unassisted.

Old Put gazed angrily at the girl who had struck him. Then he snorted with triumph and looked contemptuously at the horse at his side. The latter seemed to be ashamed of himself, and his attitude was apologetic, but he had done his best and therefore should not have been blamed.

"Come," I said, "we will get out of this wood and walk back across the fields. Walk by my side. I will watch you, as I do not want any more treachery."

I spoke with great sternness, as the mite of pity I felt when I saw the tears had gone. She obeyed with surprising meekness and walked beside me, while I led the horses, holding both bridles in one hand. I was glad that I had been so sharp with her, and I saw now it was the proper way with rebellious women. A man has only to show toward them a stern, unyielding temper, and they submit at once. She was crushed, and again that mite of pity rose up in my breast, for nearly always we feel a trace of sympathy for those whom we have vanquished.

Her head drooped, there was a faint appeal in her eyes, and her walk showed weariness. She seemed to have forgotten that her hair was loose down her back, for she let it hang in long curls of gold, burnished where the sunshine fell upon it, dark in the shadow.

The yellow of the sun was deepening into red, a sign that the afternoon was waning, and I was anxious about the future, for which, like a good soldier, I felt it my duty to provide. She must have seen the care in my face, for she asked:

"Are you thinking how we shall reach General Morgan?"

"General Morgan or some one else."

"Is it far to his camp?"

"I cannot say. I do not know where he is. The American camp just now is of a shifting character."

"To keep out of Tarleton's way, I suppose?"

"Either that or to find him."

Then she seemed to repent of her gibe at our running away from the British.

"But General Morgan is a brave man, I have heard," she said.

That warmed my heart.

"He is a brave man," I said, "and, what is more, he is a fine soldier and general."

"What a pity he is not on the right side!"

"Let's not quarrel about that again."

I thought I could afford to be generous. My situation was so superior to hers.

After that we walked along in silence for several minutes. The red tint of the sun deepened; faint shadows appeared in the blue velvet of the sky.

"I want to ask you one question," she said presently.

"There is nothing to prevent your asking it."

"But I want an answer, direct and correct."

"If it does not interfere with the progress of the campaign."

"I don't think it will do that."

"What is it?"

"What is your name?"

I laughed. It had never occurred to me before to tell her.

"It is true," I said, "that we have not had an introduction, though we are seeing a good deal of each other's society, but it is not too late. My name is Philip Marcel."

"Why, that sounds like French, and I thought you were an American."

"Both are true. I am an American, and the name Marcel used to be French. I am of French descent partly, and I may have British blood, too, though I shall not boast of it. There are many of us in South Carolina."

"But I thought you were northern. You said you had been serving in the northern army of the rebels"—

"The patriots."

"Well, the patriots, then, under Mr. Washington."

"General Washington!"

"Well, General Washington."

"Yes, I have been serving in the northern army of the patriots under General Washington, but he has sent me south with General Greene and the others, mostly southerners themselves, to redeem this part of the country from the British raiders. But I am a South Carolinian."

She relapsed into silence again, and I imitated her example. I had enough of importance anyhow to think about without talking to a girl, an enemy, but presently I recollected.

"Pardon me," I said, "but you have forgotten something too."

"What is it?"

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but when all other medicines failed, three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 58 pounds." It's absolutely guaranteed to cure Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Bronchitis and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at C. A. Wright's drug store.

Some men rob themselves when they call others hard names.

Scald head is an eczema of the scalp—very severe sometimes, but it can be cured. Doan's Ointment, quick and permanent in its results. At any drug store, 50 cents.

The ideal marriage is when a man, after five years of matrimony, can still give thanks for his wife.

What's the secret of happy, vigorous health? Simply keeping the bowels, the stomach, the liver and kidneys strong and active. Burdock Blood Bitters does it.

Wanted to Go to One of His Weddings.

The Rev. Dr. ——, a prominent clergyman, relates with much gusto the following story about himself. His present wife, by the way, is not the wife of his youth nor yet of his early manhood, but the lady of his third choice, and as a consequence the doctor's set of olive branches spring from divers maternal ancestry.

"Such a condition of affairs," said the doctor, "might at times become embarrassing except for the thorough amiability of all concerned. I confess, however, to a slightly disconcerted feeling when shortly before my third marriage I was approached by one of my daughters, a girl of 9 and one who called my second wife mother, with the question: 'Papa, will you let me go to see you married? I have never been at any of your weddings.'"—Fun.

Philadelphia Feline Duplicity.

It was during the natural history hour.

"Give me," asked the teacher, "an example of the alleged deceitful character of the cat."

"In restaurants it is sometimes said to pass itself off for a rabbit," answered the head boy.—Philadelphia Times.

MRS. S. A. POWERS

Dies at the Home of her Daughter, Mrs. A. J. Bigelow, in Adrian, after a Prolonged and Painful illness—Close of a Long and Consistent Christian Life.

Mrs. Annetta Powers passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. J. Bigelow, at 6 o'clock Tuesday evening. She had been confined to the house for six months and for over three months to her bed. As time went on she gradually grew worse until her sufferings were released by death. All through her illness her daughter has been constantly at her bedside, attending to her every want, and all was done for her that loved ones could do.

Miss Annetta Burwell was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Burwell, and was born at Barkhamsted, Litchfield county, Conn., Feb. 25, 1824. When 6 years of age her parents moved to Tallmadge, O., where she lived until she was 19

In 1843, Mrs. Powers, at the age of 19, identified herself with the M. E church and had been an earnest and active worker up to the time of her final illness. She was assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school and had charge of of classes for over thirty years. She was also an active member of the ladies benevolent and home missionary societies, retaining her membership until her death. She died as she had lived, an earnest, consistent Christian, and her trust in the Lord was complete.

The funeral will be held from the residence of Mrs. Bigelow, 28 Park street, at 2 o'clock standard, Friday afternoon.—Adrian Times.

Mrs. Powers was quite well known in Tecumseh, having visited here many times during the pastorate of her son-in-law, Rev. A. J. Bigelow, in Tecumseh She was loved alike by friend and acquaintance for her life was purely one of Christian consistancy. She lived as she believed, indeed no one can remember of her a single deed unchristianlike or unthoughtful.

So well thought of and respected by friends and acquaintances, yet the real beauty of her life could be found at home. A loving, thoughtful, self sacrificing wife, mother and companion, always sharing with the others in an uncomplaining thoughtful manner, her place cannot be filled, her kind words and useful council will never be forgotten. Mrs. Powers was as well prepared to go as anyone could be. Dying as she had lived, always cheerful in the resignation, "God's will be done."

John and Jonathan.

A very dramatic conversation, printed in the London Outlook, has the double purpose of satirizing both the English and American bent of mind and manners. The "smart Yankee" is represented as coming home to his admiring town and telling in somewhat exaggerated dialect what he thinks of his cousin over the water.

"Say, tell us," said a friend, "air the English so terrible slow and dull, after all?"

"Waal," replied the traveler, "I reckon so. I sat down one night in the parlor of a little village pub. Yes; it's a public house, but they call it pub in England.

"There wuss the boss of the pub, the local butcher, the local evurything, and there wuss myself. I just listened, though I can't say there wuss much to listen to. The talk ran like this:

" 'I 'ear as Ted Robinson got the sack last week,' remarked a villager.

" 'Ted Robinson?' said the other villager, deliberately puffing smoke.

" 'Yuss; I 'ear so. Ted Robinson got the sack las' week.'

"A pause. More smoke.

" 'Got the sack, eh?'

" 'Yuss; I 'ear as 'ow 'e did.'

"A longer pause.

" 'Las' week, was it, 'e got the sack?'

" 'I 'ear as 'ow it was las' week.'

"A long, long pause.

" 'Ah! I 'eard that a Friday.'

"And," continued the Yankee, "not a soul among 'em smiled. It was their reg'lar mental diet. Oh, yes, smart men the English are and no mistake."

Chinese Criticism of Our Alphabet.

The high class Chinaman, speaking through his interpreter, was giving the eminent American visitor his impressions of the English language.

"I cannot understand," he said, "how anybody ever finds time to learn it. Take that singularly formed letter in your alphabet, for instance, the letter 'g.' What an awkward and ill shaped character it is! What is the significance of that little curling projection at the upper end of it? I have never seen anybody who could tell me. Then, again, when the learner has familiarized himself with that letter and can recognize it at sight he learns that it is only a part of a word and that it enters into the composition of thousands of words. It has different pronunciations and sometimes is not pronounced at all, being entirely silent. Now, when you see one of our Chinese characters you know at once what it is. It is a wonder to me that your people do not discard the cumbersome forms of your written language and learn our simpler and more easily understood system."

The eminent American could only bow his head in humiliation and promise to bring the matter before the educational authorities of his native land. —Chicago Tribune.

Too Much For the Cab.

One of the wealthiest wine merchants in Paris and also one of its stoutest citizens was the hero of an episode which caused much laughter in the Rue Princesse.

M. R., the corpulent man, hailed a cab, which came alongside the curb. He opened the door and, getting a purchase on the railing of "cabby's" seat, tried to hoist himself in.

But his weight was too much for the vehicle, which careened over and, as the sidewalk is very narrow, crashed into a window of a printing office. M. R. had meanwhile collapsed on the ground, and "cabby" by a miracle clung to his uncertain perch.

Then followed a stormy period. The printer came out and wanted to have the price of his broken window, the fat man tried to get the cabby to drive him away, and cabby refused to take any such load on board.

Finally all parties adjourned to the police station, where the difficulty was straightened out, and M. R. set to work looking for another cab.—Paris Temps.

GOOD DESCRIPTION OF MANILA.

Exceedingly Interesting Letter from Walter E. Norris.

Headquarters Dept of the Visayas.
Iloilo, Panay, P. I., Jan 7, 1901.

EDITOR HERALD:

Just as the first gray streaks of dawn appeared on the morning of October 20th we started once more, this time for Manila. The first two or three days we had the first unpleasant weather of the whole journey, a hard blow with rain and weather generally disagreeable. Sometimes we made very little headway because of the strong wind, but we passed through without a shipwreck. All day on October 24th we were in sight of Luzon and searched the shore lines closely for a glimpse of Aguinaldo, but it was our misfortune not to be so favored. The night of October 24th we entered the channel and the next morning came to a standstill in Manila Bay where we could survey the spot made famous by Dewey's victory.

We anchored several miles from Manila and from where we were gained a good view of the city, which, spread as it is, along the shore considerably and with its numerous large cathedrals looming above everything else, looked like a city of considerable size and not an undesirable place in which to live.

About noon we went ashore, sought a hotel and commenced a new existence. Hitherto we had been living on the ship with American food and American cooking. But now we must bid the faithful "Thomas" goodbye after having spent thirty-seven pleasant days upon her, and try the Spanish style which was indeed a great contrast. Let anyone who is dissatisfied with even the poorest cooking in United States, come to the Philippines and try the Spanish ways, and I think his first impressions will be such that he will begin to think of home and wonder if he is to take his choice between starvation and Spanish food. But "practice makes perfect" which adage we soon proved to be true by practicing on Spanish pan (bread) which is baked in the shape of a hard roll, without butter, until we began to get used to it and soon forgot for the time being that we had ever seen anything better. The landlord, too, having a great many American guests, did his very best to please, soon making American bread and catering to the wants of his guests in many little ways.

If the Spanish do not suit the Americans in their ways, I think it is from a lack of knowledge rather than anything else for I never saw a more willing people than the average Spaniards appear to be. They seem to do their best to please, which in a great many cases is not a great deal for an American with an American's tastes. In most cases the hotels in this country are slow, dirty and high-priced, although it is possible to obtain good food and clean quarters. It will take American hustle to put the cities of the Philippines in proper shape, Good American hotels are only one of the many improvements needed in this country. There are a few American stores here which have started in the last two years, whose volume of business has grown to a great extent.

Manila is situated on both banks of the Pasig river. On one side is the old walled city, on the other the new, most important and up-to date part of the city. The two are connected by means of a suspension bridge—the Bridge of Spain. The old city is surrounded by a stone wall about 20 feet high, which is itself surrounded by a moat. At the summit of this wall were placed cannon along at intervals, the greater number of which are now removed. The old city is made up to a great extent of cathedrals, nunneries and other property of the Catholic church. It is very very dilapidated, containing many ruins and is the most undesirable part of the city in which to live as, aside from its general appearance, the heat makes it more unpleasant, the wall surrounding it preventing the breezes from relieving the heat

Throughout the whole city are pretty plazas and some very nice scenery. The streets are narrow, as they are in all Eastern cities. Very few four-wheeled rigs are seen with the exception of a few wealthy turn-outs and occasionally one of Uncle Sam's lumber wagons. Many of the streets are paved with rough stone. There is also a street car line which is strictly "bum." The cars are each drawn by two very small ponies who, to all appearances are about ready to lie down and give up the ghost. The cars are a slow means of travel, going but little faster than a person can walk so they carry very few people other than the natives Manila has a good system of waterworks and is lighted by electricity. The principal street, the Escolta, has quite the appearance of an up-to-date city. It is usually pretty well crowded with carriages and foot-passengers, the rigs mostly quilezes and carrametas—two-wheeled carriages carrying two or four passengers.

There are some Protestant churches or missions and a thriving Y. M. C. A. in Manila, but the chimes from all quarters and seemingly at all hours, are a constant reminder that the Catholic religion still has full sway.

The dwellings are usually of two stories, the upper being always the best and most desirable to live in. This story, as a rule, projects far enough beyond the lower to cover the walk below. This together with the narrowness of the streets, keeps them shaded the greater part of the day. Many of the dwellings are built around an open center or court-yard. The court-yard in the hotel at which I stopped contained the chickens and some animals belonging to the establishment. The lower story of some of the houses is used as stables for the ponies. The windows are made of lattice work with sea-shells placed in the square openings. This lets in a dull light when the windows are closed and keeps the rooms as cool as possible during the heat of the day. The roof is usually made of tile and during my stay in Manila the vegetation could be seen growing out of these roofs, which gives an idea of the productiveness of this climate—heat and plenty of rain. During the time I was in Manila it rained very often, but there were no great floods such as I have heard of, but the rainy season was just closing at that time, November 1st.

The Pasig river has some interesting points about it for a stranger. In it every morning the natives bring their ponies for a bath. Everything and everybody native to this country seem to love the water. The river is usually full and over-crowded with river boats, small steamers, sailboats and cascoes. The casco is a long boat with an oval covering or roof of bamboo It is started in the water by means of a pole long enough to reach the bottom of the river, which the boatman places in the water and, by putting his whole weight upon it, pushes the casco through the water. These cascoes are used to carry goods to and from ocean steamers and to places which cannot be reached by larger boats.

Another interesting sight in Manila is the carabao cart. This is a vehicle having two heavy wheels and a platform, a kind of truck. Some of them are made in a very crude way. They are used for drawing rice and heavy articles, as the lumber wagon is used at home. Sometimes a long procession of carabaos may be seen coming down the street with loads of rice. Some of these carabaos have horns four feet or more across. They are very slow animals, something like our oxen. But they can show the swiftness of which they are capable when, after being kept from water longer than they think proper, they suddenly take it into their heads to do as they please and dash down the street, overcoming all obstacles, sometimes destroying property, until they reach their destination, the much coveted water, their natural element; unless the bullet from the gun of some guard or police puts an end to their antics before they reach the water.

The most pleasant and prettiest part of Manila is the Lunetta. It is outside the wall along the beach where the cool breezes blow. Here is a fine driveway, also a pleasant walk lined with palms on either side. Late in the afternoon this place is frequented by the coaches and quilizes of Manila people who are out for a cool and pleasant drive while old Sol is a little merciful. The Lunetta also contains a band stand where the evening may be enjoyed listening to concerts by the different regimental bands.

There are very few amusements in Manila suitable to the fun-loving element of the American, two or three poor class theaters being the principal Spanish amusement aside from the cock fights ever present in all Spanish countries. But Uncle Sam's soldiers and government employees intersperse these with American games, base ball, foot ball, boxing contests, etc, and in various ways succeed in passing the time when not busy at their labors.

My impressions in general concerning Manila were much better than I expected, having heard practically nothing in its favor and so much against it, as the distorted stories told in the States are usually quite unfavorable to this country. While Manila is by no means one of the finest of cities, I do not think it merits at all some of the fairy tales about it which are spread throughout the United States.

Very respectfully,
WALTER E. NORRIS.

KNOWING HOW PAYS.

The Moral of this Old, Old Anecdote will Save a Heap of Trouble and a Pile of Money.

Something had gone wrong with some simple part of a stationary engine and the stoker could not fix it. After spending a day or two on it, he was forced to ask the aid of a more competent workman. He failed also and someone suggested the employment of a local celebrity, a sort of tinker at any mechanical job. There is generally one in every locality. He gave two or three raps with his hammer and touched up a rod or two when the pounding or whatever ailed the machine ceased. When asked to make out his bill, it read as follows: Fixing engine, $ 50; knowing how, $10; total, $10.50.

This anecdote clearly demonstrates that it pays to know how. Engineer J. J. Jeffries, of the Royal Cycle Works, at Marshall, Mich., residing in that city at No. 141 S. Marshall St., tells in the following of his experience with the little conqueror. It will pay you to know how he got rid of a troublesome companion. He says:

"My kidneys troubled me more or less for years and finally became so bad that I was compelled to give up locomotive engineering on account of the jarring of the train and seek employment as a stationary engineer. When the attacks of kidney complaint occurred I could not rest or lie comfortably in any position and often in the mornings after a restless night, I was more tired and worn out than when I went to bed. When the attacks were at their height I was unable to stoop or lift anything and, despite the use of every remedy that came to my notice, preparations recommended to me by my acquaintances, numerous plasters of all kinds worn day and night, I was unsuccessful in procuring anything to help me until I tried Doan's Kidney Pills. The first box helped me. I steadily improved while taking the second and I stopped the treatment when I had finished the third as I considered there was no more necessity for continuing the remedy."

"UNDER THE SUN."

The men who have gone before us
Have sung the songs we sing.
The words of our clamorous chorus,
They were heard of the ancient king.

The chords of the lyre that thrill us,
They were struck in the years gone by,
And the arrows of death that kill us
Are found where our fathers lie.

The vanity sung of the preacher
Is vanity still today;
The moan of the stricken creature
Has rung in the woods alway.

But the songs are worth resinging,
With the change of no single note,
And the spoken words are ringing
As they rang in the years remote.

There is no new road to follow, love,
Nor need there ever be,
For the old, with its hill and hollow, love,
Is enough for you and me.

—Charles R. Bacon in Century.

WHAT MODERN SAILORS FEAR

Not Winds and Seas, but an Explosion Which Scuttles the Ship.

"Boiler explosions are the terror of the seafaring man," said an old time deep water captain. "Such a thing is bad enough on dry land, but imagine a catastrophe of that kind at sea. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it means the absolute wiping out of the craft itself and every soul on board.

"The average landsman would be greatly shocked in looking over the maritime records to see how many vessels disappear each year and leave absolutely no clew to their fate. They run well up to the hundred mark, and such a mystery is not to be explained away by storms. A Chinese typhoon may swoop down like lightning out of a clear sky and tear a ship to pieces, but some floating wreckage is sure to tell the tale. A boiler explosion, on the contrary, will blow a hole as big as a railroad tunnel right through the center of the hull, and the stricken vessel simply goes down like a shot. There is no time to unfasten a boat from the davits or cut loose a spar.

"In the opinion of seamen, that is the story of at least 90 per cent of the ships that leave port and are never heard of again. Luckily the modern system of marine boiler inspection is extremely strict and thorough, but it is impossible to absolutely prevent carelessness and fraud, and often enough, no doubt, the fault lies with the engineer.

"There is an old story of a drunken Scotchman who mistook the thermometer for the steam gage and 'cussed out' the stokers because he couldn't get the pressure above 80. That yarn will hardly hold water, but I've seen cases almost as bad. I am glad to say, however, that during the past 10 years there has been a steady diminution of the number of vessels which 'mysteriously disappear.' That is due, beyond all question, to the increased stringency of boiler inspection and the greater strictness of examinations before a license is issued to engineers. Nevertheless there is still considerable room for improvement in both branches."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Russell and His Songs.

The late Henry Russell, the veteran English composer of "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," and of more than 800 other songs which were popular in their day, had many amusing experiences when he sang his ballads on various occasions.

Once, after rendering "Woodman, Spare That Tree," a gentleman rose in the gallery and asked, "Was the tree spared?" On being answered in the affirmative he, with a sigh of heartfelt relief, exclaimed, "Thank God for that!"

After singing the song of "The Dog Carlo," who jumped off an Atlantic liner and saved a child's life, Russell was gravely waited upon by a couple of Yorkshire miners, who begged him for a pup.

One of Russell's songs, of which the words were changed in accordance with the altered conditions, is our national anthem, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean."—Argonaut.

To Rest Her Mind.

"Your little birdie has been very, very ill," she wrote to the young man. "It was some sort of nervous trouble, and the doctors said I must have perfect rest and quiet and that I must think of nothing. And all the time, dear George, I thought constantly of you."

The young man read it over and then read it through again very slowly and put it in his pocket and went out under the silent stars and kept thinking and thinking and thinking. He only kept on thinking.—London Answers.

It's Easy To Take

Thin, pale, anæmic girls need a fatty food to enrich their blood, give color to their cheeks and restore their health and strength. It is safe to say that they nearly all reject fat with their food.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

is exactly what they require; it not only gives them the important element (cod-liver oil) in a palatable and easily digested form, but also the hypophosphites which are so valuable in nervous disorders that usually accompany anæmia.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is a fatty food that is more easily digested than any other form of fat. A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health. You can get it in this way.

A Blow From Behind.

"One winter, when things were rather slow in New York city—it was just before John L.'s time"—said the old pugilist, "we made up a little party and hired a hall in one of the fishing towns not far away. We advertised a prize of $10 for any one who could stay on his feet against our men for five rounds. It was safe money, although when two or three of the boats came in at the same time we had all we could handle.

"But one night a fellow as big as the side of a house came along, and we smelled trouble. We put him up against the heaviest man in our party, who, though he only tipped the scales at 180 pounds, had two good hands and a head that you couldn't hurt with a piledriver. But the stranger was no slouch, and at the end of the fourth round we began to worry about the tenner.

"The ring was on the stage at the front of the hall, and at the rear of the stage there were two windows. So I says to our man as I sponged his mouth, 'Work him over to one of the windows.'

"It wasn't no easy job, but he did it before time was half up, and as the duffer backed up near the window he got a crack in the head from behind that dumped him in a heap. That's the way we saved our ten.

"But the funny part of it is that our champeen had caught the local guy on the jaw the same moment, and we could never persuade him that it wasn't himself that secured the knockout."—New York Sun.

An Animated Parcel.

Duncan Ross, the Scotch athlete, brought to New York with him some years ago a valuable bull terrier, famous for the blue ribbons he had won in India. Mr. Ross lived across the Harlem river, but his business took him daily to the lower part of New York. Invariably he was accompanied to his office by the bull terrier. As it was known that he always came down town on the elevated railroad, his friends wondered, knowing the embargo placed upon dogs, how he procured transit for the bull terrier.

Their repeated questioning finally persuaded him to reveal the secret, and he invited them all to the office one evening just as he was starting for home. He took out of his desk a stout piece of wrapping paper and, opening it out flat, spread it on the floor. Then he whistled to the dog, and the bull terrier walked to the center of the paper and curled up in a limp lump. Mr. Ross then produced a piece of stout cord and made a very neat parcel of his pet and tucked it under his arm.

"I have carried this parcel up and down town for two years," he said, "and no one has ever had the faintest suspicion of its animated contents. Clive is so well trained that he never makes a sound or moves a muscle. I leave a little opening at one end of the package, so that he has plenty of air."

The Eagle and the Turkey.

The turkey is our great national bird instead of the eagle, which I don't take much stock in. Turkeys are good to eat. Eagles are only fit to put as stamps on coin. The eagle is a ravenous, vicious thief. There is nothing brave or good about the eagle. The eagle cannot be tamed and is of no earthly use to any one anywhere at any time or place. A hawk is braver than the eagle. If the eagle had the courage in proportion to his size of the sparrow, he would be a wonder.

It was a mistake—a sad, pitiful blunder—to make the eagle our national bird. And a movement should be put on foot now to place the turkey on our coins and remove the eagle from where he has no business to be. A bird so useless should not be worshiped as the eagle is. The turkey is a handsomer and in every way a better bird. On al holiday occasions the turkey is our foremost fowl and furnishes the most amount of delicious food. Thanksgiving and the Christmas holidays would be lonesome without the turkey.—Practical Poultryman.

Called His Papa Down.

Little Willy is a bright boy and a saucy boy. His apt answers have often turned away wrath and often turned it upon him strongly. The other day his father was reprimanding him for some misdeed, and Willy was answering very saucily.

The father became very angry and, seizing the youngster by the collar, said: "See here, young man, you must not talk like that to me. I never gave my father impudence when I was a boy."

Willy was not feazed at all. With a cherubic smile he looked into papa's eyes and said, "But, papa, maybe your father didn't need it." 'Twas all off. Willy escaped punishment, while papa retired to another room.—Albany Journal.

METHODS OF SUICIDE.

How Desperate Persons Adopt Prevailing Styles of Destruction.

"The remarkable methods several suicides have adopted in this city recently call attention to the fact that methods of self destruction are largely matters of suggestion," said a doctor. "When a man gets in that condition where he wants to die he has little inventive ability and adopts the method that has been brought to his mind. You will notice that after one person kills himself with acid there follows a long list of acid suicides. It is the same with any unusual method. One person gets up an original way, and that inspires the next one to try his hand until we have a whole series of such grewsome novelties.

"I have proved this theory. Several years ago I was discussing this feature of suicide with several friends, including the coroner. They ridiculed my theory. I offered to prove it. It happened that shooting and hanging were popular just then. I wrote an article for a newspaper on the horrors of strangulation and pistol wounds and explained the ease with which one could kill himself with prussic acid. Death from prussic acid, you know, is absolutely instantaneous and, many believe, painless. There had not been a suicide with this acid for more than a year, but within a week after the article was published there were four, and one of the unfortunates had clippings of my article in his pocket.

"Of course I was accused of killing these four by suggestion, but I was never arrested and do not feel guilty, for when once a person has decided to kill himself the method is a slight matter. No person in his right mind will commit suicide. We all know in our sane moments of easy ways to end life, but when in the suicidal frame of mind nature seems to rob us of our reason in this direction, as if in a desperate hope of preventing the sacrifice."—New York Mail and Express.

HOUSES ON "MADE" GROUND

The Reason They Teem With Malaria and Noxious Gases.

Good gravel has so largely come into request that many suburban lands with that valuable substratum are quarried to a considerable depth before being sold on building leases. But it is essential to restore a level surface, as even the most speculative builder would hesitate to run up "neat villa residences" in deep holes. The owner frequently gets over this difficulty by allowing urban refuse to be shot into the excavation; in many cases he even exacts a small sum for every load tilted on his ground. The surface being thus leveled, a year or two are allowed for the soil to sink and become compact. Occasionally grass is sown to give a natural appearance to the spot.

All is now in readiness for the builder, who proceeds to lay the foundation for his "terraces," "avenues" and "gardens," which he subsequently advertises as "on gravel soil." So they are, but between their ground floors and the gravel lies a thick stratum of partially decomposed rubbish, teaming with malaria, and not for many years will the deposits cease to give off noxious gases.

But the tenant, coming from a different locality, knows nothing of the "making" process to which the plot has been subjected. When, therefore, ill health dogs his family, he puts it down to defective drainage or some other structural deficiency and spends money freely on remedial measures without the least benefit. All this misery might be prevented if it were legally prohibited to build human habitations on decomposed refuse until the soil had acquired a wholesome character.—London Globe.

How They Treated Washington.

As an example of the progress of medicine during the last century The Medical Record cites the case of Washington's last illness. He died of laryngeal diphtheria, and the treatment was, it would seem, for an old man sick with a disease, very exhausting to the vitality. It consisted in the abstraction of between two and three quarts of blood, the administration of about 20 grains of calomel and 6 grains of tartar emetic and an injection, with external application of blister. And yet so strong was Washington's constitution that he survived this treatment for 24 hours.

One Coming.

"Could you tell me the meaning of the word 'cataclysm?' " he asked of the street car passenger who was folding up his newspaper.

"Are you going to ride two or three blocks farther?" was queried in reply.

"Yes, sir."

"Then you'll see one. The conductor has carried that sharp nosed woman two streets past where she wanted to get off already, and she'll wake up soon and start a cataclysm that'll probably jump the car off the track!"—Washington Post.

He Got Some Work to Do.

"Prisoner," said the learned magistrate to a lazy fellow before him, "this is the third time you've been here."

"But, your honor," pleaded the prisoner, "I've been trying to get work, but couldn't."

"You wouldn't work if you could get it."

"Yes, I would, your honor."

"What kind of work?"

"Anything, your honor, so long as it was honest work."

"What kind of wages?"

"Wages is no object, your honor; all I want is work, with food and clothing and shelter."

"And you'd work if you had that sort of a job?"

"Indeed, I would, your honor; only try me," and the tears actually came into his eyes.

"Very well," said the magistrate kindly, "we'll give you a job with shelter, food and clothing combined. Six months' hard labor. Next case."—Tit-Bits.

GET STRONG

Vinol Makes Weak People Strong.

WE GUARANTEE IT WILL DO SO.

WE KNOW OF NO TONIC OR REBUILDER LIKE IT.

Vinol does create strength.

We know that and have proved it in many instances.

The reason Vinol rejuvenates and strengthens a person is that it acts directly upon the stomach, strengthening and toning up this great vital organ and enabling it to obtain for itself, from the food that is taken into it, the elements which are required to make firm healthy flesh and muscle tissue, sound bone structure and pure healthy blood.

Vinol does this in a scientific way and is enabled to do it because it contains, dissolved in a delicate mild wine, in a highly concentrated state, the active principles of cod-liver oil.

Vinol does not contain any of the grease that formerly characterized cod-liver oil, hence is free from all the objectionable features which made it impossible for patients to take or retain that vile-smelling remedy into their stomach.

Vinol in its favorable action upon the stomach and other organs of the body acts also in a beneficial way upon the nerves and brain, and will be found to be invaluable to brain workers as well as body workers.

The following letter is from a well-known authoress. It reads as follows:

"I wish to acknowledge the receipt of the Vinol and testify to its great benefits. Since taking it I am much improved in health, and during the intense heat of last August I should not have been able to continue in my literary work if it had not been for the strengthening properties of Vinol. Yours in gratitude."—ELLA STARR, 106 W. 82d St., N. Y. City.

We wish any one suffering from weakness, a demoralized condition of the nerves, or a susceptibility to wasting diseases, to call on us and hear what we have to say in regard to Vinol.

Try it on our recommendation, and if you find it does not do everything we claim for it, we will gladly refund to you the amount you have paid us.

HAPPY GOVERNOR BLISS

He Had His Work All Done "Up to Date" When He Left for Washington.

CASE FOR THE COURTS TO DECIDE

Proposal for a Change in the Method of Pay for Legislators—Prospects Ahead.

Lansing, Mich., March 5.—When Governor Bliss left for Washington last Saturday to participate in the inauguration ceremonies he was in a happier frame of mind than at any time since his election as chief executive. The reason for this was that, so far as his action is concerned, the troublesome matter of the make up of the state tax commission was disposed of, and all other grave questions of state importance that have thus far arisen had been passd upon by him. All of the acts thus far passed by the legislature, with one or two minor exceptions, had been examined and approved by him and deposited in the office of the secretary of state as required by law, and the decks of the executive office were practically cleared for the first time since the present administraion assumed control of affairs. Many of these matters, especially the responsibility of selecting suitable tax commissioners, had weighed very heavily upon the governor, who experienced great relief when a solution of the problems was finally reached. The siege had been a very long and hard one, and the change and rest that will result from the trip to the national Capitol will undoubtedly be very beneficial.

Question That Is Still Open.

Although Governor Bliss and the senate finally got together in this matter, and the latter confirmed the nomination of A. F. Freeman of Manchester for the term of two years, and William T. Dust of Detroit for the term of four years, the question of exactly who will constitute the commission during the ensuing two years is still an open question. There is no doubt, of course, that James C. McLaughlin of Muskegon, who was several weeks ago confirmed for the term of six years, and Commissioner Freeman will serve during this period, but the courts will have to decide between Commissioner Robert Oakman and William T. Dust. Commissioner Oakman claims that he was confirmed legally two years ago for the full term and consequently has four more years to serve, contending that the action of the senate in subsequently reconsidering his confirmation was clearly legal, and in this contention he is supported by excellent legal authority. He declines to retire from the commission, but has arranged with Mr. Dust to commence friendly proceedings to test the title to the office. Attorney General Oren is said to be confident that Oakman's position is not well taken and that the courts will settle the matter in favor of Dust. However, it is not always easy to predict the outcome of cases of this kind. In the meantime the work of the commission will be pushed with vigor, all of the commissioners, whether de jure or de facto, being agreed and working together with the utmost harmony. Mr. Dust will not resign his position as assessor of the city of Detroit until his title to the state office is affirmed by the courts.

State Tax Commission Employes.

The legislature has finally come to the relief of the employes of the state tax commission, and authorized the state auditors to provide for the payment of their salaries, nothing have been paid them for either services or expenses since the end of December. This refers only to persons employed on the work of appraising the value of property paying specific taxes. In making this adjustment, however, the state auditors used the pruning knife very freely, cutting all salaries in excess of $150 per month 33 1-3 per cent., and all below $125 per month 20 per cent. It should be borne in mind that this force consists largely of expert engineers who were being paid from $250 to $450 per month. Those receiving the smaller salaries were expert stenographers.

Premiums for the State Fair.

Members of the state agricultural society who were before the house committees on ways and means and state affairs a few days ago in the interests of the bill appropriating $5,000 per year to be offered for premiums on Michigan products exhibited at the state fair, are very hopeful that the bill will become a law. Most of the other states of the Union give substantial aid to their state fairs, and consider the investment an exceptionally good one. Notwithstanding the confidence of the state fair officials, there are members of the committees who do not take kindly to the bill.

Round-Up Farmers' Institute.

The universal opinion is that the round-up farmers' institute which was held at the Agricultural college last week was the most satisfactory ever held, both in point of attendance and the class of work done. A total of fifty-one counties were officially represented, and at a number of meetings the attendance exceeded 850. That these institutes are accomplishing a valuable work for the state there can be no doubt. A layman who has been engaged in the work ever since its inception several years ago informed me a day or two since that the advancement noted in the methods employed by farmers in various sections since the first institute was held in their midst is simply marvelous, and can be appreciated only by one who is aware of the conditions prevailing then and now. It is proposed to increase the value of the general plan of institute work by establishing a reading course, lectures to be prepared for distribution by experts in various lines, so that farmers and their children throughout the state may have the advantages of a rudimentary education in lines of special interest and value to them.

Compensation of the Solons.

In all probability the taxpayers of the state will be given an opportunity this spring to vote on the question of changing the method of compensating members of the legislature. The house has passed the Dingley bill, proposing a constitutional amendment authorizing the payment of $1,000 per term of two years together with an allowance of 10 cents per mile for the number of miles actually traveled in coming to and going home from the capitol; payment to be for only one trip each way. It is believed this resolution will be passed by the senate this week in order that the necessary notice may be given before the April election. The discussion of the resolution in the house took a wide range, covering the value of the services of members of the legislature from various standpoints, but the most interesting thing developed was the fact that most of the members who talked were inclined to the opinion that the people will not indorse the proposition. Representative Combs of Lenawee was one who expressed this opinion, and in support of his belief stated that at a recent county institute in that county, which boasts more than thirty granges, this subject was considered and there was adopted a resolution expressing it as the sense of the meeting that the compensation should not exceed $650 per term. If the farmers of the state genrally are of this opinion, the "finisk" of the resolution can be readily detected with the naked eye.

Pingree's Charges Against Freeman.

The report of the joint committee which investigated ex-Governor Pingree's charges against Warden Freeman and the management of the Marquette prison, which was submitted to both houses and by them adopted a few days ago, is an interesting document. While the committee found that the warden had been raising horses, bloodhounds and Belgian hares on the prison grounds, it reached the conclusion that this had been done without expense of the state, but was nevertheless unbusinesslike and should be stopped. The prison was found to be kept in most excellent condition, and the convicts uniformly testified to the good quality of the food served. The discipline was found to be severe, but as none of the members of the committee were experienced in the management of prisons, they were inclined to defer to the judgment of the prison board as to the necessity for the methods employed. The opinion was expressed that the well behaved convicts might once more be fed in the dining room instead of in their cells as has been the custom since the deputy warden was attacked and severely injured in the dining room some two years ago, although Warden Freeman believes that the change would seriously affect the prison discipline, his views being that it is necessary to treat all the prisoners alike in this respect. Concerning the charges of intoxication on the part of the warden the committee found that his lapses in this particular were more occasional than chronic and that he is making an honest effort to overcome this weakness. In conclusion the committee said that the question of retaining Warden Freeman may safely be left for settlement with the board of prison managers, all of whom have the best interests of the prison at heart. Inasmuch as the warden has the support of all the members of the board there is no probability that he will be disturbed.

Will Settle Down to Business.

This week the legislature has settled down to business and proposes to make the fur fly. Not a great deal has been accomplished during the past fortnight. When the limit for the introduction of bills expired on Feb. 20 it was necessary to adjourn until the following Tuesday in order to give the desk clerks time to book and arrange the great flood of bills that poured in during the two days previous. Last week a great majority of the members were delegates to the state convention, and it was, therefore, deemed necessary to adjourn Wednesday night for the week in order that they might attend that gathering. From now on, however, "business" will be the watchword, and it is confidently predicted that excellent and rapid work in the line of killing scores of worthless bills that are in the hands of the various committees or on the table will be done, whatever may be the rate of progress of the many meritorious measures. The leaders of the two houses still believe that final adjournment will be reached by May 1.

Diekema's Prospective Post.

In view of his prospective appointment to a place on the Spanish war claims committee, President G. J. Diekema, of the Pan-American exposition commission, expects to hand in his resignation upon the return of Governor Bliss from Washington. It is understood to be decided that E. A. Foote, a prominent manufacturer of Grand Rapids, will be his successor.

Poor Show for the Fish Bill.

The indications are that the so-called game warden's fish bill will not become a law, much opposition to it having been encountered. At any rate there is sure to be eliminated the section requiring that a rod license be procured by all brook trout and grayling fishermen over 16 years of age, the license fee to be 50 cents. Both the commercial fishermen and state fish commission are opposed to the section which prohibits fishing with nets in any of the waters of the state outside of the great lakes. This would dispose of the somewhat extensive fishing interests in Saginaw river, and would also interfere with the contract which the state commission has with the national commission whereby the latter is permitted to catch fish for spawn in Detroit river.

Statistics on Insurance.

The commissioner of insurance today completed a computation which shows that in 1900 the stock or old line insurance companies wrote 19,613 policies, aggregating $29,043,449.99 in Michigan, and at the close of the year had in force 83,218 policies, representing $158,174,154.99 of insurance. The premiums collected during the year amounted to $5,594,510.64, and the losses incurred to $2,197,740.56. The industrial companies wrote $8,769,849 of insurance during the year, and had $16,543,402 in force in the state at the close of the year. They collected premiums aggregating $504,084, and paid losses of $119,136. The casualty, fidelity and plate glass companies collected $598,491 in premiums, and paid losses amounting to $241,473, their total business in the state aggregating $112,141,430.

Stalled by Snow.

Montreal, March 5.—The Delaware & Hudson train, which left Montreal Sunday night, has been stalled by snow at Stottsville, and the same company's train which left New York Sunday night is detained at Rouse's Point, not being able to get through.

To Be Held Memorial Day.

New York, March 5.—At the annual meeting of the Harlem Regatta association, held Monday night, it was decided to hold the annual regatta on Memorial day, May 30. The national course of the Harlem river, off the speedway, was selected.

Spanish Cabinet.

Madrid, March 5.—Senor Villaverde was busy all day Monday conferring with the leading members of the various political parties regarding the personnel of the new cabinet. It is understood that he has offered the foreign office portfolio to the Duke of Mandas, Spanish ambassador to Great Britain, and is awaiting his reply before submitting the full list to the queen regent.

SCORED THE BRITISH

An American Officer in Boer Army Uses Bitter Language

BRITISH WILL NEVER WIN

Declares That Boer Women Have Been Misused by British and That if Milner Is Ever Caught He Will Not Live Twelve Hours.

London, March 5.—W. E. King of Atlanta, Ga., who says he was formerly a lieutenant in the Seventy-first regiment in the New York state national guard, while in Cuba, has just returned to London from South Africa after serving for more than a year as aide-de-camp to Gen. Delarey, the Boer commander, whom he left Jan. 29. In the course of an interview with a representative of the Associated Press Monday, Mr. King said: "At the time I left Gen. Delarey the Boers had 21,000 men in the field and sufficient small arm ammunition to last four years. I am going to the continent to assist in the endeavor to get more Krupp guns and shells. Monday morning I received a telegram from Col. Dubois, dated Paris, saying 'good news from South Africa.'

"The British will never meet the Boers. Rumors of surrender are absurd. Gen. Louis Botha is generally mistrusted; but, even if he were to surrender, that would not entail the surrender of the other commanders."

He spoke in the most bitter terms of the British, saying among other things: "If we ever catch Milner he won't live 12 hours. He will get such a swift injection of lead that he won't know what struck him."

Mr. King declared that the British ill-treated the Boer women. He described several occasions on which American allies of the Boers, dressed in Khaki, entered the British lines at Johannesburg and other places, secured orders for ammunition and other supplies and then drove off with them to the Boer camps.

Colesburg, March 5.—The blame for Gen. De Wet's escape is placed on the system rather than on the commanders pursuing him. It has been impossible to direct the operations by telegraph, and the feeling is that greater discretion should be allowed commanders in the field.

Gen. De Wet marched five miles a day faster than the swiftest British column. Although the Boers are now demoralized, it is believed they will quickly recover if they are allowed a few days rest.

MILITIA CALLED OUT

To Prevent the Lynching of an Old Man at Tipton, Ind.

Tipton, Ind., March 5.—Monday night the police discovered that a mob had been quietly organized to lynch R. H. Edmonds, a well-known citizen, aged 65 years. He was lodged in jail yesterday morning charged with taking improper liberties with the 11-year-old daughter of W. H. Ross, a prominent citizen. The sheriff communicated by wire with Gov. Durbin, and as a result the latter has ordered the local militia company out to guard the prisoner.

It is alleged that Edmonds called at the Ross home last Friday to use the telephone and finding the girl alone he conducted himself improperly toward her. When the child's mother returned home and was told of what had happened, she secured a revolver and called upon Edmonds, who denied the whole story. The mother then attempted to draw the revolver that was concealed in her apron, but it dropped to the floor as he hastened away. The facts did not come to light until yesterday when Edmonds was arrested. Public indignation is aroused and considerable bad talk has been indulged in.

Signed One Hundred Bills.

Washington, March 5.—President McKinley affixed his signature to about a hundred bills passed by congress while at the capitol Monday. The greater portion of them were of a private character. The more important were: The District of Columbia code bill, naval appropriation bills, the bills making appropriations for the postal service and for sundry civil expenses of the government establishing a national bureau of standards, the St. Louis fair bill, amending the act authorizing the receipt of United States gold coin in exchange for gold bars, the bill requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to make full reports of all accidents to the interstate commerce commission; for a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas; amending the act making a provision for the civil government of Alaska.

Would Like to Get It.

London, March 5.—The chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, replying to a question in the house of commons as to whether the government proposed to recover from the British Chartered South African Co. the claims of the Transvaal resulting from the Jameson raid, said the claim for £1,000,000 for a moral and intellectual damage was illegal. Regarding the balance, £627,938, of this claim the colonial office was taking the advice of the law officers of the crown. He, as chancellor, would be delighted to find there was a chance of obtaining money from this unexpected source.

New Cases of Smallpox.

New York, March 5.—Eleven new cases of smallpox were reported Monday from Brooklyn and two from Manhattan. Three deaths from the disease occurred at the smallpox hospital.

On a Strike.

Buffalo, March 5.—About 250 men, members of the Marine Boilermakers' association, struck Monday morning in sympathy with the marine engineers.

Paper Hangers Strike.

Pittsburg, March 5.—A strike of paper hangers in 11 stores has been declared because the proprietors refused to sign the scale, which provides for an increase of 50 cents per day and a reduction from nine to eight hours a day. Thirteen firms have agreed to the scale. The strike affects about 700 men.

Strike Is Over.

Bloomington, Ill., March 5.—The strike of machinists at the Chicago & Alton shops is over, and all the men will return to work. General Manager Barrett Monday afternoon held a conference with the strikers. It has been announced Barrett had conceded the demand of men that the piece work system be not established.

TO REIMBURSE INGHAM.

Prospects of a Bill to Pay the Costs of State Cases.

Lansing, Mich., March 5.—Some of the senators are talking as though they would like to have some sort of a bill passed for the state to reimburse Ingham county for a part of the expense of the late grand jury and of the Marsh and Sutton trials, while others are opposed to allowing the county a cent. One senator who has considerable influence among his associates said yesterday:

"I have talked with some of the other senators and I believe a bill will be passed authorizing the reimbursement of Ingham county for a portion of the expense of the grand jury and of the trials growing out of its findings. Some of us want Ingham county officials to render a bill of the full amount of the claims in this regard. When this information is secured, we propose to deduct from the total amount claimed the aggregate of the fines paid or to be paid by Gens. White and Marsh and Col. Smith, etc., which will aggregate from $11,000 to $15,000, and then pass a bill for the state to allow the balance of the total amount claimed. Of course, Ingham's detailed claims will be carefully scrutinized by the senate judiciary committee with a view to ascertaining whether any padding has been done."

Ready to Try Them.

Lansing, Mich., March 5.—The March term of circuit court opened Monday morning with Judge Wiest on the bench. When the state cases were reached, Prosecutor Tuttle asked to have them passed for the present, but declared he was ready to try them whenever the court was. Judge Wiest declared emphatically that the cases must be tried, calling attention to the fact that five terms of court had passed since the indictments were made. He said that the respondents are entitled to an early trial, so that the innocent may be discharged and the guilty punished.

The judge said that no fair-minded man would deny but that the state should stand the expense of prosecuting these state cases, but that it was his duty to proceed, ample powers being given to him to do so. The expense objection, he said, will have no influence with him.

Mysterious Disappearance.

Brazil, Ind., March 5.—The citizens of Caseyville are greatly aroused over the mysterious disappearance of the 9-year-old adopted daughter of Ellsworth Sanders, a farmer living two miles east of that town. About ten days ago she disappeard and nothing has since been seen of her. About that time a neighbor claims to have heard the screams of a child near the Sanders house one night, and the following day it was discovered that a large apple tree in the neighborhood had been dug up and reset. The people of Caseyville believe that the child has been killed and buried under the tree. Sanders says he knows nothing of the child's whereabouts and is anxious to assist in the search.

Will Not Enter Sweepstakes.

New York, March 5.—John J. Scannell announces that he refuses to allow The Abbott, champion trotter of the world, to take part in any sweepstake races during the coming season. Thomas W. Lawson's offer to enter Boralma, 2:08, in a four-cornered contest, $10,000 a corner, with Cresceus, 2:04; Charley Herr, 2:07, and The Abbott failed to tempt him. Mr. Scannell further says that The Abbott stands ready to trot any horse in the world for any amount of money over any track of the grand circuit after July 25, the race to be trotted over the track of the association offering the best inducement.

Well Not Damaged.

Pittsburg, March 5.—Col. J. M. Guffy, owner of the big oil well at Beaumont, Tex., says the well was not damaged Sunday by the great oil fire. The fire was caused by an engine spark igniting the oil on the surface of the ground near the well. It burned fiercely until midnight, when it died out. There were no lives lost. The loss to the owners of the well was the oil consumed and a large boarding house and fixtures. The well and several large tanks filled with oil were not disturbed by the fire.

Letter from Pat Crowe.

Omaha, March 5.—Pat Crowe, one of the alleged abductors of Edward Cudahy, Jr., has written a letter to the World-Herald touching on the kidnaping and asserting his innocence. Chief of Police Donahue says there is no doubt in his mind as to the genuineness of the letter and of its coming from Crowe. He said that the letter recalled to him conversations he had had with Crowe some months ago, and of which no one but Crowe and himself had any knowledge, and also that the language is quite in keeping with Crowe's style of talking and writing.

Fireworks Postponed.

Washington, March 5.—A very elaborate display of fireworks, chiefly of an aerial character but including also imposing set pieces of President McKinley and Vice-President Roosevelt, was on the program of inauguration festivities for Monday night. Owing, however, to the inclement weather the decision was reached to postpone the display until another evening, when the conditions are more favorable.

Dispatches Censored.

Madrid, March 5.—A private letter received here from Oporto, Portugal, says that all dispatches are censored and that the prefect has prohibited all gatherings in the street and the publication of newspapers evidently seeking to provoke demonstrations.

All Bodies Recovered.

Cheyenne, Wyo., March 5.—The bodies of the miners who perished in the fire at the Diamondville mine have been recovered, the 28th and last being taken out Monday. The fire is out and mining operations will be resumed in a few days.

MICHIGAN MATTERS

The Senate Had No Qurum and Held No Session.

HALF HOUR SESSION OF HOUSE

Lansing Man the Victim of Bunco Men at Chicago—Saginaw Visited by a Small Cyclone — Other Michigan News of Interest.

Lansing, Mich., March 5.—The legislature, after a five days' rest, did very little work Monday night. There was no session of the senate, only 15 senators being present, not enough for a quorum. Eight or nine of the senators are at Washington attending the second inauguration of President McKinley. There will not be enough senators here for two or three days to give a bill immediate effect in the upper house.

The house held only a half hour's session. Sixty-five of the 100 members were present.

The house passed Rep. Martindale's bill providing that Springwells election inspectors shall be paid $5 a day and the gate keepers $2.50 a day. There was not enough members present to give the bill immediate effect and it was laid on the table.

Rep. Dennis' bill changing the qualification of county school commissioners by providing that they shall have a second instead of a third grade teacher's certificate, was defeated by a vote of 48 to 13, a majority of the members elect not voting for it. Rep. McKay then had the vote reconsidered and the bill tabled.

May Assist Engineers.

Port Huron, Mich., March 5.—It is expected that President George Uhler of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial association, will be in the city on Thursday. The president is making a tour of the cities where the membership of the association is the largest. Capt. M. H. Place of Cleveland is in the city organizing an auxiliary to the Shipmasters' association. The association bars owners, and has been organized for protective reasons and to maintain a uniform scale of wages. It is possible that the members of this association will assist the engineers in securing their demands by refusing to take out boats which have not an engineer who belongs to the engineers' association.

Lansing Man Robbed.

Lansing, Mich., March 5.—M. A. Bray of Okemos, who was a candidate for the democratic nomination for sheriff last fall, yielded up $80 in cash to a couple of bunco men in Chicago last Saturday. He was hailed on the street by an individual who claimed acquaintance with a couple of prominent Lansing men, who, he said, were about to order some clothes made in Chicago and wanted to see samples of the goods. Bray agreed to be accommodating to the extent of packing the samples to Lansing and accompanied the stranger to a room to procure the package. While in the room he was attacked by three men and robbed.

Thought Them Candy.

Detroit, Mich., March 5.—While playing in the house Sunday morning the little 14-months-old daughter of Frederick Mayfield of 686 Macomb street in some way got hold of a box of antiseptic tablets containing corrosive sublimate and citric acid. The tablets were white and the child, thinking it had found some candy, commenced eating them. How many were taken it is hard to say, but when Dr. Palmer reached the house he found the child's mouth and throat were badly burned. Prompt action saved the little one's life, and her condition Monday was much improved. The box containing the tablets was without label.

Fire at Jackson.

Jackson, Mich., March 5.—Fire which caught in the basement of the large clothing house of Meade & Durant at 9:30 Monday night, probably from a boiler or electric wiring, caused a damage of about $10,000; fully insured. The firm had just received a new spring stock which was still in the basement, and the damage from fire, smoke and water cannot be accurately estimated. This is the third fire the firm has sustained. The hat factory of Hughson & Carniross, next door, was also damaged.

Small Cyclone.

Saginaw, Mich., March 5.—A small hurricane Sunday night had almost the character of a cyclone. It tore through the center of the city, tearing off several roofs, blowing in numerous windows, fronts and doing other damage. A board was carried across the street and whirled through a large plate glass window, and bicycle stands were flying about the streets promiscuously. In the midst of the brief storm there were flakes of snow in the air and a vivid flash of lightning shot across the sky.

Alleged Wife Deserter.

Albion, Mich., March 5.—Fred Stancross of this place was arrested at Owosso and Monday was brought here by Deputy Sheriff Graham on the charge of deserting his wife and family. This is his second alleged offense. He will be tried on Tuesday.

Slowly Recovering.

Standish, Mich., March 5.—Stephen Szperski, the smallpox patient at Pinconning, is slowly recovering from the disease. No other cases are in the village and there is no danger of contagion there.

Injuries Proved Fatal.

Lansing, Mich., March 5.—William Bennett, who had a leg crushed in the machinery at Eddy's sawmill in Wacousta last Friday, died from the injuries Sunday.

THE INAUGURAL BALL.

Unparalleled as Spectacular Event In the History of Similar Events.

Washington, March 5.—The culminating event of the inaugural festivities was the inaugural ball, held last night in the vast auditorium of the pension office, with the president and Mrs. McKinley leading in the grand march, and with men and women distinguished in every walk of life touching elbows, dancing and mingling with the plain American citizen. As a spectacular event it was unparalleled in the history of inaugural balls in the sumptuousness of arrangement, in the bewildering splendor of decorations and of marvelous electrical effects, and in the countless throng taking part in the spectacle.

When the doors of the great structure were thrown open at 5 o'clock an eager crowd besieged every entrance, and lines of carriages stretched into the surrounding streets and avenues. Platoons of police officers, mounted and unmounted, guarded the outer entrances, keeping back the rush of curious spectators and bringing order out of tangle of carriages. Through the long arched entrances, hung with bunting and vines, passed the merry, pleasure-seeking throng, the women in luxurious gowns, with the flash of jewels in their hair and at their throats. Soon the vast interior of the building began to take on life and animation. The presidential party was not to arrive until 9:30 o'clock, and the early comers busied themselves in viewing the exquisite beauties of the scene.

The United States Marine band and an orchestra of over a hundred pieces were stationed at one end of the ball, and for an hour before the arrival of the presidential party played patriotic airs.

FIVE MEN KILLED

And Two Seriously Injured In a Missouri Zinc Mine.

Joplin, Mo., March 5.—Five men were killed and two others seriously injured in a mine accident at the Engleside zinc mine in Center Valley, eight miles east of Joplin, Monday.

The dead are: Hale Foster, George Wilson, Wm. Buzzard, Fitz Morris, Ed Stothard.

The injured: Wm. Daniels and John Burton.

The seven men were in the ground cutting a drift from the main shaft. The five men killed were confined in the drift and the others were in the main shaft. Early Monday morning two shots had been fired, but the whole charge failed to explode. In the afternoon a whole box of powder was sent down into the mine. One of the men accidentally discharged an unexploded shot and the box of powder was set off, resulting in a terrible destruction. A man at the surface entrance of the mine was thrown 30 feet in the air. Center Valley is an isolated place and further details are not yet obtainable.

Spent Night in Tree Tops.

Cleveland, March 5.—Four fishermen living on a small island at the mouth of Rocky river were compelled to spend Sunday night in tree tops as a result of a sudden rise of water and the inundation of the island. Owing to the swift current and heavy ice, they were unable to reach the main land in their boats. All night long the men shouted for help. Scores of villagers and farmers heard them and tried to devise means for the rescue of the men, but were unable to do anything. Early Monday the water receded and three of the men were rescued. The fourth man, Michael Sadler, is missing and is thought to have been drowned.

Review Abandoned.

Washington, March 5.—The expected review by the president of the veterans who formed his escort to the capitol was declared off. It was contemplated that the veterans should march through the court of honor before the president after general parade was over. At that hour, however, it was growing dark and the ranks of old soldiers had thinned out somewhat because of the weather. In view of these conditions, Gen. Sickles decided to abandon the review.

A BOY AND A RIFLE.

And the Trick the Father Played to Make the Youngster Careful.

Exact statistics on the subject are lacking, but it is certain that the man who "didn't know it was loaded" kills and maims annually a great many persons. The only safe rule with a gun is never under any circumstances to point it at anybody. One should always act on the assumption that it is loaded. Unfortunately, though, an average human being learns only by experience, and where a gun is concerned that often entails an awful price.

Bearing this in mind a veteran sportsman of this city adopted a unique method of impressing this lesson on his son. This is how he told the story:

"I want my son to be a sportsman, so that when he gets to be as old as his father he may have as many pleasant memories to look back to. Therefore, on his sixteenth birthday I gave him a rifle. And instead of reading him a long lecture on the necessity of handling the weapon carefully, I put up a job on him that would be far more effective. After he had spent a couple of hours fondling it and cleaning it and examining the mechanism, after the manner of healthy boys, I contrived unknown to him to slip a blank cartridge into the breach.

"Then I called him out into the yard and holding my hat in front of me, asked him to show me how he would take aim at it. There was an explosion, and he fell in a dead faint. You may think it mean of me, but I allowed him to think that only the badness of his aim or some intervention of Providence saved me from death. The lesson he learned will last him through life, because a terrible fright accompanied it. Some day when he gets old enough to have a boy of his own, I shall tell him of the trick I played on him."—New York Herald.

An Epitaph.

"Howard! What Howard?"

"Julia Howard. My father is John Sinclair Howard, major in Tarleton's legion. I was born in Devonshire, England, and I am here with my father, having nobody else to look after me, until such time as these rebellious colonies are put down and restored in their allegiance to their lawful sovereign, George III, king of England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, God bless him!"

I thought that God could find something better to do than to waste his time blessing King George, a fat German blockhead, but I kept the thought to myself just then.

"Then, mark my words, Miss Julia Howard of Devonshire, England," I said, "you have come here to stay."

"I don't believe it."

"It is a prediction; it will come true."

Her look was full of unbelief, and we relapsed into silence again. The shadows grew in the sky. The sun blazed like fire, and my old trouble about the future came back.

The horses ceased to pant and walked now with springy steps, their weariness gone. Old Put thrust his nose under my arm and whinnied gently. He was talking in the language that we two understood. I rubbed his soft nose.

"Yes, old fellow," I said to him, "you have done your duty well, as you always do. We'll stop soon, and then I'll find you something to eat."

He whinnied again and rubbed his nose on my sleeve, for he understood.

"He looks like a good horse," said the girl.

"Never better," I replied and with emphasis.

"I like a good horse," she said.

"So do I. That's the reason I'm so fond of Old Put."

"I wonder if he would be as friendly with me?"

"I don't know. He usually likes old friends best, but still Old Put is a horse of fine taste."

Her evident admiration of Old Put appealed to me, and I thought I would give her the little compliment. Women like such things, and again I felt as if I could afford to be generous.

She put her hand upon his nose and stroked it gently. It was a white, well shaped hand, with pretty tapering fingers. Old Put must have admired it.

He assisted in the rubbing task, swaying his nose gently to and fro, and he whinnied once softly as he did when he was talking to me. He seemed to have forgotten the blow she had given him.

"See," she said triumphantly. "He has found a new friend, a good friend, and he knows it. He is almost as fond of me as he is of you."

I was surprised, greatly surprised. Heretofore Old Put had always proved himself to be an excellent judge of character, and now he was putting his trust in this English girl, who had shown herself to be unworthy of any trust whatever. Poor Old Put! Another masculine dupe! He was growing old; he was falling into his dotage. I felt a certain sadness at these signs of mental decay in my faithful horse. But they marched on, his silky nose pressed closely against her arm, and meanwhile the sun was sinking and the shadows were deepening and lengthening.

"I do not think it is necessary for us to walk any more," I said. "The horses are now thoroughly rested from their race and are willing to do their part, which is to carry us."

She looked at her ugly brown hack in some dismay.

"He's such a rough traveler I believe I'd rather walk," she said.

He certainly had a most irregular, jumping kind of gait, which would make him an unpleasant mount for anybody, but there seemed to be no recourse. Horses were not running loose around us for me to catch.

"But we can't help it," I said. "We can ride slowly, in a walk. If he misbehaves, use that switch you have picked up."

She walked steadily on.

"Now, if he were like this one," she said, stroking Old Put's nose, "I would be glad to ride again."

"Suppose I change the saddles, then," I said, "and let you ride Old Put?"

It was a great concession for me to make, but her appreciation of my horse had touched me for the moment.

"Do you think he would let me?" she said, looking at Old Put doubtfully and timidly.

Now I was indignant. It was a slur upon the character of Old Put, one of the gentlest and best bred of horses, to insinuate that he would behave badly with a lady on his back.

"No man except myself has ridden him in years," I said. "Perhaps no woman has ever ridden him at all, but that is no reason why one should not ride him now."

"But I am afraid," she protested again in timid fashion. All her courage seemed to have gone. Again I say you have only to be stern with a woman to keep her at your feet.

"Nonsense!" I said, a little roughly. "We'll stop talking about this and do it at once."

I halted the horses and changed the saddles, while she looked doubtfully on. Old Put submitted like an angel, and I drew the girth tight. Then I said:

"Now, if you would know what a real saddle horse is, Miss Howard, just jump up there."

"Will you help me?"

Another proof of her subdued condition!

I held out my hand in most gallant fashion. She leaned on it for a moment to give herself a support and sprang into the saddle. Then, giving Old Put a cut with the switch which she had picked up, she galloped away.

"Goodby, Mr. Marcel!" she shouted. "I ride the better horse now."

She turned Old Put's nose to the southwest, and away she went at the very best speed of which my good horse was capable, and that was much. Her yellow hair flew in the wind, as before, like the streamers of a defiant battleflag, and either with or without intent the red cap she wore was set rakishly and saucily on one side of her head.

CHAPTER III.

THE MERIT OF A GOOD HORSE.

I paused, not to swear this time, but for a momentary reflection on the vanity of man and the deceitfulness of woman in taking advantage of it, and then I sprang upon the back of that old brown hack—confound him for an army mule without the ears!—and gave chase. I had no switch or whip, but I roweled him and kicked him in the sides until I frightened him into a greater speed than he or any one else believed to dwell within his long frame. He gave a wild snort, and we plunged after the fleet girl, rocking and swaying like a boat in a stormy sea, but even with such exertion he could not compare with Old Put. Despite the anxiety of the moment, I noted his inferiority with some pride, but then I remembered how much depended upon the success of the pursuit, and I continued to urge on my own mount.

Strive and strain as we could and ride and thump as I would with all my arms and legs, we lost ground rapidly. The girl turned her head once to look at me, and I thought I saw a look of triumph on her face, but I suppose it was my imagination which was industriously tormenting me just then. I groaned at the certainty of her escape, and then hope seized me, for I remembered suddenly that I, too, had a trick to play. Old Put and I possessed a common language in which we often talked, with perfect understanding. I put two fingers to my lips and blew between them a long, shrill whistle, which cut the air and traveled like the scream of a fife. It was a request, a command even, to him to stop and wait for me. He twisted his long neck in the manner of one listening, looking back at me to see what I meant, but he went on, though with slightly diminished speed, his manner indicating that he was uncertain what I had said.

The girl was belaboring him with the switch, for she must have noticed his decreasing gait. I whistled again, and as Old Put's pace sank to a trot she beat him fiercely with the switch. A third whistle, and Old Put, now in perfect accord with me, stopped stock still; not only that, but he faced about and neighed joyously. The girl threw the remains of her switch upon the ground and began to cry, not pitifully, but angrily, fiercely. I rode up slowly and held out my hand to Old Put, who rubbed his nose against it. He knew his master and best friend. Never had I beaten him, and now there were stripes and welts on his side where she had pounded him with a switch, or rather stick.

"Why did you not tell me what sort of a horse he was," she cried, "and then I would not have made myself look so ridiculous, sitting here as if I had been tied and waiting for you to come up?"

"Miss Howard," said I in some astonishment, "do you expect me to show you the way to escape?"

"I do not expect anything from you, a rebel," she said. "Do not speak to me again."

All right; that suited me. I did not wish to talk to her. She used words only to inveigle me into some incautious mood. But it was necessary for me to tell her to dismount in order that I might change saddles again, as I did not intend to give her another such opportunity. I did not offer to assist her, having had enough of that, but stood beside the brown hack, watching her with a look that was now strictly military.

"Why don't you help me down?" she said angrily. "Have you no courtesy for a lady?"

"You have declined such assistance from a rebel before," I said in reply to her unexpected question.

"And I decline again. You needn't offer it," she said abruptly, springing to the ground, when I had no thought of offering it.

As soon as she was off his back Old Put showed the greatest distrust of her and aversion. He shied as far away from her as my hold on his bridle would let him, and his big, dark eyes shone with wrath. I was glad that he had come back to his senses, and he, like I, should have known her thoroughly from the first and always.

"We don't intend to be deceived by her again, do we, old comrade?" said I to him.

He nodded his head in emphatic fashion, and his big eye winked intelligently. Her eyes flashed a little, but she took no other notice.

"Look well at this lady, Put," I said. "Do you note her?"

He nodded.

"She's English, we're Americans, and therefore she's an enemy and not to be trusted. Watch her well," I continued.

He nodded violently.

"Now, Miss Howard," I said severely, "I've changed those saddles, and they are ready for our use when we need them, but meanwhile we'll walk again, as we've tired our horses out for the second time, and all your fault too."

She said nothing, but walked on in the way which I had indicated, keeping eight or ten feet from me. She had ceased to cry and had given her features a fixed and angry set.

I was troubled greatly. We had wasted so much time over her futile efforts to escape that the problem of a night's shelter had grown more difficult and pressing, and I intended that my attention should not be diverted from it again. Therefore I would take precautions. I drew from my pocket a long silk handkerchief, a trophy of the Monmouth campaign, which I had preserved with great care.

"Hold out your hands," I said.

"What would you do?" she asked, turning upon me a look of fire.

But I was firm. My experience had been too great.

"Hold out your hands," I repeated. "I intend to bind them together. You play too many tricks."

"You are not a gentleman."

"You have told me that three or four times already. It won't bear further repetition."

"I will not submit to such a thing."

"Then I will have to use force, which will make it much more unpleasant for you."

I hated to do what I had planned. It was rude and severe, but then there are few who have had women prisoners like mine, and consequently there are few who are in a position to judge me. I prefer greatly to deal with the regular forces, but in this case I had no choice, and so I strengthened my will and proceeded.

"Hold out your wrists," I repeated. "I shall not hurt you. I merely wish to keep you out of further mischief."

"I shall never forgive you," she said.

I could afford to laugh at such a threat.

"I trust that nobody will forgive me until I ask for forgiveness," I said.

She looked at me, her eyes full of rebellion. I thought she was going to raise her hand to strike me, but women are so changeable and uncertain. Instead she held out her hands meekly.

I bound her wrists together and noticed that they were white and well molded. The handkerchief was soft and could not pain her at all, and, besides, her hands were bound in front of her and not behind her. She need feel no inconvenience, but she must realize that her opportunities for mischief were diminished vastly. Old Put looked at her with an air of triumph, as much as to say, "Now, miss, you are being punished, and punished deservedly, for beating me so much." That seemed to be her own understanding of herself.

We resumed our march, the horses walking behind us. The rim of the sun was now meeting the rim of the earth, and the western skies were tinged with ruddy fire. In the east the misty gray of twilight was descending on field and forest, and the chill of night was creeping over everything. Even in our South Carolina latitudes the nights are cold in midwinter, and I shivered as a twilight wind, with a raw edge to it, swept over the plain.

There was a heavy cloak hanging at her saddle horn, for she had not ventured upon her journey unprepared. I took it off and threw it over her shoulders. It fell below her waist like a great coat, and I buttoned it securely around her neck.

"You are a barbarian," she said.

"I know it," I replied, "but I do not intend to let you suffer more than is necessary for your own good. That is the kind of barbarians we are in this country."

The country was lone and desolate, for we were on the sterile slopes of the hills. It was thinly peopled at the best of times, but now, raided incessantly by Tarleton's legion, which knew no mercy to anything, whether animate or inanimate, and plundered, too, by wild bands which claimed to belong to either army, as the occasion served, and perhaps belonged to neither, the people had fled to securer regions, where one side or the other was master. Only those who have seen it know the sufferings of a country harried by opposing armies and predatory bands. I had hoped to find some friendly farmer bolder than the rest with whom my prisoner and I could find shelter, or if not that, at least some abandoned house which would give us a roof, but I saw no sign of a human face except our own, and no roof appeared either in the fields or among the trees. It was a solitude bleak and cold, and the declining sun, now half way behind the earth, warned me that it would soon be time to stop, for the darkness would be upon us, and in a land of hills, gullies and no roads we could not travel well without light.

Despairing of such shelter as I had expected, I turned our course toward a thick grove of trees rising like a great castle on the left. When we entered it, the shadows already made darkness there, and the night wind moaned among the dry branches of the trees. I saw the girl shiver, and again I felt pity for her in spite of all that she tried to do, though I lost none of my distrust and caution.

Almost in the center of the grove was a small open space, sheltered from the rush of cold air by the great trees which grew so thickly around it. It seemed to me to be the likeliest spot we could find for a camp. I hitched the horses to boughs of the trees and took from my pocket a small flask of that cheer which a good soldier seldom neglects. I drew the stopper and handed it to the girl.

"Take a little of this," I said. "You must if you do not expect to catch your death of cold."

"I would if I could," she said, "but I cannot while my hands are tied."

"I had forgotten the handkerchief," I replied, "but I don't think we'll need it any longer. You have been warned sufficiently."

I unbound her wrists and replaced the handkerchief in my pocket.

"But don't forget," I said, "that this handkerchief is an evidence that I have put my mark upon you and that you belong to me—that is, you are my prisoner until such time as I choose to give you up."

Her face flushed.

"I will not endure such talk," she said, "from a rebel who within six months may be hanged by his outraged king for treason."

"You can't escape it," I said, "and the king can't hang me before he catches me. It's a long way from London to South Carolina, and I hear the king is fat and lazy and suffers from seasickness."

But she drank the whisky, just a little of it, though enough to put more sparkle in her eye, and handed the flask to me without a word of thanks. Then she sat down on a fallen tree and looked idly in front of her as if she had no interest whatever in anything.

I gathered up armfuls of the dry brushwood and tossed them into a heap, to which I set fire with the flint and steel I always carried. The fire blazed up rapidly and snapped as it bit through the wood. Its merry crackling drowned the desolate moan of the wind, and the long red ribbons of flame and the fast forming bed of live coals threw out a kindly heat that fended off the chill of the night. Even the girl, angry and humiliated as she seemed to be, felt the influence of the light and warmth and edged along the log until she was much closer and the fire could shine directly upon her face. Old Put was frank in his appreciation, coming to the full length of his tether and wagging his head in a manner which said to me as plain as day, "You have done well." Even the stupid brown hack understood and imitated Old Put's example.

Higher rose the fire and drove back the shadows, but the darkness was now rolling up to the circle of light, and beyond the sparkle of the flames began to rise like a wall. The sun was gone, and a faint, fading pink tint in the west marked the way his flight had taken him. Over all the world the twilight drooped, and the winter wind mourned the dead day.

"Are there ghosts in the forest?" suddenly asked the girl.

"None that I ever heard of," I said.

"It is so unlike England."

"How?"

"So much wilder."

I had heard of their forests there, or rather what they call forests—some acres of trees, with the undergrowth cut away and the lawns shaven, every rod patrolled by keepers or workmen, a mere plaything of a forest—but here in America are the real forests, just as nature made them, the desolate wilderness through which the wild animals howl, while the lone wind plays its song on the branches or leaves of the trees. This is the real forest, a place in which man becomes about as big as a cork on the sea. Never the lone hunter, though 50 years his home, fails to feel its immensity and desolation. The girl drew the edges of her cloak a little more tightly and moved as close to the fire as the end of the log would allow her.

"If you will permit me," I said, "I will give you a better seat by the fire than that."

She rose without a word, and I rolled the log well within the warmth of the blaze. She resumed her seat, and the firelight flickered and played over her face, tinting her cheeks with deep red and spangling her bronze gold hair with patches of scarlet and crimson. The little red cap had been pulled securely down on her head, and, sitting there in the alternate light and darkness, her figure lithe and strong, she looked like some Saxon wood nymph.

Just Like a Man.

"Oh, no; she's not at all what you would call a really feminine woman. She affects masculine ways."

"How?"

"Well, for instance, yesterday I saw her give a street car conductor a nickel when she had five pennies in her purse."—Chicago Post.

A LONDON CRIMINAL.

THE FOG THIEF AND HOW HE PLIES HIS PECULIAR TRADE.

He Operates Boldly Both In the City and on the Thames—Carries Off His Plunder From Vans and Cabs Shrouded In the Dense Gloom.

Thousands of thieves long for fog with a great longing. Incredible as it may seem, property worth tens of thousands of pounds is every year stolen from vans and lorries alone in London streets. Quite nine-tenths of this property disappears during fogs.

The leaders of the fog thief gangs usually have some little capital to start with. One of them affects to be a cartage contractor on a small scale. He takes very quiet premises that have a high boarding round and that are not overlooked. If he has plenty of cellarage, all the better. He has at least one smart trap and horse and two and sometimes three rogues to go with it.

It is during the late foggy afternoons and early evenings of winter that the hauls are made. Streets with warehouses—and not shops that are lighted brilliantly and early—on each side and that are often congested with traffic are mostly chosen. The small and smart though dingy and inconspicuous looking trap plunges into the thick of the traffic. It soon, in the gloom and murk, places itself immediately behind a van or lorry piled with packages of various kinds.

The men in the quick trap are all on the alert. One of them, a man chosen for his immense physical strength, goes to the head of the pony on some pretext. He soon has a package down from the van in front. He is provided with sharp cutting instruments, and he has a powerful piece of strap with a hook at one end. If there is a boy sitting behind the van, the men in the trap contrive to get him down by diverting his attention. Even with a view to distracting the possible attention of carters, the thieves generally get up an altercation, or "barney," among themselves or with others. They are men of colossal impudence and powers of abuse, and all attention becomes riveted upon them. In one case not far from Farringdon street last December they carried off one parcel of furs worth £700, the van boy being temporarily blinded, as alleged, by a lad with the thieves blowing some snuff into his face from a pea shooter and then disappearing.

One of the most notorious of these fog thieves was a lithe young fellow who crept along the back of a pony to its head, American jockey fashion, and hooked what he could from out of the van in front.

The great hauls of these men are when they follow cabs and private carriages from a railway station. In such cases they generally use two traps and horses. A cab is marked that has apparently valuable luggage on the top. This is followed till some dark street is reached where the way is narrow or congested; then the driver of one of the traps, that has a very swift pony harnessed to it, deliberately drives across the head of the cab or carriage horse.

Of course there is an angry altercation, and while this is going on the thieves on the other trap have got into the immediate rear of the luggage laden vehicle. One of the thieves goes along his horse's back and lifts the luggage down.

One of the hauls effected last winter in this way was worth £8,000 and was the property of Mr. de Silva, an Argentina millionaire. The robbery took place not far from St. Pancras' church just before the shops were lighted up.

As the summer sun brings forth myriads of living creatures, so does a Thames fog bring out upon the dark and apparently deserted river a vast horde of thieves. At least a dozen of the wharf and lighter owners complain of losing from their respective wharves as much as from one to six hundred pounds' worth of coal alone every year.

The reader can learn at any riverside house frequented by tugboat men that there are scores, literally scores, of tugs on the river that have never bought a pennyworth of coal for great numbers of years. The Thames police would tell that same reader that men have retired on competences who have been reported to have made their whole fortune out of coal stolen with impunity on the river.

The police are helpless over the vast expanse of river and in the labyrinthine backwashes. If they raid one of the pirate boats in the gloom and darkness, the spoil is turned out to the bottom of the river in a trice. If this sort of thing can be done to such an extent with a commodity like coal, it may be imagined what befalls other valuable property on wharves or in lighters.

The fraudulent picker up of the river blesses the fog. The picker up is a man who notices that certain barges with valuable cargoes are moored in such a way that, if they broke loose, they would entail vast expense. The picker up sees that these barges do break loose. That part of his work he does in dead secret. And then, making plenty of noise about it at this stage, he rescues from danger the very barges that he has set adrift and sends in a heavy salvage claim.—London Answers.

Thomas Jefferson as a Letter Writer.

Mr. Jefferson probably wrote more letters with his own hand than any other public man that ever lived. The extent of his correspondence may be inferred from the fact that 26,000 letters neatly folded and briefed were preserved by him and found carefully filed away at the time of his death, with copies of the replies sent to more than 16,000. These, however, were only a small portion of his correspondence, as he retained only those he considered of future usefulness or importance.

Stenography was not invented at that time. Every one of his letters was written with his own hand and with great care, although after breaking his wrist while minister to France it became a great labor to him. His penmanship was small, plain and legible, every letter being perfectly formed, and his account books are kept in so small a hand that many of the pages cannot be read without a magnifying glass.

Jefferson was ambidextrous. He could write equally well with either hand. When his wrist was broken, he learned to write with his left hand, which became as skillful as the other. It would have been impossible for him to have carried on his extensive correspondence without being able to relieve his right hand at intervals.—Chicago Record.

Divining Rods.

The only trustworthy divining rod that has ever been made is fortunately cheap. It has a steel head and a wooden handle and is shaped something like an anchor. Any man who wants one should go to a hardware store and ask for a pickax.—Youth's Companion.

THE CENSUS OF 1790.

United States Population Then Was Less Than 4,000,000.

When the first census of the United States was taken in 1790, there were 16 states and the southwest and northwest territories. The returns fixed the population at 3,929,214, while those of 1900 give over 76,000,000, a fourteenfold growth in 110 years.

In the first census nothing was sought but the number of inhabitants, and the task was assigned to United States marshals, who performed the work for several censuses. In the census library is a record of the first census, which shows that the census of 1790 was ordered in March and completed by October, 1791, a very creditable showing when the difficulty of communication is considered. The population was divided into five classes—free white males of 16 years and upward, including heads of families; free white females, including heads of families; free white males under 16 years, other persons, slaves. Fourteen enumeration districts were mapped out of the 16 states and the population of the towns, counties and states given. All of the states except Maine and Massachusetts had slaves. Virginia led with a population of 747,610 whites and 292,000 slaves. North Carolina was second, with 393,751 whites and 100,600 slaves. Maryland had a population of 422,756, of which 103,036 were slaves. The slave population of the northern states is given as follows:

New Hampshire, 158; Rhode Island, 948; Connecticut, 2,764; New York, 21,324; New Jersey, 11,423; Pennsylvania, 3,237; Delaware, 8,887; Vermont, 16.

The population of the southwest territory was 35,691 whites and 3,417 slaves.

The record is full of errors in calculation and addition, but is interesting in showing how the population has increased and how the art of census taking has developed with the population.—Baltimore Sun.

Bad For the Business.

"Yes, I had to let him go," replied the boss barber to the regular customer when the latter asked an explanation of the absence of his pet barber.

"Why?"

"Well, he insisted on raising whiskers."

"Raising whiskers? Great Scott! Isn't this a free country, where a man may raise whiskers if he so chooses?"

"Yes, this is a free country, and a man can do pretty much as he likes, but there's one thing he can't do and work for me, and that's it."

"Why do you object?"

"For three reasons. The first is that he was a rather cross looking fellow anyway. Whiskers would make him look crosser. In the second place, to raise whiskers it would be necessary for him to look like a Weary Willie for two or three weeks. In the third place—and this is reason enough, even if there were no other—if he should succeed in raising a good looking beard, he would set an example that might be followed by some customers. The result would be that instead of getting shaved three or four times a week, or even every day, they would content themselves with getting their whiskers trimmed once a fortnight or once a week. Such a move would seriously affect the cash box and for that reason is not to be tolerated.

"How many barbers have you seen wearing beards? Every barber realizes the force of my objection. Oh, yes, every man has constitutional rights that all should observe. So have I."—St. Louis Star.

Didn't See the Joke.

"It isn't safe to be funny these days unless one labels one's jokes," said a woman who went abroad recently. "You know, I've always rather fancied myself as a wit, and on the steamer coming home I really let myself out. Everybody was a bit seasick, and I—Well, even I had times when I thought I'd rather own an automobile than any kind of a yacht. One day we all foregathered on deck and talked about what we'd gone through—you know how people do on shipboard. I was talking in my cleverest vein with an English family.

"'I'm like a famous lady,' I chortled gayly. 'I'll be extremely glad to set foot on terra cotta again.'

"That evening the mother of the English family took me aside.

"'My dear,' she said, 'I'm so much older than you that I am sure I may make so bold as to tell you something, and I want you to take it in the spirit in which it is meant. You said this morning you'd be glad to set foot on terra cotta again. I thought I'd just call your attention to the thing so you won't make the same mistake again. It isn't terra cotta, it's terra firma.'"—Washington Post.

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but when all other medicines failed, three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 58 pound." It's absolutely guaranteed to cure Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Bronchitis and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at C. A. Wright's drug store.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

It is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary" of THE DAILY TRIBUNE published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West.

RAILROAD NEWS.

The Ohio Central management has at at last commenced to operate the Columbus Northwestern road extending between Peoria and St. Marys, Ohio. The construction of the road was undertaken several years ago by Haskell & Strang and for a time it was operated as the Columbus division of the Detroit & Lima Northern. After a brief but brilliant tenure in this capacity the D. & L. N. people let go and the road for some time has been operated in a half-hearted, spasmodic manner under its construction name of the Columbus Northwestern. The St. Marys extension between Wapakoneta and St. Marys was recently completed, and beginning today regular trains between St. Marys and Peoria are now in service.

Last Saturday morning, as Carl Haskell was working on the track at Deshler, O., he was caught by an engine, and thrown a distance of 30 feet, cutting off an arm and leg, beside other injuries. He lived three hours. The remains were taken to Ottowa for burial. Besides a father and mother, wife and one child, Mr. Haskell leaves a host of sorrowing friends, and other relatives.

According to a dispatch from New York, the opposition to the Cincinnati Northern reorganization has again carried the fight into court. It is not anticipated that proceedings will interfere with the plans of the new owners of the property.—Toledo Blade.

DETROIT & LIMA NORTHERN TO BE SOLD—SYNDICATE WILL BUY AND COMBINE WITH OHIO SOUTHERN.

Cleveland, March 4.—F. J. Lisman & Co., bankers of New York, will represent a syndicate before the United States court to-morrow at Toledo in foreclosure sale of the Detroit & Lima Northern Railroad. The company intends to bid the road in and combine it with the Ohio Southern under the name of the Detroit Southern with a capitalization of $30,000,000. There may be opposition to the Listman company getting control of the road, but it has capital sufficient to push the deal through. Listman & Co. represent a syndicate which now controls the Clover Leaf. The new management, if it gets control of the road, promises many improvements in the road's physical condition.—Tuesday's Detroit Free Press.

CLUB NOTES.

The Monday Club meeting yesterday afternoon was held at the church instead of at Mrs. Eugene Harris' home as previously announced. The sleighing disappeared just in time to deprive the Club of a pleasant social afternoon, much to their regret.

Monday Club program for March 11th:
The House of Brunswick and the Jacobites—Mrs. Hayden.
Battle of Culloden and last of the Stuarts—Miss Hisley.
English Possession of Canada—Mrs. T. C. Harris.
General Wolfe—Mrs. Eugene Harris.
English Triumphs in India, Lord Clive—Miss Haight.
John and Charles Wesley—Mrs. Hicks.
Gray's Elegy—Mrs. Howland.

Battle Creek, Mich., March 4.—Special.—While the National Federation of Women's Clubs is quarreling over the admission of negro women as delegates to that organization, the Battle Creek Woman's League has settled the question locally by admitting a colored woman. This is the first woman's club in Michigan to admit a negro woman. The league here has 300 members composed of the most prominent and leading ladies of the city and is already taking steps to build a club house this summer.—Detroit Journal.

Adrian's Report.

Tecumseh Odd Fellows and Rebekahs were royal entertainers for brethern from Blissfield, Clinton and Adrian last Friday evening. About 70 took the Lima Northern regular and returned home on a special about three o'clock the next morning. The banquet was at the opera house and everything was conducted in the most satisfactory manner, their arrangements being nearly perfect as possible to make them.

Of course there was a program of literary and musical excellence, supplemented by toasts and among the speakers were Arthur Oram for Adrian, Dr. Tuttle for Clinton and W. H. Dolph for Blissfield.

The Adrian visitors are loud in praise of the cordial welcome and the open-handed hospitality of the Tecumseh people, and are looking forward to the time, when they can at least partially reciprocate the fraternal goodwill shown.—Adrian Press.

The above account of the Odd Fellow banquet is longer and better than is given in the Tecumseh News of last week, but Stearns prints a good county paper, besides has that happy faculty, which is almost necessary to a newspaper man of knowing news when he sees it.

Resolutions.

Mrs. Marion Banister, who was for many years a member of the Ladies Aid Society, has laid down the cares and labors of life and passed on to a realm where sickness and sorrow are unknown. Therefore,

RESOLVED, that in her death, we have lost a dear friend and an active worker in our society, and we would express to her grief stricken daughter, Mrs. Bice, our heartfelt sympathy and with her we shall ever lovingly cherish the memory of her services and beautiful character.
MRS. H. M. GRISWOLD,
MRS. H. S. BARNES,
Committee.

Run Short of Names.

The Local Option petition did not get to the board of supervisors. Sixty names were lacking and 110 others desired to withdraw their names from the petition already signed. Walter Westerman has now returned to the care of his family, Vincent Wood resumed his editorial work on the village directory and Comrade Smith is gone to Kalamazoo to the state prohibition convention to catch new breath and take a fresh hold. It is now presumed that these men have sense enough to never again attempt such foolishness.

New Tailor Shop.

G. B. Gilbert has opened a tailor shop in the Dewey building on Railroad street and has a fine line of samples to select from. Mr. Gilbert comes to Tecumseh well recommended, having run a shop in Dundee and Howell, and as there is room for two good shops in Tecumseh, will no doubt do well.

Western Rates Reduced.

"Earning a Flag."

Following are five original stories written by fourth grade pupils of the West Branch, who took for their subject, "Earning a Flag."

Little Tom Thomb's teacher told the children if they would work and earn some money and save it, she would buy a nice silk flag to put on the school house on special holidays.

So Tom thought of a nice way to earn some money.

When he got through his studies he took a sawbuck and saw and went around to every house to see if there was any wood to saw.

He kept it up till he had earned a dollar and a half. Then he took it to his teacher. He earned his share of the money.
WILLITS HILLMAN.

There were two girls, whose names were Emma and Hazel. They lived in the city of New York. They liked to go out into the country. They went to a large school in the city. The children in this school were going to earn some money to get a flag. These little girls had an aunt and an uncle living in the country. It was summer and they were going to have their summer vacation. The teacher told the children they could earn their money during their vacation. These little girls went out to their aunt's for their vacation. They went out into the garden to pick berries nearly every morning When they went back to the city they had each a dollar and a half. When they started to school they gave the money to their teacher to help buy the flag.
ZOE OVEN

Once there was a little boy named John Brown.

This little boy lived in the country.

His mother sent him to the country school so he could learn to read and write.

One Monday morning their teacher said that if they would earn some money they could buy a flag to put on the top of their schoolhouse.

The children all clapped their hands

Then the teacher said that they might try to do it.

This little boy was poor so he asked a man if he could carry newspapers for him.

John did this for a long time. After a while he got several dollars for carrying papers.

He had enough to buy the flag and give some to his mother too.

John's mother bought him a new suit of clothes with some of the money that John gave her.
MARION ROSACRANS

There was a schoolhouse in a small town that wanted to buy a flag to put up flag days.

And each child was to earn money to help buy the flag. Mabel's mamma said she would give her fifty cents if she would knit a cap; so she went to work and as she was not a lazy little girl in two days she had fifty cents to take to school. And what a proud little girl she was when she handed it to the boy who was to buy the flag.
BERNICE SISSON.

There was a little girl who went to a little schoolhouse. She went as usual one morning to school and was not late to be sure. When the bell rang she took her seat. The teacher said "How many would like to have a flag?" You may guess they all raised their hands. I will tell you what this little girl did to earn it. At noon she went dancing home and told her mother that they were going to have a flag. "Who?" said her mother. "Why the school of course who did you think?" Well I did not know" said her mamma. Were you going to help get the money? "Why of course I was." said little Zoe, for that was her name. May I wash dishes for you and you give me a dime every time I do them?" "Yes I will if you want me to. And then you can take twenty cents for the pretty flag."
LAURA BIRDSALL.

The Earl of Aderdeen contributes to the current issue of The Outlook a series of pleasant personal reminiscences of Queen Victoria, recalling the circumstances of her visit to the present earl's grandfather in 1857, and relating anecdotes which impress the reader with an appreciation of the queen's simple womanly character. The original publishers of the Atlantic first gave to the American public Tennyson's immortal lines, "To the Queen." Today the Atlantic commemorates the passing of Queen Victoria by reprinting these stanzas as a last tribute to her sainted memory.

THE COMMUTER.

How He Spends His Hours of Daily Railroad Traveling.

The much abused suburbanites, whom the cartoonists picture as coming to the city every morning from "Lonesomehurst," "Lost Man's Lane," "Prunehurst-by-the-Trolley" and other places with equally suggestive names, are an interesting class of individuals. The transient element of the city's population spends several hours every day whirling over the railroads. When the novelty of these daily bits of railroading has passed into the monotony of years of travel through the same country the commuter has learned to make the best of the time he spends on the train.

The "card fiend" is a prominent figure in this class. Both morning and evening four or five games of cards are going on in every smoking car, and it is safe to say that thousands of dollars change hands in this "innocent amusement" while the players are hurrying to or from business.

Next to the "card sharp" is the man who only enjoys his cigar and paper. He is oblivious to all his surroundings and only shows animation when he is at his journey's end.

Many of the policies and plans of some of this city's most successful business men have been born or developed on these trains. The short respite between the bustle of the city and the cares of home life is to this type of man a season for meditation.

Another interesting commuter is the individual who is on good terms with all his fellows. He travels up and down through the car exercising his repertory of latest jokes or sympathizing with some gloomy looking friend who thinks that all the world is against him. He seems to never grow weary in his well doing.

The train life of the commuter is now and then enlivened by wrecks. Though tossed about and sometimes cut and bruised, he generally escapes serious injury. Such experiences as these he considers the spice and coloring of his existence.—New York Mail and Express.

COLOR OF GOLD COINS.

Reasons For Differences In Tint of Coins of French Mintage.

Some time ago a Frenchman placed together a number of gold coins of French mintage of the beginning, middle and end of the last century. He was much surprised to see that they differed in color. He set about finding out the reasons for this difference, and the results of his investigations have been published in La Nature.

There is a paleness about the yellow of the 10 and 20 franc pieces which bear the effigies of Napoleon I and Louis XVIII that is not observed in the goldpieces of later mintage. One admirer of these coins speaks of their color as a "beautiful paleness" and expresses regret that it is lacking in later coins. The explanation of it is very simple. The alloy that entered into the French gold coins of those days contained as much silver as copper, and it was the silver that gave the coins their interesting paleness.

The coins of the era of Napoleon III were more golden in hue. The silver had been taken out of the alloy.

The gold coins of today have a still warmer and deeper tinge of yellow. This is because the Paris mint, as well as that in London, melts the gold and the copper alloy in hermetically sealed boxes, which prevents the copper from being somewhat bleached, as it always is when it is attacked by hot air. So the present coins have the full warmness of tint that a copper alloy can give.

If the coins of today are not so handsome in the opinion of amateur collectors as those issued by the first Napoleon, they are superior to those of either of the Napoleons in the fact that it costs less to make them. The double operation of the oxidation of the copper and cleaning it off the surface of the coin with acids is no longer employed, and the large elimination of copper from the surface of the coins, formerly practiced, made them less resistant under wear and tear than are the coins now in circulation.

No Keys to White House.

In these modern days the front door of the White House is not locked at night. Practically no doors are locked; and if the steward should look around for keys he would probably not find half of those formerly in use. Big policemen are about the only doors at the executive mansion. They guard the main doors at all hours of day and night, and there is no need to close and lock the inner doors. Before President Lincoln's time policemen were rare at the president's home, and when all the clerks and servants had gone home at night the housekeeper went around and carefully locked all the doors inside and outside except to rooms occupied by those going in and coming out. —Washington Star.

Don't Be Sparing of Your Love.

The power of love is one of the greatest gifts to humanity. It generates the sunshine of the moral universe, without which life would be a desert waste. Use this divine power without stint. Be prodigal of your love. Let it radiate freely. It will brighten the dark places. It will gladden the sorrowing. It will lift you above the petty, grinding cares that so soon corrode the mind and sap the energies. It is the golden key that will admit you to the palace of the true life.—Success.

Well Enough.

"Didn't I tell you to let well enough alone?" said the doctor to the convalescent who had disobeyed and was suffering a relapse.

"Yes, doctor," whined the patient, "but I wasn't well enough."—Detroit Free Press.

Egotistic.

"Isn't there a great deal of egotism among actors?" asked the young woman.

"I am sorry to say there is," answered Stormington Barnes. "Why, I have met no less than three actors who thought they could play Hamlet as well as I do!"—Washington Star.

How She Did It.

"So she refused you?"
"That's the impression I received."
"Didn't she actually say no?"
"No, she didn't. All she said was 'Ha, ha, ha!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ANN ARBOR SPEAKS.

Contractor Wooley of Ann Arbor Makes a Public Statement.

Mr. Edwin Wooley, contractor and carpenter of Ann Arbor, adds his voice to that of the army of Michigan people who endorse the little conqueror. Our representative found him at his place of residence, No. 618 Fountain street. Mr. Wooley appreciates "a good thing" as do most of our readers, and he does not hesitate to tell his experience for the benefit of others. Endorsement of this kind has made Doan's Kidney Pills a household word throughout the state The good they have done has won them many a title and such worthy names among the people as the "little conqueror of kidney ills," "little enemies to backache," "modern wonder-workers," etc.

Mr. Wooley says: "I was subject for years to attacks of backache or pains through the loins and kidneys, generally of a dull, heavy, aching nature, but often when the weather changed or when I moved awkwardly they became sharp twinges of pain. As I was doing work which required stooping it was very painful, exceedingly so, if I caught cold which, as a rule, settled in my loins. I tried various remedies but was never successful in obtaining any permanent benefit until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. At any time my back was troubling me a great deal but shortly after I began the treatment the aching abated and when I had finished it I was cured. This is months ago and up to date there has been no recurrence of the trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

"HEAP SMELL."

The Indian Knew What He Wanted and Where to Get It.

Some Indians from Buffalo Bill's Wild West, arrayed in bright colored blankets and an exceptional amount of face paint, were taking in the sights of the city one afternoon. They strolled down Walnut street, single file, and, headed by a buck who now and then gave a grunt of satisfaction when something that pleased him caught his eye, they halted in front of a drug store and gazed at the window display for a moment. Then the band filed into the establishment and began to look around.

The clerk thought the place was going to be besieged and that he was likely to lose his scalp, but when the "big chief," who acted as spokesman, addressed him with the customary Indian greeting of "How!" the clerk regained his composure enough to ask the Indian what he wanted.

"Heap smell," was the reply.

Directed by the Indian's finger to a showcase, the clerk produced a bar of soap. The brave took it gingerly, removed the wrapper, smelled it and bit into the toothsome looking article. With a deep grunt of displeasure he handed it back to the drug clerk. With a disgusted look he remarked, "Heap smell!"

The clerk began to tremble, and the Indian pointed to a perfume bottle in the showcase. The bottle of perfume was handed to him. The Indian held it in both hands for a moment, closely scrutinizing it. He slowly removed the stopper, closely watching it as if he expected it to explode, and took a long sniff at the bottle, gave a grunt of satisfaction, handed the clerk some money and led his band of braves out of the store, to the delight of the frightened clerk, who had not been in the practice of waiting on real Indians.—Kansas City Journal.

ANECDOTES OF FORREST.

Why the Confederate Leader Declined to Correct His Spelling.

"General Forrest of the Confederate army," said an ex-Confederate officer, "was a military genius of the first rank. Without previous training or any developed taste in that direction he went into the army from a place as overseer and attained commanding rank absolutely by merit. Rough and uncouth at first, he became in later life a courtly gentleman whom it was a pleasure to meet and to know. I remember on one occasion some time after the war coming up the Potomac with him I wanted to introduce a young woman who was under my escort. He said he was flattered by the request, but that he could not meet her unless she knew perfectly well who he was and that he was not held in high esteem by the northern people chiefly on account of the Fort Pillow affair. I assured him that she was fully apprised of his record, and then he went with me to meet her, and she told me later she had never met a more attractive man.

"Earlier in his career—that is, before he had learned to spell—he was asked by a young lady to put his autograph in her album. He wrote his name as requested and under it his title, 'major general of calvary,' as he spelled it. The lady called his attention to it in a very delicate way, and he looked at it a moment, and with a full consciousness that he was lacking in that regard and with a beautiful and scarcely to be expected humility he said, 'Let it stand to show how ignorant General Forrest is.' There are not many men who would have done that, I imagine, and it was the little things that showed the man's true greatness."—New York Sun.

Shrinking.

Once upon a time there was a Bathing Suit which was much reprehended in that it was not modest.

There was likewise at this same time also a Violet whose modesty was a matter of universal comment.

"What is your system," asked the Bathing Suit, accosting the Violet, "for I would fain be thought modest too?"

"Why, I shrink," quoth the Violet, meaning no harm.

But when the Bathing Suit shrunk in pursuance of this hint it was only reprehended the more and was finally cast away as being quite impossible.—Detroit Journal.

The first photographic portrait taken was of a Mrs. Dorothy Draper in 1839 by her brother, Dr. John Draper.

Ireland sends annually 44,000 tons of eggs, some 640,000,000 in round numbers, to England alone.

Help... Nature

Babies and children need proper food, rarely ever medicine. If they do not thrive on their food something is wrong. They need a little help to get their digestive machinery working properly.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

will generally correct this difficulty.

If you will put from one-fourth to half a teaspoonful in baby's bottle three or four times a day you will soon see a marked improvement. For larger children, from half to a teaspoonful, according to age, dissolved in their milk, if you so desire, will very soon show its great nourishing power. If the mother's milk does not nourish the baby, she needs the emulsion. It will show an effect at once both upon mother and child.

THE KISS AT THE DOOR.

In the days of the lance and the spur,
When the hero went forth to the fight,
Oft he carried a token from her
Whom he worshiped as lover and knight,
And when fierce surged the battle around,
And when close pressed the merciless foe,
'Twas that token that drove off despair
And gave victory's strength to his blow.

Not a hero of knighthood am I,
But a warrior in industry's strife,
Where the lance that I wield is my pen
And the ladye I serve is my wife.
Yet a token I carry each day,
Full as precious as any of yore,
And it stoutens my heart for the fray;
'Tis my love's morning kiss at the door.

For his faith will the martyr endure,
By the sunset the artist's inspir'd;
At the blast of the bugle and fife
Is the soldier to gallantry fired.
But whatever may others exalt,
For myself I shall ask nothing more
As a prompter to worthiest deeds
Than the kiss that I get at the door.
—E. W. Gray in Newark Advertiser.

THE STOLEN MODEL

How the Plan of a Torpedo Destroyer Was Obtained For the Russian Government.

"Read that, Valini," said the dockyard chief, handing me an official communication from the minister of marine. It ran:

"I have received positive information that the Russian government has in some way obtained possession of the secret of the new torpedo destroyer model No. 7912 and is building according to our model. Please make every inquiry immediately to find out how the plan of the model has come into its possession. You have full authority to adopt all necessary means. Need I impress the importance of discovering the leakage?"

"It is inexplicable," I said. "No one has seen the model except you and me and the members of the council unless, indeed, the inventor has driven a double bargain or some one has obtained a copy of the model from his workshop."

"I have thought of that," said the chief, "but I think that solution very unlikely. He will probably be here in a few minutes."

"What about the ministers? Could there be any leakage from the council?" I queried.

"I would rather you would suggest that than that I should," he replied dryly. "No, my dear Valini, the responsibility rests on your shoulders and mine, and we must clear ourselves at all costs."

At this moment Brazier, the inventor, entered the room.

"You have sent for me," he said shortly.

"The matter is very important," said the chief, "as a foreign government—no matter which—has managed to obtain a copy of your model No. 7912."

"What, the torpedo destroyer?" exclaimed Brazier.

"We want to know who has access to your models beside yourself," said the chief.

"No one. I am not a fool. I trust no one. I speak to no one when there is a work on hand till I hand it to the government for consideration. No one touches the model but myself. Every model up to the present time that I have submitted has been made completely, from first to last, by myself."

"Could any one enter your workshop," queried the chief, "without your knowing it?"

"Certainly not!" he replied decidedly. "It would be quite impossible. The room in which I work is on the ground floor and built of solid stone, with a concreted foundation."

"How is the room entered?" asked the chief.

"There is only one approach to it, through an iron door which opens into my sleeping room, and if the door were opened it would disturb electric bells over my head. So you see, my dear friends, I do not sell secrets without taking care that they shall not become public property first. No, no; the secret did not come from me, my friends. It must have been stolen from you."

"The model might have been sold on the double," remarked the chief.

Brazier drew himself up and said:

"You are an honorable man, and your friend here is an honorable man, but you are, fortunately, not the only honorable men that this country possesses."

The examination of Brazier's workshop only confirmed his view in every point, and there could be no question of the secret of the model having been discovered or got at surreptitiously without the connivance of Brazier himself.

We then called on the minister of marine and, having told him the details of our search, offered to hand in our resignations with our official reports on the search.

"I should not accept them," he said kindly. "This particular matter is, after all, of great importance only that we may detect the leakage, and I leave the matter in your hands, gentlemen. Keep your eyes and ears open and," he added, with a dry smile, "don't give up the search."

Three months had elapsed and had been fruitless when one day Brazier was announced. He came into the chief's room, his face furrowed with thought, but with a triumphant gleam in his eyes.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have made many experiments to try to find out how my model was stolen. At last I am near success."

"How?" we both queried simultaneously.

"Gently, gently, my dear sirs. It has taken me three months' hard work and anxious thought to get on the track. Now is the time to act. No; no questions now, but come with me in the train tomorrow, for every one in the town knows that tomorrow I bring my great new invention to show to the ministry. But come armed."

On the next day, when the train entered the station, the chief, Brazier (who carried a red leather case) and I took seats in the corner of the smoking compartment of the car. As soon as the train started a large, burly looking man came in and joined us.

He had a large black leather suit case in one hand, which he carried by a handle, from the center of which rose a little brass knob like a mount. In the other hand he carried a heavy stick. As he sat down Brazier touched his revolver pocket, making a sign to us to be on the alert.

The stranger placed his suit case beside our red case, and we noticed that never once did he take his hand off the handle or remove his fingers from the brass knob in the center.

Brazier leaned over to us and whispered:

"He steals my models by the Roentgen rays. Mon Dieu, is he not clever! Be ready when I say, 'Now.'"

Whether the stranger heard the words or not I do not know; but, anyhow, he was startled by seeing Brazier whisper to us and sprang to his feet, bringing his stick to the bayonet charge, as if to thrust with it at any one who attempted to approach him.

The chief had his hand on his revolver when the stranger sprang up and, on the instant, covered him with it. Like lightning he struck the revolver with the stick. It burst with a tremendous explosion, shattering the chief's hand and covering me and Brazier with fragments of broken window glass.

When the smoke cleared, we found that the stranger had taken advantage of the confusion, thrown open the carriage door and jumped for his liberty, leaving the suit case behind. We found afterward that it contained a most ingenious variation of the Roentgen apparatus, which would enable a clever mechanician to obtain the working details of any model by photography. The instrument is now in the bureau of the ministry. The stranger we never heard of again, so we presumed he was lucky in his jump and escaped.

The only one who suffered much was our beloved chief, who has never completely recovered from the shock and the operation that followed his share in the discovery of how model No. 7912 was stolen.—St. Louis Star.

Confucius.

Confucius calls himself a transmitter only, not a maker, believing in and loving the ancients. When speaking of himself, he says: "At 15 I had my mind bent on learning; at 30 I stood firm; at 40 I had no doubts; at 50 I knew the decrees of heaven; at 60 my ear was an obedient organ for the reception of truth; at 70 I could follow what my heart desired without transgressing what was right."

Confucius died in 478 B. C., complaining that among all the princes of the empire there was not one who had adopted his principles, not one who would obey his lessons. This shows—what is, in fact, confirmed from other sources—that he himself was not an active reformer, so that while alive he scarcely produced a ripple on the smooth and silent surface of the religious thought of his own country. He was, no doubt, in advance of his contemporaries, but he took his stand chiefly on certain verities that had come down to him from ancient times, and his faith in these verities and in their coming revival has certainly not been belied by what happened after his death.

His grandson already speaks of him as the ideal of a sage, as a sage is the ideal of all humanity. But even this grandson was far from claiming divine honors for his grandsire, though he certainly seems to exalt his wisdom and virtue beyond the limits of human nature.—Max Muller in Nineteenth Century.

Small Change.

"You know, I feel just like a counterfeit bill," observed a young man to a friend with whom he was walking, stopping in front of a barroom.

"Why?" queried his partner.

"I cannot pass," the other explained, waving his hand toward the entrance of the place.

"Oh," remarked his friend, "don't let that feeling worry you. You know, I'm somewhat accustomed to shoving the queer." And he took the man with a thirst by the arm and carried him on down the street.—Memphis Scimitar.

She Knew.

A clergyman while catechising his Sunday school had occasion to ask the children the meaning of the word "epistle." A little girl in the youngest class was so certain that she knew that she did not hesitate a minute, but, with the greatest of confidence, answered, "An epistle is the wife of an apostle."—New York Sun.

The Star.

"Now," we asked him, "who should be considered the star of your company?"

"The bloodhound, me boy, the bloodhound," said the gentleman that played Legree. "He has something to eat every day, whether the rest do or not."—Indianapolis Press.

Some One Who Would Like It.

"I don't like Muggins' face," said Twynn to Triplett. "He hasn't a pleasing countenance."

"But an auctioneer would like it," suggested Triplett.

"How so?"

"It is a countenance forbidding."—Detroit Free Press.

Divided the Remedy.

The Philadelphia Record tells a story of a physician of that city who was called to see an old Irishman and his wife, down with colds. He advised quinine and whisky as an antidote. "You must both take it," he said. "Take it every three hours—two grains of quinine and a swallow of whisky." The next day he called again. The man was up and about, but his wife was in bed. "Did you follow my instructions?" asked the doctor.

"To the letther," replied the husband.

"How much quinine have you left?" was the next question.

"Sure, Oi t'ink she have taken th' whole av it," said the man.

"And didn't you take it, too?" asked the doctor.

"Divil th' bit," was the reply. "Begorrah, it kept me busy takin th' whisky every toime she took a pill, an sure she's in bed an Oi'm up."

The Humorous Primate.

There is a story told of a candidate for the pulpit who was preaching an ex tempore trial sermon before the late Archbishop Tait and Dean Stanley.

In his extreme nervousness he began in a stammering way, "I will divide my congregation into two—the converted and the unconverted."

This proved too much for the primate's sense of humor, and he exclaimed, "I think, sir, as there are only two of us, you had better say which is which."—London Standard.

Easy Going Japs.

Japanese business methods are in the less important places of a very go as you please description. At Nagasaki the other day a foreigner calling at the branch of one of the chief shipping companies found the whole place deserted. It appeared that, the day being fine, the manager and staff had gone out on a mushroom hunting expedition. Mushroom hunting is a pursuit that appeals to every true Japanese.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Waiting For His Turn.

"Speaking of drinking as a cause for headaches," said an old practitioner, "reminds me of a trip I took several years ago with a special train full of western physicians going to the annual meeting of the American Medical association in Philadelphia.

"On such occasions as this, with perhaps 150 physicians congregated in a special train, a good many manufacturers of wines, liquors and carbonated waters are anxious for the opportunity of putting bottled goods on ice, with a representative in charge to see that samples are dispensed at just the right temperature.

"On this particular occasion I remember that one firm dealing in mineral waters had an especially competent agent on board the train. Dinner was just over in the dining car, tables had been put up in nearly every section of the sleepers and champagne corks were popping. Redder liquors were on all sides, and the rattle of cracked ice was nearly as loud as the clicking of the trucks.

"It was just at this juncture that this especial agent for the mineral waters made his hit. He recognized that it was not his deal, and he started through the train, beginning at the rear end of the baggage car. With a profound bow to all present he said:

"'Good night, gentlemen, good night, but I'll see you in the morning!'

"He went through the train with that, making the hit of the whole trip. My greatest wonder at it, too, has been that it has not been seized upon as an illustrated advertisement for his house."—Chicago Tribune.

His Only Real Pleasure.

"What good does your money do you, Mr. Armour?" a friend once asked P. D. Armour, according to the Washington Star.

"That is a question," Mr. Armour replied, "I often ask myself. I was raised a butcher boy. I learned to love work for work's sake. I must get up early now, as I have done all my life, and when 9 o'clock comes, no matter what's going on at home, I must get to bed. And here I am. Yes; I have large means, as you say, but I can't eat as much as yonder clerk, I can't sleep as much, and I can hardly wear any more clothes than he. The only real pleasure I can get out of life that yonder clerk with his limited means cannot get is the giving now and then to some deserving fellow without a soul knowing it $500 or $1,000, giving him a fresh start upward without making the gift a hurt to him. That's the only real pleasure I get out of life. And as to possessions, the only thing I sometimes feel I really own are my two boys and my good name. Take everything else from me, leave me them, and I would yet be rich. I wouldn't care a snap for the rest. We would soon together make enough to keep the wolf a long way from our door."

Free to Speak His Mind.

Old Dr. X. never enjoyed the reputation of being a religious man. In fact, his belief in the sincerity of things spiritual, as expressed by the world at large, was usually summed up by the words poppycock, folderol and the like, uttered in a contemptuous snort. Meeting one day a minister of the vicinity in which he lived, he was reminded of the fact that the minister had but lately inherited, through the death of a relative, a considerable sum of money.

"Mr. D.," he said, addressing the gentleman in question, "I understand that you have acquired quite a considerable fortune from the dear departed, your uncle."

"From my cousin, Dr. X.," corrected Mr. D., a trifle disconcerted.

"Then I am to understand that you are no longer dependent upon the charity of your congregation for support?" continued the doctor.

Mr. D. bowed stiffly in acknowledgment.

"Then, Mr. D.," whispered the old man eagerly, "give 'em hades!"—New York Mail and Express.

The Squeaking Shoe No More.

"Squeaking shoes," said a dealer, "are no more, though of course you haven't noticed it. Stop a minute, though, and think. Isn't it true that for years you haven't come across a squeaking shoe? The thing that caused the trouble was a loose piece of leather in the sole. This, as you walked, worked somewhat like a bellows or an accordion, and great was the sound thereof. All shoes are now sewed—many of them used to be pegged—and sewing does away with any loose pieces of leather in the sole and, therefore, with the squeak as well. I don't believe that if you searched a week you would be able to find a squeaking shoe in Philadelphia."—Philadelphia Press.

"I had a running sore on my leg for seven years," writes Mrs. Jas. Forest of Chippewa Falls, Wis., and spent hundreds of dollars in trying to get it healed. Two boxes of Banner Salve entirely cured it." No other salve so healing. J. J. Orr.

Announcement.

To accommodate those who are partial to the use of atomizers in applying liquids into the nasal passages for catarrhal troubles, the proprietors prepare Cream Balm in liquid form, which will be known as Ely's Liquid Cream Balm. Price including the spraying tube is 75 cts. Druggists or by mail. The liquid form embodies the medicinal properties of the solid preparation. Cream Balm is quickly absorbed by the membrane and does not dry up the secretions but changes them to a natural and healthy character. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N. Y.

We had quite a scare on Chicago street Sunday evening about 8 o'clock when the chimney of Mrs. E. P. Felton's house was discovered to be burning out. Timely assistance from neighbors soon quelled the flames and no serious damage resulted. As the wind was blowing a gale, it probably would have taken most of the town had it had a good start, as we have no protection in that line.

THE GRIP EPIDEMIC.

The Disease More Prevalent than Ever and Quite as Fatal. The Best Treatment.

The grip has surprised the doctors and health authorities this season by its rapid spread and by some novel symptoms. While it spares nobody it is proving especially dangerous to middle aged and elderly persons. In many cases either a fatal onset of pneumonia, or a complete breakdown of health and strength, is apt to follow an attack of grip.

The wise course for all is prevention. By wearing a Benson's Porous Plaster on the chest and back you protect the lungs from cold and chill and (with ordinary care) you are safe from grip.

For those who are already suffering from grip, or from the usual winter coughs and colds, Benson's Plasters are a sure and speedy relief and cure. Highly medicinal and scientific.

Refuse imitations and substitutes. Only the genuine are effective. Examine when you buy. Seabury & Johnson, Manufacturing Chemists, New York.

CONSTIPATION the frequent cause of Appendicitis and many other serious ills should never be neglected. The objection to the usual cathartic remedies is their costive reaction which increases constipation instead of curing it. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is the proper remedy. It acts on the Liver, and when used as directed, permanently removes the constipation. 50 cts. & $1.00 at all Druggists.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

FALL COLDS

They Are Dangerous Because Hard to Cure.

VERY LIKELY TO LAST ALL WINTER.

We Know Something that Cures All Pulmonary Troubles.

IT IS OUR GREAT TONIC RECONSTRUCTOR, VINOL.

There seems to be an epidemic of colds.

It is strange how many people start in with a cold that they have contracted during the autumn months. Such colds are dangerous, for unless cured when the weather is warm it is very difficult to get rid of them when really inclement weather appears.

Do not, if you have a cold, go through this winter and let it pull you down. A racking cough may be the means of undermining your constitution, terminating in consumption, when there will be no hope for escape.

Cod-Liver Oil has always been the greatest known specific for consumption. Naturally Cod-Liver Oil has been given for colds which are regarded by many people as the first stage of this disease. There is no need of our telling you the drawbacks of Cod-Liver Oil; the vile, greasy mixture was so repellent that not more than one person in ten could take it. But Cod-Liver Oil did cure where it could be taken.

Now we have a cod-liver oil preparation that cures just as surely as did this vile remedy. We refer to Vinol. Anybody can take Vinol. It tastes delicious, and because it contains the active curative principles that made Cod-Liver Oil famous as the specific for consumption and other wasting diseases; it will be readily seen how valuable it is for all such troubles.

Here is one letter taken from many that are continually coming to our notice. Mrs. E. Coghlan, 122 Putnam Ave., Cambridgeport, Mass., says:

"Last September I contracted a heavy cold which terminated with tonsilitis, and later the grip. All winter I had a dreadful cough, and the doctor advised me to take several things, among them Cod-Liver Oil. I tried it for several months without obtaining relief. At last I heard of Vinol and gave it a trial. Five bottles cured me and I have had no troubles since."

When we talk of Vinol, we know of what we speak, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied.

SQUIRES GUILTLESS

Secretary of United States Embassy Did No Looting.

VON WALDERSEE'S AGREEMENT

With Li Hung Chang in Response to Important Steps Already Taken by the Chinese Government to Meet Demands of Powers.

Washington, March 8.—Secretary Hay has received a cablegram from Minister Conger at Pekin, stating that the reports that have reached America to the effect that Mr. Squiers, the secretary of legation at the United States embassy had been guilty of looting, was based upon misinformation. As a matter of fact, the minister states that Mr. Squiers is entirely guiltless of any such thing.

Berlin, March 8.—It was asserted Thursday by a high authority that Count von Waldersee's agreement with Li Hung Chang was in response to important steps already taken by the Chinese government to meet the demands of the powers and upon representations to the powers that the Chinese regular troops were now able to put down robbers.

However, the official who made this explanation exphasized the fact that the agreement was only tentative and that Count von Waldersee had by no means laid down his authority in favor of the Chinese government.

According to Chinese statements received officially in Berlin, the court will move about the end of March to some point nearer Pekin. Germany does not know whether this includes the empress dowager.

Count von Waldersee's trip to Tsin-Tau is officially described here as "devoid of political significance except as showing that the province of Chi-Li has now sufficiently quieted down to permit his temporary absence."

Count von Waldersee will examine the whole colony of Kiao Chau, which he has hitherto not seen, and will report to the emperor on the whole subject, including the military foundations. The statement made by various papers that Germany and France mean eventually to keep the province of Chi-Li is officially declared here to be absurd.

The Cologne Volks Zeitung publishes a third letter from Mgr. Anzer, German missionary bishop of Shan-Tung, relating his adventures in Thi-Nin, Yen-Tchou-Fu and Sian-Fu. He says he was received in the most friendly manner by the Chinese governor, Gen. Yuan Shi Ki, and found the churches and missions uninjured, the population peaceable and no "boxers" in evidence.

The war office has received the following from Count von Waldersee, dated Pekin, March 6: "A company of the Third East Asiatics, under Capt. Knoerzer, came into contact yesterday, southwest of Man-Sheng, with 400 Chinese regulars, who had apparently been separated from their main body. The Chinese were scattered and 50 of them were killed. Two of their banners were taken.

"A small detachment was sent from Tien Tsin to Thsang, March 3, to suppress brigandage. Three companies of infantry, a squadron of cavalry and a battery, all under Lieut.-Col. Arnstedt left for Yung-Tsing March 5, with the same object."

Called to His Mother's Bedside.

Springfield, Ill., March 8.—Gov. Richard Yates has been called back from Washington by the serious illness of his mother, widow of the famour old war governor of Illinois, who is now at Jacksonville, Ill. Gov. Yates left Washington on a special train, having been urged to lose no time in reaching his mother's bedside. Grave fears are felt for her recovery, as she is 70 years of age. The governor's contemplated trip to Thomasville, Ga., has been abandoned.

He is Reticent.

New York, March 8.—The man known as "Lord Rosse," who was arrested Tuesday in New Haven, Conn., on a charge of attempting to swindle President Hadley of Yale university, was brought to police headquarters in this city Thursday afternoon. The detectives say he is not Eugene Lascelle, alias "Lord Beresford." Rosse would say nothing about himself or the case in New Haven, and he was sent to a cell. It was too late to take him to court.

Disturbance Quieted.

Washington, March 8.—The disturbance in the senate over the assignment of the best seat on the democratic side of the senate chamber to Senator McComas, a republican senator from Maryland, has been quieted by a transfer. Senator Heitfeld falls heir to the coveted place, and Senator McComas takes Senator Teller's seat on the republican side of the chamber, Mr. Teller going to Mr. Heitfeld's old seat.

The Mecca of Boxers.

Boston, March 8.—The Post says that prominent sporting men of Boston have selected Bermuda as the Mecca of boxers, and that a clubhouse will be opened there to be managed by John L. Sullivan. Two athletic managers left Thursday for Bermuda to arrange matches between "Kid" McCoy and Tommy Ryan for an $8,000 purse as the first big event on the island.

Gone Duck Hunting.

Princeton, N. J., March 8.—Ex-President Grover Cleveland and Prof. Paul Vandyke have left Princeton for the south, where they will spend a few days shooting ducks along the coast of North Carolina. Their first stop will be at Norfolk, from which place they will go by boat along the coast in search of the birds. Both were well equipped with hunting paraphernelia.

A SUPPOSED EARL

Death in a Pittsburg Hospital of a Supposed English Earl.

A KNIGHT OF THE GARTER

Letters Left Seeming to Establish His Identity as a Nobleman—There Are Grave Doubts as to Their Genuineness.

Pittsburg, March 8.—The Leader says: Cecil Sherbrooke Beaumont Howland, whose private papers seem to show that he believed himself earl of Wargrave, and a knight of the Garter of Briton's court, lies dead in the Allegheny General hospital, known as plain C. B. Howland. The dead nobleman was employed as a superintendent of one of the departments of Pressed Steel Car Co. at McKees Rocks. He boarded at the Sauers hotel, Federal street, Allegheny, for the past year, but had not told any one of his position in England. He was taken sick two weeks ago with typhoid fever and was taken to the Allegheny general hospital. He rapidly grew worse and Wednesday his friends in New York were advised of his critical condition. He began to sink rapidly and died yesterday. After Howland's death Mr. Sauers examined his effects to find address of friends. In this way the man's supposed identity was revealed.

Howland came to Pittsburg about a year ago and some time later revisited England, but until his death the motive of the visit was not ascertained.

In the letters left in the possession of Mr. Sauers are many going to prove the legality of the claims of the dead man to an earl's degree. Among the letters were several from A. J. Harrison of 32 Broadway, New York, who claims to be a brother of the dead man.

Another letter from the legal firm of Beresford, Gray & Seymour of London, notifies Howland of his succession to the title and estates of his uncle Edward, earl of Wargrave. The writer addressed the Pittsburger as "My lord" and hoped that he would shortly return to England to enter on possession of his estates. In the letter from the brother occurs the sentence: "I think you ought to go elsewhere and use your own name."

There Are Doubts.

A careful search through Debrett's Illustrated Peerage, Thom's Official Directory, Who's Who, and the Parliamentary Companion shows that there is no "earl of Wargrave." The London postoffice directory shows that there is no such firm as Beresford, Gray & Seymour, either among the solicitors or barristers. There is an Ambrose I. Harrison at 32 Broadway, and efforts are being made to reach him at his home in Brooklyn.

A. J. Harrison of New York, who says he is a brother of the dead man, is here to look after Howland's effects. He said his brother's real name was Cyril S. Harrison, that he was born in New York city, but his boyhood was passed in San Francisco. From early manhood he had been a great traveler and visited almost every country on the globe. Mr. Harrison said his brother could not have inherited a title from his family, but refused to discuss the matter further when asked if it could have been acquired otherwise. Harrison's father and sisters are expected here to-day.

To Erect Monuments.

Washington, March 8.—Chief Yeoman Joseph H. Weir, United States navy, treasurer and secretary of the ministrel troupe of the United States battleship Oregon, has forwarded to the navy department a draft for $220, which amount represents the proceeds of a public entertainment given at Shanghai Dec. 30, 1900, for the purpose of raising a fund to erect a monument to mark the resting place of four marines, Harry Fisher, Robert E. Thomas, Albert Turner and Charles Burlin King, who left the battleship Oregon for duty at Pekin, China, and there lost their lives. This money will be held in trust by the paymaster of the marine corps until the remains of the above mentioned marines are brought to this country and buried. It then will be used in erecting a suitable monument over their graves.

Well Behaved Soldiers.

London, March 8.—Lord Roberts, presiding at a meeting of the Army Temperance society, contrasted the moderation of the British soldiers in South Africa with previous campaigns. He said it was true they had not had many opportunities to drink, but at Bloemfontein, Johannesburg and Pretoria, where they did have such opportunities, they were remarkably well behaved, and he never had heard a single complaint of a soldier being rude or improperly behaved towards Boer women. The latter and their children fearlessly went upon the streets, and the children constantly played and talked with the British soldiers.

A Complimentary Dinner.

Washington, March 8.—Friends of ex-Senators Carter, Shoup and Thurston, whose terms have expired, tendered them a complimentary dinner at the Shoreham Thursday night. About 80 covers were laid. The dinner was attended by senators, representatives, army officers and newspaper men who have been intimate friends of the senators.

Cavalry for Philippines.

Washington, March 8.—The first provisional squadron of cavalry, now in the course of organization at the Presidio, San Francisco, has been assigned as the first squadron of the Fifteenth United States cavalry and ordered to prepare for early services in the Philippine archipelago.

Alleged Oxford Burglars.

Pontiac, Mich., March 8.—Both men accused of burglarizing the hardware store of W. T. Tunstead at Oxford Tuesday, are now in the hands of the authorities, Theodore Wattas being captured at Detroit late Wednesday evening. They will be taken to Oxford for examination on the charge of burglary.

Plunged Through a Window.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 8.—A bad accident occurred in the gymnasium last night. Stone, a freshman lit, who was practicing on the relay races, lost his balance in a turn and the force sent part of his body through a window. His arm and hand was badly cut and he may lose his little finger.

EXPORTS TO RUSSIA

Not Affected by the Recent Decree of Russian Government.

Washington, March 8.—A statement prepared at the bureau of statistics shows that during the last year the export value of American goods exported to Russia, not affected by the recent decree of the Russian government in retaliation for the countervailing duty imposed by this government on Russian sugar, was $7,598,020, while that affected amounted to $2,872,429. Following is the statement:

Forged a Will.

New York, March 8.—Chauncey F. Glover, a wealthy resident of Cuchogue, L. I., was found guilty in the supreme court of Suffolk county on the charge of forging a will purporting to be that of his father. Glover was sentenced to four years and four months. He fell in a faint as the judge passed sentence upon him. The older Glover died in 1890 and the son contested the will which was produced at that time. In 1890 Glover offered for probate as the will of his father a document which gave him practically all of his father's estate, the paper bearing date 1890. The stationer who manufactured the paper on which the alleged will was written testified that the paper was not manufactured until 1897, and upon this evidence Glover was convicted.

Charged With Murder.

Knobnoster, Mo., March 8.—Mrs. Ellen Allen, mother of Nellie Allen, the 17-year-old girl whose dead body was found in the street here Tuesday night, has been taken into custody charged with being an accessory in the murder of her daughter. Wednesday Henry Wisely, a negro, was arrested for the murder on the strength of testimony given by Mrs. Allen before the coroner's jury. It is believed that the girl was suffocated in the Allen home and the body placed in the street by the murderers. Mrs. Allen is a widow and has lived here many years. Both she and Wisely are known in police circles.

Suicided by Shooting.

Minneapolis, March 8.—Despondent over his recent discharge from the Duluth diocese, Rev. Francis Budzyoski, a Roman Catholic priest, Thursday shot himself in the heart in a local hotel and died before aid could reach him. He fired two shots at himself while two bell boys stood outside the door waiting for him. He had on his person a letter from Bishop McGolrick, dispensing with his services. Two other letters were found, one addressed to a brother in Elmira, N. Y., and the other to a waitress in a local restaurant.

Demand an Advance.

Pittsburg, March 8.—The journeymen plasterers of the Pittsburg district have made a demand for an advance of wages of 40 cents a day, to take effect on April 1st. About 350 men are interested. All are members of the Operative Plasterers' International association.

Burned to Death.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 8.—Mrs. Sanders and her niece, Viola Wilcox, were burned to death in a fire which destroyed their home in the southern portion of the city. Mrs. Sanders endeavored to save the child and fell when almost out of the house.

Her Opinion of Compliments.

"No," said Miss Cayenne, "I don't care for people who continually pay compliments."

"But it shows an amiable disposition."

"Perhaps, but the habit reminds me that some people are willing to pay only what costs them nothing and what they don't really owe."—Washington Star.

AGAIN HONORED.

Senator Frye Elected President Pro Tempore of the Senate.

Washington, March 8.—Senator Wm. P. Frye of Maine Thursday was re-elected unanimously president pro tempore of the senate to serve during the pleasure of the senate. This is the second time Senator Frye has been honored by his colleagues. Five years ago—on Feb. 7, 1896—the republicans then being in a minority, he was elected unanimously. His services as president pro tempore, especially since the death of the late Vice-President Hobart, have won for him the cordial appreciation of his fellow senators for his able and impartial administration of the post.

At Thursday's session Mr. Morgan of Alabama concluded his speech in support of his resolution declaring the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty between the United States and Great Britain. His peroration was really pathetic. He had devoted the best years of his official life, he said, to advance the construction of the Nicaragua canal, but now he did not expect to live to see the work upon the great waterway begun.

At 1:40 p. m. the senate resumed consideration of the legislative business.

On motion of Mr. Allison the senate, by a formal resolution, elected Senator Frye president of the senate pro tempore, to hold office during the pleasure of the senate and to exercise the office in the absence of the vice-president from time to time.

Mr. Allison and Mr. Morgan (Ala.), as a committee, escorted Senator Frye to the president's desk. Visibly affected by the honor which again had been conferred upon him, he spoke as follows: "Senators, my cup is full and running over. The expressions of your confidence that I have received in the last few days make me supremely happy and obliged to you. I am overwhelmed by them and have nothing more to say."

Then at 1:50 p. m. the senate adjourned until to-day.

ELEVATOR ACCIDENT.

Two Men Killed and Seven Others Injured.

Moline, Ill., March 8.—Two men were killed and seven injured Thursday by the fall of an elevator in the works of the Moline Plow Co.

The accident occurred while the men were going to work. Twenty-five workmen crowded upon the 9x12 foot platform. The elevator ascended a few feet when a drum gear gave way, letting the cage fall from the first story to the basement. The iron counterbalance weights shot up to the top of the shaft and four of them, each weighing 100 pounds, became disengaged by collision with the framework of the shaft and crashed down four stories upon the mass of men below.

One weight struck A. J. Burgstrom, crushing his head and spattering his brains over the faces of his companions. E. D. Swanson at the moment was engaged in a friendly scuffle with Burgston and was struck by another weight that injured him fatally.

The elevator was warranted to carry 4,000 pounds. An inquest was held and a verdict was returned exonerating the plow company.

An Insurrection Feared.

London, March 8.—"The Mohammetans in Mongolia are trying to foment an insurrection among the Mohammetans of the Siberian steppes," says the Odessa correspondent of the Daily Express, "and the Russian government has ordered at least two soldiers billeted in every family throughout eastern Siberia, who shall act as menials and be ready to assemble at any moment to suppress a rising."

Awarded Damages.

Toledo, March 8.—At Bellefontaine a jury awarded Nellie Jackson $700 damages against the commissioners of Logan county for injuries sustained at the hands of a mob that took her from jail at West Liberty, in company with Edward Jackson and David Rickman, and tarred the trio in November, 1899.

Leased Derby Winner.

London, March 8.—The racing calendar announces that King Edward has leased Diamond Jubilee (the winner of last year's Derby two thousand guineas, Newmarket stakes, Eclipse stakes and St. Ledger stakes) and 12 other horses to the Duke of Devonshire.

Bull Fighters for Pan-American.

Mexico City, March 8.—The government will send 20 rurales, members of Mexico's crack cavalry corps, to the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo. Bull fighters have been engaged for the Buffalo exposition and will give an exhibition of all the feats not requiring torture or killing of bulls.

Bubonic Plague.

Cape Town, March 8.—A soldier employed at the Castle has been attacked by bubonic plague. Two Europeans have also been attacked by the disease and a European child has died of it. Twenty-four additional persons have been isolated owing to contact with those stricken.

Killed by Fire Damp.

Celsenkircnen, Prussia, March 8.—Ten persons were killed and many injured Thursday by an explosion of fire damp in the Consolidated mine. It is feared that others are entombed. The adjoining shaft collapsed and at present it is impossible to reach them.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, March 8.—Thursday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash, $147,718,022; gold, $88,150,369.

A Rich Find.

Victoria, B. C., March 8.—News has been received by the steamer Cottage City, which arrived from Alaskan ports Thursday, of a rich find on Porcupine creek, gravel yielding $5 a bucket being discovered.

What Forty Poles Make.

A good story is told about a certain professor whose business it was to lecture to a number of students on surveying. During one of the lectures, the professor said that in his opinion the pole was of little or no value. To the astonishment of those present a Polish gentleman arose and, after accusing the professor of insulting his countrymen, demanded an apology.

The professor thereupon explained that the pole to which he referred was merely a term of measurement. The Polish gentleman, seeing his mistake, asked the professor to forgive his apparent rudeness. To this the professor smartly replied:

"You could not be rude, sir, even if you tried, for it takes 40 poles to make one rood!"

THE LEGISLATURE

Both Houses Sat Down Hard on Junketing Trips.

THEY MAY ADJOURN MAY 4

A Concurrent Resolution to That Effect Presented—Committees Ordered to Report Out Appropriation Bills March 14.

Lansing, Mich., March 8.—Both branches of the legislature sat down hard Thursday on proposed legislative junkets, Senator Atwood leading fights in the senate to prevent the making of junketing trips.

In the senate yesterday afternoon Senator Kelly moved to take from the table the concurrent resolution relative to the appointment of a joint commission to go to Milwaukee on taxation of vessel interests. Atwood promptly moved that Kelly's motion be tabled, and the latter prevailed. The vote was 9 to 9, and Lieut.-Gov. Robinson voted with Atwood.

Senator "Pop" Goodell asked leave of absence for the committee on deaf school from to-day's session. Atwood urged that there had been but a bare quorum present all the week; that excusing three senators would break the quorum to-day, and that for the sake of decency, if nothing more, they ought to stay and attend to business unless the proposed visit to the school at Flint was exceedingly urgent.

This gave Kelly a chance to go for Atwood, and he went. He said the legislature had last week adjourned to attend a banquet in Detroit, to attend another in Grand Rapids, and to attend a republican convention, and that even now there was a bare quorum present because a lot of the senators were excused to go on a pleasure trip to Washington. He declared there was no business before the senate ready to be acted on, and that to-day would be the best time in the world for this committee to visit the institution.

Senator Helme also sided with Goodell. He said the senate had not done a blessed thing all the week, because of the Washington pleasure trip, and the senate might just as well not have met at all.

But Atwood won out, and the committee was refused leave of absence by vote of 11 to 5. The committee, however, as Pop Goodell expressed it, decided to defy the senate, and left at 5 o'clock in the evening for Flint. Senators Sovereign and Palmer are the other members of the committee.

In the house Rep. Henry's concurrent resolution to authorize the labor committees of the house and senate to visit the coal mines in the Saginaw valley in connection with the bill to establish a new state board for the inspection of coal mines, and for the regulation and licensing of the miners, was voted down, 10 yeas to 41 nays, several of the representatives not voting.

In the senate Senator Atwood offered a concurrent resolution that the legislature do no business after April 25, and finally adjourn May 4. He moved that it lie on the table, and the motion was adopted.

The Kelly fish bill, allowing commercial fishermen to keep and sell 10 per cent of illegal fish, came up again, and Senator Kelly accepted Helme's amendment that the figures be decreased to 5 per cent. But Atwood was still dissatisfied, and Kelly finally moved that the bill be tabled.

The senate adjourned to 9 o'clock this morning, and from then to 9 Monday evening, as there will probably be no quorum to-day.

Rep. Dingley, chairman of the ways and means committee, offered the following resolution in the house yesterday afternoon:

"Resolved, That all committees of the house (except the ways and means committee) having before them bills or joint resolutions carrying appropriations, be requested to report out such bills and joint resolutions not later than Thursday, March 14."

"We must be very careful as to our appropriations this year," said Mr. Dingley. "The ways and means committee wants to give fair, honest and generous dealing with existing state institutions and boards. We do not wish to increase salaries unless it be necessary. We should, in my opinion, cut down the appropriations $1,000,000 lower than the amount allowed last year, if possible. They should be reduced at least $500,000 in any event. We want to get the total appropriations, including those carried by the general purpose bill, below $6,000,000, for the interests of the state at large. The ways and means committee asks the co-operation of members of the house to these ends."

By a vote of 3 to 21 Mr. Dingley's resolution was adopted.

The house passed the bill increasing the salary of the mayor of Detroit from $1,200 to $5,000 per year.

Ice-Bound Vessels.

Ludington, Mich., March 8.—The five ice-bound boats were not able to clear the harbor Thursday, but late in the afternoon the car ferry Pere Marquette succeeded in freeing herself and is now inside the harbor. The car ferry Muskegon is hard aground on a sand bar. The Marquette is preparing to back out of the channel. If she succeeds Nos. 3 and 4 will readily follow, and the three steamers will then try to pull the Muskegon off. The weather is mild and the wind from the southwest.

Child Abducted.

Iron Mountain, Mich., March 8.—The story has just been made known of the abduction of Aurilla, the 7-year-old daughter of Angel Zambo, from here on Feb. 25, by Melita Salivante. She was taken to Manistee and returned home Thursday. The woman was hired by a Chinaman to take the child, but it is alleged they wouldn't pay her price. The authorities are investigating.

Suspicious.

THE GARNISHEE BILL.

Reports That Money Is Being Used for and Against It.

Lansing, Mich., March 8.—There are all sorts of rumors to the effect that money is being used in connection with Rep. Nevins' garnishee law amendment bill, and, as one result, the house judiciary committee has pigeon-holed the bill for a while at least, pending a quiet investigation.

One of the prominent members of the committee said Thursday: "We hear reports that money is being used by both the pushers and the opponents of the bill. It would look to me as though the friends of the measure are in better position to spend money than the labor men. The reports about money being used by either side are rather indefinite and vague."

Paul Marrin of Grand Rapids, secretary of the State Federation of Labor, said that, although he had been assured the Nevins bill would be reported out by the judiciary committee, the representatives of organized labor had practically concluded to quit fighting it in the legislature and concentrate their efforts on Gov. Bliss with a view to having him veto the measure.

Rep. Nevins said yesterday: "I never heard until this noon that there was any talk that money is being used for or against my garnishee bill. There is absolutely no truth in these reports so far as I know, and I believe I am in a position to know whether such rumors have foundation in fact. These stories are being circulated by opponents of the bill in efforts to have the bill tied up in the judiciary committee."

Letter Written by Washington.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 8.—While sorting over a waste paper stock received from Philadelphia, at the Bryant paper mill Thursday, an employe found an autograph letter of George Washington. It was written by Washington in 1766, from Fairfax court house, Virginia, to Capt. James Jamieson, a rich New York merchant, asking for boat freight rates on a lot of flour he wished to ship. The letter is in a well preserved condition. In the stock with it were found two copies of the Federal Gazette and Baltimore Advertiser, over 100 years old, and an autograph letter written in 1793 by Robert Morris of Philadelphia, who supplied money to the government when it was in financial straits during the revolution.

A letter from Alexander Hamilton, written in 1792, was also found. The letters were originally the property of one Robert Ferguson of Port Tobacco Md.

Justice's Mistake.

Niles, Mich., March 8.—Henry Emery, an aged junk dealer, was arrested here 11 days ago, at the instance of a farmer residing a mile south, who alleged that Emery had stolen ten bushels of corn from him. The warrant was issued by a son-in-law of the farmer, a local justice, and Emery was remanded to jail to await trial. Thursday he was brought before the justice for trial and the prisoner's lawyer pointed out the law which prohibits a justice from issuing a warrant to a relative, within the fourth degree, and as a son-in-law is related to his father-in-law in the first degree, the justice found it necessary to discharge the prisoner. Another warrant was then issued by a second local justice, and Emery was rearrested. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 15 days in jail minus the 11 days he had already served illegally.

Fireman Killed.

Lapeer, Mich., March 8.—John A. Livingston, a member of the Lapeer fire department, was thrown under the hook and ladder trucks Thursday in an attempt to swing upon the platform as the heavily loaded wagon was turning a corner. He missed his footing on the icy street. His head and shoulder was badly crushed. He lived only a few minutes after the accident. Deceased had resided in Lapeer all his life and was a favorite in the fire department. He leaves a widow and five small children, and $1,000 insurance in the Modern Woodmen.

Statue to Gen. Grant.

Washington, March 8.—The commission created by congress to select a site and secure plans for a statue or memorial to Gen. Grant, has been in session at the war department. Gen. Dodge, the president of the commission, favors a site on the reservation south of the state department, directly opposite the Corcoran gallery of art, a place now occupied by the president's stables, and it is understood that the commission approved of Gen. Dodge's choice. The statue is to cost $250,000 and the artists of the United States may compete in designs.

Washed Overboard.

London, March 8.—According to a dispatch to the Daily Express from Odessa, a pilgrim steamer was caught in a storm in the Black sea and 72 pilgrims were washed overboard and drowned.

Killed Woman Suffrage.

Indianapolis, March 8.—The Indiana senate Thursday killed the resolution amending the constitution to extend the right of suffrage to women. The house had passed the resolution.

So It Was.

"Mamma, come quick! The catsup on the shelf."

"Drat that cat! I'll make fiddle strings of her in no time if I lay my hands on her! She's forever into something," and the enraged materfamilias vigorously pounded her way into the pantry.

"Where is she, Tommy? I don't see her."

"See who?"

"Why, you said the cat was on the shelf."

"I never said there was a cat on the shelf."

"Yes, you did. You said, 'The's cat's up on the shelf.'"

"So I did, and I say it yet. The catsup on the shelf right before your eyes. Don't you see it? There in that old wine bottle," and he quietly but very swiftly dodged out into the kitchen.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Flight of Time.

A masked man confronted me with a pistol in a lonely spot on the dark road.

"Cough up your chronometer," he demanded gruffly.

I fumbled for my 18 carat timepiece, thinking that my last hour was at hand. When I dared to look up, he had vanished with his plunder.

Even then, such is the incongruity of the human mind, though rejoiced that my time had not yet come, I regretted in my heart that it had gone.—New York Sun.

But I did not cease my good deeds. I call myself a forethoughtful trooper, and from the saddlebags I carried across my saddle bow I took a cold chicken, a piece of cold boiled ham and some hard biscuits, a dinner fit for a prince, or rather an honest American citizen, which was better, in these hard times of war. To this royal collection I added a canteen well filled with water, remembered the stout little flask in my breast pocket, and the repast was complete, all but the serving.

Her eyes sparkled at the sight of the good things. Wood nymphs, Saxon or other, must eat.

"Let me carve the chicken," she said.

"You have neither a table, plates nor a knife," I said.

"This log will serve as a table, some of those clean dry leaves as plates, and you could lend me a knife."

"How could I lend you a knife, a weapon, after all the tricks you have tried to play upon me? You don't forget this, do you?"

I took the little toy pistol with which she had tried to shoot me out of my pocket and held it up before her, but she laughed. Women don't seem to have any conscience, or at least they forget their crimes, which is convenient for their peace of mind.

"Give me the knife," she said, "and don't waste time. I'm hungry."

I distrusted her as much as ever, even more, but I opened the blade of my clasp knife and handed it to her.

"A very good knife," she said, "but I have no doubt it was stolen from an Englishman. Ah, here it is—the name of an English maker on the blade!"

"It was not stolen!" I exclaimed indignantly. "I took it from him fairly at the battle of Monmouth, where he fell into my hands."

"That, I suppose, is a good enough title for a rebel," she said and began to carve the chicken.

It was a fine, fat chicken, beautifully roasted, and she showed that she knew how to carve, for she deftly clipped off a leg, which she held up before me.

"That looks fat and good to eat," she said, "and it's a fine chicken, but I've no doubt it was stolen from a loyal subject of King George."

"It's not true!" I exclaimed in some wrath. "He was a Tory farmer, I admit, but I did not steal the chicken. I took it before his eyes, and he never said a word."

"Afraid, I suppose, but it doesn't make any difference to you. It will taste just as good to a rebel. Here, take your piece on this big, clean leaf and eat."

I took the piece and ate. She carved off a portion for herself, too, and ate with a good appetite. Then I handed her the canteen of water and told her to take a drink.

"Don't be afraid," I said. "I took that water out of a clear brook in the wilderness, and the land through which it flowed belonged to God, not to any Englishman or Tory."

"But how about the canteen?" she asked. "Did you steal that from any English soldier or take it by violence, which is worse?"

I showed her the name of the maker, a Boston man, upon it.

"A vile rebel town, the worst of them all," she said.

But she took a good drink out of it, and when she handed it back to me I imitated her example. Then, while the fire crackled and blazed higher and the circle of light widened and the darkness beyond it thickened, we ate and drank, and I grew cheerful. I had defeated all her attempts, and tomorrow I would find Morgan and give her into other hands and be rid of all my troubles, yet I was compelled to admit once again that she was very beautiful with the firelight flickering and playing over her face and hair, but all the world knows, as I have said, that the handsome women are the most dangerous, the most cunning, and I was on my guard against any new attempt of hers to escape. Still, when I looked around at the blackness of the night and heard the sigh of the cold wind above the crackling of the fire, I did not think that she would dare to attempt it. I knew no woman who would venture alone on a winter night into that uncanny wilderness, and, knowing it, I felt easy.

CHAPTER IV
SUPPER AND SONG

The horses looked jealously at our supper. I was sorry for them, especially for Old Put, whose great, intelligent eyes said in the purest English, "I, too, am hungry, master." But I could do nothing. I had no provender for horses, and so I told him to wait as best he could until morning and I would find something for him if I had to rob a patriot farmer to do it. He bowed his head in resignation like the wise horse he was, while the brown hack, not so well bred, tugged at his bridle rein and thrashed about until I threatened him with a big stick.

After the chicken the girl served the cold ham and drank from the canteen again. I did likewise. Moreover, I urged her to wet her lips at the flask a second time as a further precaution against cold, which she did literally and no more. I was liberal rather than literal, for I was a soldier and knew its value. I took my blanket from my saddle bow and urged her to wrap it around herself, but she said "No;" that her heavy cloak was sufficient, and she would not deprive me even if I was a misguided rebel. I saw that she spoke truly, as her cloak was of the most ample character, and so, having no further compunction, I wrapped the blanket around me, Indian style, and, sitting down on the dry leaves in front of the fire, leaned my head against the log. She sat on the log at the other end, leaning her head against a dead bough which was thrust straight up in the air. I had put the remains of the provisions back in my saddlebags.

Triumphant, warm, well fed, my cheerfulness, my satisfaction with myself, increased. I stared into the bed of red coals and saw figures, pictures, there. Near the center of the bed the coals had fallen into such shape that I could trace distinctly the epaulets of a general, and I knew that those epaulets were for me. The coals crumbled into new shapes and built the house which was to be mine when the war was victoriously over and I was ready to retire to it with my honors. She, too, seemed to be engaged in the same business, for she was staring with half closed eyes into the dreamy coals.

"Why are you a rebel?" she asked. "Is it from pure perverseness, for they say all you Americans are so?"

"They say many things about us in England that are not true," I said, "and this is one of them. The English themselves have often been rebels, and their present royal family, one of the worst they have ever had, and they have had the Stuarts, was placed on the throne by a just rebellion."

"You must know," she replied, "that in England the character of the sovereign is nothing. It is the sovereign principle. The worse the sovereign the better the court likes him."

We relapsed into silence and our study of the red coals. Old Put whinnied gently, raised his head and looked beyond the fire, as if he saw something in the darkness impenetrable to all but horse eyes.

"I'd better see to that," I said. "Old Put is not going to give a warning for nothing. He has a character to lose."

"A wildcat may be," she suggested.

"Perhaps, but I'll see."

I rose, still keeping my blanket wrapped around me, and ordered her to stay where she was under pain of being bound again. She promised, and I believed that she would not stir from her position on the log. The darkness and the desolation were not inviting.

I walked out into the black bank of the night, but could neither see nor find anything. I made a complete circuit around the oasis of light from the fire, and all was peaceful and quiet. I returned to the log, ready to scold Old Put for giving a false alarm, but refrained, reflecting that he might be nervous and irritable owing to his lack of food.

"What did you find?" asked the girl, looking at me with bright eyes.

"Nothing."

"I thought you wouldn't. It was a wildcat or maybe a harmless little squirrel."

"Aren't you afraid of the wild animals?"

"Not with such a brave rebel as you near me."

I opened my eyes a little wider and looked at her. It was the first time that she had complimented me even in that half handed way, and I was surprised.

"I thought you did not allow me the possession of any desirable quality whatsoever," I said.

"You are improving," she replied. "Perhaps it is due to my society. I may yet make you a loyal follower of King George and save you from the hangman."

I had my doubts about the "loyalty," which is a term devised for the protection of sovereigns in their crimes, but I said nothing just then. She, too, said nothing more. The heap of coals grew and glowed in the depths with deep crimsons and scarlets, throwing out a generous heat and wooing me to sleep. Despite my sense of caution and the efforts of my will, my eyelids drooped. The castles in the coals became more indistinct and wavered as if they were made of red mist.

Old Put whinnied again and raised his head high in the air like one who listens. I was wide awake in an instant and on my feet again.

"Put," I said, "if I find that you have given a false alarm a second time you shall have nothing to eat in the morning."

"I wouldn't bother about it," said the girl. "It's only a squirrel or a rabbit. Any horse would notice the passing of such an animal. Their senses are keener than ours."

She was growing very considerate of me!

But I searched the wood again, and finding nothing returned to my old and comfortable place. Old Put was restless and shuffled about; but, angry at his idle alarms, I commanded him roughly to keep quiet, and he obeyed.

The girl was humming softly to herself as if she were thinking of her far-away English home. I supposed she was lonely and homesick, and again some pity for her crept into my heart.

"Are you singing of your sweetheart?" I asked, meaning to cheer her up.

"I have none," she replied.

"Not now perhaps, but you will have some day."

"That is a different matter."

"What kind of a sweetheart would you choose?"

"A soldier, a gallant English soldier, one loyal to his king through all."

She continued to hum her little song, whatever it was. Something stirred in the wood, and Old Put, despite my previous command, whinnied and stamped his feet.

"Confound that beast, whatever it may be!" I said. "It must be a wildcat attracted by the light of our fire."

"Let the wildcat go," she said. "Listen and I will sing you a song that will tell you what my future betrothed and husband shall be. It's an old Scotch song of devotion and loyalty, but we English sing it, too, and like it as well as the Scotch. 'Dumbarton's Drums' we call it."

"Sing," I said.

Then she sang:

"Dumbarton's drums beat bonnie O,
When they mind me of my dear Johnnie O
How happy am I
When my soldier is by,
While he kisses and blesses his Annie O!
'Tis a soldier alone can delight me O,
For his graceful looks do invite me O,
While guarded in his arms
I'll fear no war's alarms,
Neither danger nor death shall e'er fright me O!

"My love is a handsome laddie O,
Genteel, but ne'er foppish nor gaudy O!
Though commissions are dear,
Yet I'll buy him one this year,
For he'll serve no longer a cadie O!
A soldier has honor and bravery O,
Unacquainted with rogues and their knavery O!
He minds no other thing
But the ladies or the king,
For every other care is but slavery O!

"Then I'll be the captain's lady O!
Farewell, all my friends and my daddy O!
I'll wait no more at home,
But I'll follow with the drum,
And whene'er that beats I'll be ready O!
Dumbarton's drums sound bonnie O!
They are sprightly like my dear Johnnie O
How happy shall I be
When on my soldier's knee,
And he kisses and blesses his Annie O!"

Her voice was deep and true, and the old war ballad was music in my ears. As the melody rose and fell in the lonely night my eyes drooped again and my brain became dim with advancing slumbers like a child soothed to sleep by the song of his mother. I was as tired as a dog. I had ridden long and far and had worked much, and every nerve and muscle in me cried aloud for rest, but I roused myself as she finished and the last note of her song died in the darkness.

"That is a proper military song," I said, "and nobly sung, but I object to the sentiments of your hero. He minds no other thing but the ladies or the king. The ladies are all right, but no king! Leave the king out!"

Old Put was stamping his feet again.

"That's right, Put," I said. "Applaud the song, for it was well sung, though you and I, who are good Americans, don't altogether like the sentiments. That, I take it, is an old song of loyalty to the Stuarts. It is a singular thing to me how wholesome minded English people can invest the Stuarts, whom they kicked out of their country, with so much romance and charm when all history shows they were an utterly debased lot, and nobody knows it better than the English themselves."

"The sentiments of the song, king and all, are perfectly correct, and I'll sing that verse to you again."

She looked at me with a look half of defiance, half a smile, and sang:

"My love is a handsome laddie O,
Genteel, but ne'er foppish nor gaudy O
Though commissions are dear,
Yet I'll buy him one this year,
For he'll serve no longer a cadie O!
A soldier has honor and bravery O,
Unacquainted with rogues and their knavery O!
He minds no other thing
But the ladies or the king,
For every other care is but a slavery O!"

She sang it still more softly and gently than before, and, though my eyelids drooped again, I turned my eyes from the bed of coals to her face. The firelight played ruddily over her eyes and cheeks, and the expression there seemed tender and faraway, as if her thoughts had gone from this dark night and the war torn fields of South Carolina to the green English meadows and peaceful sunshine.

When she finished, I raised my hands and clapped them together.

"Well done!" I said. "Well done!"

"Done well enough for us," said some one, and strong hands reached over the log and grasped me by the wrists. My languor and my sleepiness were gone in an instant, and I made a powerful effort to wrench myself loose, but I had been taken too suddenly. Three or four men flung themselves upon me, and I was crushed under a great weight, while the firm grip was still on my wrists. I managed to deal somebody a heavy kick and heard a grunt of pain, but in a few seconds I was overpowered and, like a wise man, ceased to struggle further.

Singularly enough, one of my early thoughts in that moment was of relief that Old Put should prove not to be a false prophet, having enjoyed such a good character in that respect so long. I had been a fool not to take his warning more seriously. Then I wondered why the girl did not cry out at the sight of struggling men and the sound of oaths and blows, a violent medley usually very terrifying to women. I caught one glimpse of her, and she was sitting on the log, her back against the up thrust bough, leaning upon it as lazily as if she were in a rocking chair in a parlor. The firelight still played over her face and eyes, but the soft and tender expression which had pleased me was gone. Instead the look that she turned upon me was a mixture of dislike, malice and triumph.

After meeting such a glance it was a relief to me to look another way and see who had captured me.

CHAPTER V
A CHANGE OF FRONT.

"Truss him up good," said one. "These rebels are not to be trusted even when they are tied."

I gave careful notice to the man who spoke, evidently the leader of the party. He was of middle size, middle age and truculent features. His most noticeable characteristic was his drooping eyelids, which would induce the casual observer to think he was fast asleep, though in reality he was wide awake. He was dressed in the uniform of a captain in the British army. I set him down as a partisan chief on a small scale. He had five comrades, cast in the same mold as himself, all dressed in British soldiers' uniforms and rather wild of look.

They bound me securely and set me with my back to the log and my face to the fire, much in the position that I had occupied while the girl was singing. Confound her for lulling away my caution and suspicions in such a manner! I had no doubt now that she had seen the red uniforms of the British when first I went into the wood to search for the cause of the noise. I was a fool to let my distrust of her decrease for a moment.

"That was a complete job, Miss Howard," said the leader, "well done by everybody, and your part is the best done of all."

"You have rescued me from the hands of a rebel, Captain Crowder," she replied, "and I am back with my own people, for both of which I thank you."

I thought it was time for me to say something.

"It is true you have trapped me between you, Captain Crowder, for so I hear the lady call you," I said, "but I wouldn't exult, because the next chance might be mine, and it would hurt your feelings for me to pay you back."

"I don't know about any next chance for you," he said, "because here in the south we generally hang rebels."

I did not reply to his threat, thinking that I had said enough, and turned my head away. My glance fell now upon Old Put. His eyes were full of reproach to me. The I told you so expression was there, and the I am sorry for you and myself expression was mingled with it. "I will never lose faith in you again, best of all comrades!" I signaled back.

Captain Crowder, having seized me, also seized my camp, evidently with the intention of spending the night there, and he posted one sentinel, while the others sat around the fire, making themselves comfortable. The girl occupied her old seat on the tree trunk, leaning against the projecting bough.

"Do you know where my father is, Captain Crowder?" she asked.

"With Tarleton," he replied.

"And where is Tarleton?"

"Hot on the chase of the rebel major and his men."

"Can we overtake Tarleton by noon tomorrow?"

"Undoubtedly, for he has to go rather slowly, not knowing just where Morgan is. He doesn't want to run past the game. Morgan's hard to catch, but when Tarleton once comes up with him there'll be an end to one rebel army."

I listened to this conversation with the closest attention and continued to listen while he described Tarleton's movements, force and equipment. If I could escape him and the hangman's rope with which he had threatened me, this information would be of great value to us. I was glad that, for the sake of precaution, I had torn up the girl's letters and other written facts about us when I captured her, for now she could rely only upon speech. I waited for her to tell Crowder about us, but she said nothing upon that point, and I reflected that her reticence was natural, as she would want to give her information herself to Tarleton, and thus secure all the credit instead of letting the guerrilla, Crowder, claim at least half of it.

Two of the men disappeared in the wood and returned in a few moments, leading the horses of the band, which they tethered to the trees near by. I guessed that they had seen the light of our fire at a distance and leaving their horses there had crept upon me.

"You will excuse us, Miss Howard, while we eat and drink a little," said Crowder. "We've ridden far today, and we're tired and hungry."

Their appearance was sufficient indication that they needed food and rest, for the grime of travel was thick upon them. They rummaged their haversacks and saddlebags and produced bread and meat, which they began to eat greedily. They were absorbed like wild animals in their repast and paid no attention to anything else.

CINCH WENT FISHING

HE USED HIS HOOK AND LINE IN A BIG CLOVER FIELD.

It Puzzled His Comrades to Discover What He Was Angling For, but He Finally Landed the Prize For Which He Was Striving.

Some young men who enlisted during the war with Spain, but never saw any active service, were talking over their days in uniform one night and old, interesting stories of camp life. The young man who had been a hospital steward told this story:

"A month in our camp in Georgia was enough to drive a man to despair, for not only was it hot, but every day increased our belief that the government had no intention of giving us a chance to get into action or to let us go back to our homes. It was a mighty tough predicament for a lot of young men who had left business and everything else in a burst of patriotic enthusiasm and expected to get into a scrap in short order. The men worked every wire they could to get their discharges, but it was at a time when the man with a pull couldn't get any more than the man without a friend. After awhile the boys gave up trying to get their discharges and made up their minds to grin and bear it.

"As a hospital steward I used to hear a good deal about the health of the regiment from the surgeons, and one day I was very much surprised to hear one of them say that he was afraid Cinch of Company C was going to lose his mind. I knew Cinch as a big, good natured fellow, who tried to get a discharge as soon as he learned that we were not going to have a fight. When he failed, he became sullen and moody. The more we watched him the more convinced we became that something was wrong with him. Every time we came around we found him mumbling to himself, and one day a crowd of us found him seated on a stump in the middle of a big clover field, holding in front of him a long pole, attached to which was a piece of cord, on the end of which was a pin bent to resemble a fishhook. He would drop the hook into the long grass and let it stay there for a time. Then he would make a cast and when the hook fell would sit and watch the end of his line intently. Every once in awhile he would jerk the line out of the grass as though he had felt a nibble. Once one of the boys stepped up and said:

"'What are you fishing for?'

"He got no answer. All Cinch did was to turn a pair of hollow eyes on him and then resume his fishing. After that a gang used to go out and watch Cinch every afternoon. They would hide in the grass and almost burst with laughter at the seriousness with which the poor fellow would cast his line of wrapping cord and his pin hook and then sit and wait for a bite. Every once in awhile one of the boys would saunter out and say:

"'What are you fishing for, Cinch?'

"It got to be the regimental saying, and I suppose that the question, 'What are you fishing for, Cinch?' was thrown at the man from Company C a hundred times a day. By and by the news got to the officers that Cinch was going fast. They heard about his fishing in the fields, and one day the surgeon major went out and witnessed the performance. He went back and reported to the colonel that unless Cinch was discharged at once he would be hopelessly insane. The result was that his condition was telegraphed on to Washington and discharge papers were returned at once.

"The colonel in the goodness of his heart went to look up Cinch and give him the news. He found him sitting on a stump in the field fishing away, while around him sat about 50 of the regiment, one of whom would yell, 'What are you fishing for, Cinch?' every few minutes. The colonel stepped up and touching Cinch on the shoulder said:

"'Cinch, we think your health demands that you leave the service, and so we have procured an honorable discharge for you. Here it is,' and he handed Cinch the papers.

"Cinch dropped his fishing pole and grabbed the papers. He gave one look at them, and when he saw that they were all right waved them triumphantly over his head and shouted at the top of his voice:

"'This is what I was fishing for, dang ye all. This is what I was fishing for, and I got it too.' And with that he went dancing over the field, leaving us standing there, the first gleam of the truth creeping into our brains.

"The colonel looked foolish, and by and by we began to sneak away one by one. There was no doubt but what the regimental question, 'What are you fishing for, Cinch?' had been answered and in a most emphatic and surprising fashion. Cinch was as sane as anybody, but when he found he could not get an honorable discharge in one way he tried for it another."—New York Sun.

Couldn't Keep It.

After hearing evidence in an assault case between man and wife, in which the wife had had a deal of provocation, the magistrate, turning to the husband, remarked:

"My good man, I really cannot do anything in this case."

"But she has cut a piece of my ear off, sir."

"Well," said the magistrate, "I will bind her over to keep the peace."

"You can't," shouted the husband; "she's thrown it away!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Surface Indications.

From "A Book on Dartmoor," written by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, comes a story which might have come from a less trustworthy source:

The wild and romantic country of Dartmoor consists of a tableland with rugged peaks or tors and all but impassable marshes. After a dry summer it is easy to pick one's way across parts of it which at other times are full of pitfalls. At one of the latter periods a man was cautiously treading his way across one of the treacherous marshes when he saw a hat lying brim downward on the sedge. He gave it a gentle, good humored kick in passing and almost jumped out of his skin when a choked voice called out from beneath:

"What be you a-doin to my 'at?"

"Be there now a chap under'n?" exclaimed the traveler.

"Ees, I reckon, and a hoss under me likewise."

MORGAN'S RAIDERS.

THE FAMOUS ROUGH RIDING CAMPAIGN OF THE CIVIL WAR.

It Carried Panic and Confusion Into Ohio and Indiana, but Resulted In No Benefit Whatever to the Confederate Cause.

"Cavalry riding," said the major, "is exciting, but very exhausting business. Long distance raids in an enemy's country can be made only where there are a good many horses. John Morgan could never have made his raid through Indiana and Ohio in 1863 if the counties raided had not been well supplied with the best horses in the west. When he started from the Cumberland river, in east Tennessee, Morgan believed that he would sweep everything before him and that, if properly supported, he would capture Cincinnati.

"Morgan, with a well organized brigade of cavalry 4,000 strong, swept northward from the Cumberland river through Kentucky to the Ohio river at Brandenberg, 40 miles below Louisville. There he captured two steamboats, crossed the river, swept through southern Indiana, galloped around Cincinnati, not more than ten miles from the city, and then moved eastward, expecting to cross the Ohio river at Buffington, but was driven back, made another attempt at Wellsville, but was finally captured at New Lisbon.

"This was the most remarkable raid of the war. It carried panic and confusion into Ohio and Indiana, but in results it was of no benefit whatever to the Confederate cause. Morgan believed that there would be an uprising in the Confederate interest in Kentucky. There was not. He believed that the peace Democrats in Ohio would give him at least secret support, but when his men stole the horses of the peace Democrats the latter joined the ranks of Morgan's pursuers, and before the raid was half over the whole state was aroused, and men who had taken no interest in the war previous to that time shouldered their squirrel rifles to fight the raiders who were stealing their horses and carrying the horrors of war to their very doors.

"There was hard riding all the time for Morgan's men. They left behind them a wreckage of broken down horses. They kept ahead of their Union pursuers simply because they stole horses right and left and remounted the men, but they were finally captured, and that fall Ohio gave the war party the largest majority in the history of the state up to that time. In fact, the Morgan raid, by carrying the war into the peaceful districts of Indiana and Ohio, provoked a furious feeling of resentment, which influenced people for 20 years.

"The comedy of the raid was furnished by the people of the districts wholly unused to war, wholly unprepared for it and with exaggerated ideas of the ferocity of Morgan's men. For two weeks it was only necessary for some mischievous boy to shout, 'Morgan is coming!' in any village in central or southern Ohio to create a panic. I know that many of the raiders after Morgan got no rest night or day, slept in the saddle, and not a few of them fell off their horses in sleep. At the end of the raid they were as exhausted as Morgan's men, but with a more difficult task to perform they never received half the praise given to the raiders.

"I remember," continued the major, "one case in which a woman stabled her carriage horses in the parlor for two days to keep them out of Morgan's hands. I saw Morgan's men ride by that house and saw some of them stop to listen at the unusual sound of horses' feet on a carpeted floor, but the parlor horses were not disturbed. Some of our neighbors drove their horses, cattle and sheep 30 miles into the interior and were away from home a week. Morgan's men looted right and left, and some of them had bolts of calico strapped to their saddles when they were captured.

"Morgan, it must be remembered, made his whole raid with artillery and a wagon train, but he was not in Ohio to fight, and he demonstrated at once the ease with which a peaceful district may be invaded by a mobile column and at the same time the peril involved in such a venture. In a few days 50,000 militiamen were in the field against him. At first he played with these green soldiers, but at last they hung on his flanks, eager for fight as bulldogs. In the last days Hobson's men, who had followed Morgan for hundreds of miles through three states, closed in on their old enemies with a gleefulness that exceeded anything of the kind I ever saw in the army, and Judah's men, closing in on the other side, settled the fate of the raiders.

"Morgan's men knew by the maneuvering and the firing when they were faced by trained soldiers, and the first charge of the Union cavalry had in it the impetus of delayed vengeance. The Unionists who rode in that charge had old scores to settle, and Morgan's tired veterans were overwhelmed. After Morgan had escaped from the penitentiary at Columbus and had reorganized his command and was again raiding Kentucky hundreds of Union soldiers on their way home for discharge left their trains and joined in the pursuit simply to get a crack at the old raider, and Morgan knew when their rifles spoke that he was up against the real thing."

Quite Fit.

The Abused Mule.

The wickedness of mules is a standing joke, and you are always hearing them abused. Ever see a team of mules run away? Did you ever personally know a mule to kick any one? The fact is, the mule works hard on light feed and gets nothing but abuse.—Atchison Globe.

RAILROAD NEWS.

Toledo, March 5.—The United States Court has not as yet issued an order of sale to the receiver of the Detroit & Lima Northern railway, and therefore the property was not sold to day, as predicted last night in a Cleveland dispatch. It is learned on good authority that F. J. Listman & Co., of New York, are negotiating for the purchase of the road, with the ultimate object of placing it in a combination with the Clover Leaf, which the syndicate now controls, and the Ohio Southern, which it has already purchased, but which sale yet lacks confirmation. This would give the Clover Leaf an entrance to Detroit and also a chance at the Ohio coal fields which the Ohio Southern reaches. It is now handling 200 cars of coal a day. President Norton, of the Clover Leaf, would make no statement except that "it would be a good thing."

Pat Calahan, a brakeman on the Jackson and Hillsdale accomodation, was caught between the platform of the freight house and a freight car that was being switched last Tuesday night, and barely escaped a very serious accident. He was badly bruised and fell on the track, but fortunately Engineer Fegle heard his cries and stopped the train at once, giving him a very narrow escape. He was taken to his home on Spring street and Dr. Sawyer, the railroad physician, summoned, and he will soon be ready for another experience. We understand that it was only a year ago that he narrowly escaped being killed at Jackson by a Michigan Central train.—Hillsdale Standard.

Cleveland special, 1: A committee representing the conductors employed by the Lake Shore road held a conference with the officials of that company here to-day with a view to securing a readjustment of wages. It is understood the increase is not large, except in the case of men employed on branch lines. It is asserted that these employes are paid 15 per cent. less than men on the main line. The conductors also desire to have the schedule of certain runs changed. The Lake Shore officials agreed to consider the matter.

The officials of United States court were greatly annoyed to-day by inquiries concerning a report that a sale of the D. & L. N. railway was to take place under the Federal officers here to-day. No such sale can be made until 60 days after recording the decree of sale by court, which has not yet been done.—Toledo Blade.

Mrs C. E. Colson was quite badly burned about the face Wednesday while washing. She put gasoline in the boiler to draw the greese from the clothes and the gasoline exploded, burning her face. Dr. North was called and dressed the wound.

A. C. Arner, of Ridgeway, baggageman on D. T. & M., who was hurt ten days ago, expects to return to his work Monday, if he can get his old position back as brakemen.

Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Downing entertained the 63 club and a number of invited guests at their home Tuesday evening.

Wm Gaston, brakeman on the C. N., is off duty for a few days on account of sickness.

Mrs. Helen Redfern, of Chicago, is a guest of her sister, Mrs. A. C. Beck.

Village Election.

Two tickets are in the field for village election next Monday. The republican on which all names are those of republican and the independent on which are names of men of both parties. Both tickets are good, but the idea of a party ticket for village election is all nonsense and is not desired even by the most enthusiastic party men. Two Elliotts make the head of the tickets and either one will make a good head of the council. Don Bowen has made the best village clerk Tecumseh ever had and with nothing to say against Mr. Belcher, should be re-elected. There is little choice as to the other names on the tickets, but the HERALD still claims that men not ticket should be voted for at village election.

Fire.

Shortly after five o'clock Tuesday night an alarm of fire was turned in and the house of Forrest Dickinson was found to be on fire having caught from a defective chimney. The west part of the house was badly burned, but their goods were damaged mostly by water. The fire broke out again after six o'clock but they put it out themselves. Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson are staying with Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McClure

McKINLEY INAUGURATED.

An Interesting Letter from the Herald's Special Correspondent in Washington.

Washington, D. C., March 5, 1901.

MR. EDITOR:

The president has again been ushered into office, but the festivities are not yet at an end. A week of jubilee prevails, and for two days yet grand military concerts and brilliant displays of fireworks are in store.

Troops and visitors began to arrive as early as Friday. By Sunday the city swarmed with people and never did it seem less like the Sabbath than on March 3, 1901. Soldiers were everywhere in evidence. John Barley-corn was the subject of frequent attack and was often surrounded and taken by our boys in blue.

Congress had a mass of work to finish and so no adjournment was taken after Friday. By legal fiction Saturday continued all day Sunday, broken, however, by occasional recesses of short duration, I visited both houses on Sunday afternoon and evening. At 11:45 that night, the House was in a turmoil. The members were singing, or trying to sing, "Auld Lang Syne," "Nearer my God to Thee," "Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," "My Country," "We wont go Home till Morning," and other songs similiar to these. I do not recall that in any case did they wholly finish a song before taking up another. Exactly at midnight Speaker Henderson called the House to order and the question of appointing a "junketing committee" to our Insular possessions came up. A discussion followed. When the vote was taken the democrats, to kill time, demanded the yeas and nays. As this would require nearly an hour, I adjourned to the Senate.

Senators Carter, of Montana, and Tillman, of South Carolina, were debating the River and Harbor bill. At 2 a. m. Monday they were still at it, and, in fact, finally talked the bill to death. Senator Carter was still talking at 11:50 a. m. when a fellow member sarcastically moved that Mr. Carter's time be extended. Adjournment followed at 12 m.

Monday morning came, warm but cloudy. The program provided for a morning parade, for the inauguration at noon and for the grand and final parade in the afternoon. Mr. McKinley was escorted from the White House to the Capitol by a guard of honor, consisting of veterans of the Civil War and a troop of black horse cavalry from Ohio. He reached the Capitol about 11 a. m. where he proceeded to sign the numerous bills which had been railroaded through in the last two days. The crowd followed him to the Capitol and gathered in front of the covered inaugural stand on the east side of the building. For two hours acres of people waited the coming of the president. Dense was the throng of men, women and children, white and black, soldiers, "jackies" and civilians, a solid mass. The crush was too great and women sobbed to be let out. College boys sang and the crowd yelled. When noon came and no McKinley arrived, someone shouted, "This country is now without a president!" Accordingly, the college boys proceeded to make nominations and elected one of their own number to fill the vacancy. It was a motley group, but one that could entertain itself.

About 1 p. m. the seats about the inaugural stand were filled by foreign ministers, judges, congressmen and senators. A few minutes before the president arrived, a drizzling rain commenced. Chief Justice Fuller accompanied Mr McKinley. The two stood before the great audience, each with a hand upon a small Bible which was held by the clerk of the Senate. The president repeated the oath of office after the chief justice, then bowed reverently and kissed the Bible. The ceremony was very simple, but deeply impressive. Then followed the address. Mr. McKinley is an orater whose distinguished presence and clear ringing voice was, at that moment, a source of national pride, regardless of party affiliation. The rain continued to pour, much to the discomfort of the gold-laced foreign diplomats.

The conclusion of the address was heralded by the booming of big guns from the warships on the river. Then followed a wild rush through the rain for a position on the Avenue (Pennsylvania). Window fronts, balconies and housetops sold for the owner's own price, $2.00 being cheap for a seat. Temporary stands had been erected, capable of seating at least 20,000.

At 2:30 p. m the rain ceased and a dark, cold afternoon followed. But the weather had nothing to do with that parade, and regardless of slippery pavements, 2200 horses, 26,000 troops and numerous civic organizations poured down the broad expanse of Pennsylvania avenue in a continuous stream for three hours. The program called for about 150 companies, squads, groups, divisions, regiments, etc. and besides these there were 65 bands, 42 of which were military and naval. These bands contained from 25 to 100 men each, the largest being the Marine band.

The procession was led by the grand marshal, followed by the Governor's Island band and the Black Horse cavalry of Ohio. Next came the president drawn by four magnificent horses. By his side sat Senator Hanna and in front of him were two members of the House. The smiling president continually raised his hat to the cheering multitude. Next came the vice president's carriage, but to the crowd he was "Teddy," and a very popular Teddy too. He is powerfully built, broad shouldered and of ruddy complexion, like Sampson, capable of doing anything he likes with a mountain lion. To describe what followed is to describe an almost endless succession of moving troops, glistening arms, prancing horses, waving banners and tramping feet to the ever present accompaniment of stirring martial music.

The West Point cadets merited unusual attention. They are certainly artists, and marked was the contrast which they made to the state troops. Following them came the boys from the naval academy and no less trained were they in the arts of war. The neighboring states furnished the largest portion of the troops, 9,000 coming from Pennsylvania alone. Many of the states were represented by their governors and staff officers. Gov. Bliss of Michigan was mounted on a beautiful brown horse with white face. The governor made a good appearance and received generous applause.

The light artillery, consisting of gun carriages drawn by six horses was a suggestive sight. Perhaps no other figure elicited more applause than that of General Joe Wheeler, when he passed the avenue was white with waving handkerchiefs. The band played Dixie and the tune went home to many southern hearts.

One regiment consisted of native Porta Ricans, who speak Spanish but wear Uncle Sam's uniform nevertheless. The Carlisle Indian school was represented by a company of 100 students led by a band. Their banner bore the words "Civilisation and Citizenship" The colored troops came in for a hearty greeting from their numerous friends and relatives.

Many were the other organizations, all alike in the respect that all were the object of our pride. Occasionally a horse would rear, slip on a wet pavement and fall. In one case a soldier dropped his gun and a little boy ran to pick it up. Before the lad could restore the gun to its owner, the company moved on and the soldier was lost to sight. For a moment the boy ran to and fro, realizing that he had suddenly come into possession of some one else's gun. Finally he took to his heels and disappeared with the weapon.

Following the military, came the numerous civic organizations, some representing the District while others came from the various states. In spite of the weather the parade had been an unparalleled success, and the people hurried to their homes and hotels for dinner and to prepare for the evening.

The electrical display added a charm at night to the historic White House and public buildings. Over the door of the treasury, the lights were so arranged as to form a set of balances, beneath which was a golden key. On the war and navy building, the light outlined an anchor suspended above a cannon. The approaches to the White House were flanked by stately Ionic columns, around and on top of which gleamed myriads of electric lights. The Court of Honor was placed in front of the executive mansion. This court consisted of a bank of covered seats, wherein one might sit who had $5.00 to spare. Near it was the president's reviewing stand which was wholly enclosed by glass.

To make the vision of the night more striking, immense pylons were erected, 20 feet or more in height, surmounted by urns from which a cloud of smoke arose, hanging for a moment heavily above the urns, then lifting itself against the sky; now curling in lazy streams of white, then shooting forth in flames of green, of blue and of red.

The Inaugural ball was a fitting climax for this day of glittering pageantry. It occurred in the court of the pension building, a space about 300 feet long and 150 feet wide, bounded by rows of gilded columns. Over the court was suspended a tent-like roof of orange, while the sides were draped with yellow Four floors open into the court, each of which is bordered by columns similar to those of the first floor. These columns were wound and festooned with flowers, while between them ran thousands of yards of electric wire, at every half foot of which sparkled a lamp. The crowd was so great that dancing was almost impossible and the occasion amounted merely to a presidential reception followed by a grand promenade

The gilded columns, the orange colored awnings above, the yellow tapestries at the sides and the countless gleaming lights, all combined to give the pension office the semblance of a golden palace, in which was consummated the last splendid act of the second inauguration of William McKinley

Very Respectfully Yours,
JOSEPH W. HOWELL.

THE CHURCHES.

The Presbyterians will be warmer hereafter—a new furnace having been put in the church this week.

Capt. W. H. Parker will talk on Salvation Army next Tuesday evening at the Army hall. Seats free, all welcome.

Rev. Louisa Haight will preach the third Lenton sermon next Sunday March 10 at 2:00 p. m. taking for the subject, "Faith."

Rev. J. K. Burleson will preach at Christ's church at Adrian next Wednesday evening, his subject being, "True spiritual discipline."

Morning subject at the Presbyterian church next Sabbath: "Liberty". The evening sermon will discuss "Some Reformers Needed in Tecumseh", an anti-election sermon.

The Salvation Army annual week of prayer and self denial will take place beginning March 17, the object being to raise money to extend the army home and missionary work. We appeal to the general public for consideration and liberal assistance. Our workers will be calling on you, please help us in this great work of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, sheltering the homeless, lifting the fallen, in fact your gift no matter how small will help us in bringing salvation to the poor of our country.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Century has a serial story by Irving Bacheller, the author of that popular novel, "Eben Holden." It is a border tale of 1812. The scene of the story is in the neighborhood of Lake Champlain and the title is "D'ri and I." It began in the March Century and runs six months.

⁂

Clara Morris, the famous actress, has developed into a story writer whose cleverness is conceded by every magazine editor. Consequently there is a place in readiness for everything that comes from her pen. She has just finished a story, called "The Little Acrobat Girl." It is a pathetic romance of the stage and will be given an early publication in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Captain King on the life of West Point is a seasonable topic in the March New Lippincott Magazine.

ANN ARBOR SPEAKS.

Contractor Wooley of Ann Arbor Makes a Public Statement.

Mr. Edwin Wooley, contractor and carpenter of Ann Arbor, adds his voice to that of the army of Michigan people who endorse the little conqueror. Our representative found him at his place of residence, No. 618 Fountain street. Mr. Wooley appreciates "a good thing" as do most of our readers, and he does not hesitate to tell his experience for the benefit of others. Endorsement of this kind has made Doan's Kidney Pills a household word throughout the state The good they have done has won them many a title and such worthy names among the people as the "little conqueror of kidney ills," "little enemies to backache," "modern wonder-workers," etc.

Mr. Wooley says: "I was subject for years to attacks of backache or pains through the loins and kidneys, generally of a dull, heavy, aching nature, but often when the weather changed or when I moved awkwardly they became sharp twinges of pain. As I was doing work which required stooping it was very painful, exceedingly so, if I caught cold which, as a rule, settled in my loins. I tried various remedies but was never successful in obtaining any permanent benefit until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. At any time my back was troubling me a great deal but shortly after I began the treatment the aching abated and when I had finished it I was cured. This is months ago and up to date there has been no recurrence of the trouble."

A LIGHT IN THE YARD

MRS. GALLUP RECOGNIZES IN IT HER SUMMONS TO HEAVEN.

But She Fails to Get Any Information From Her Husband as to the Manner In Which She Should Act When She Enters Her Home Among the Angels.

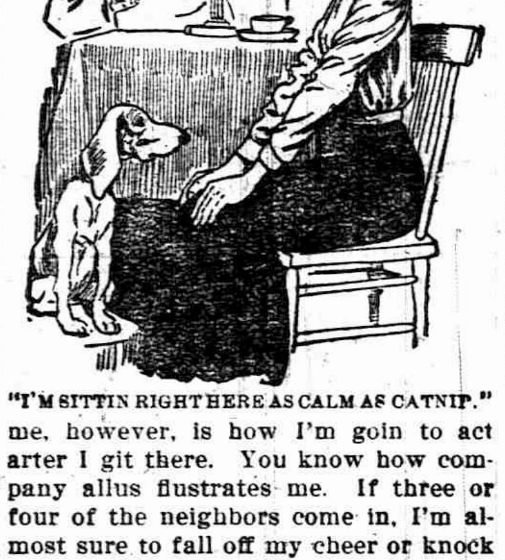
[Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.]

When Mr. Gallup sat down for the evening, he had his newspaper on his knee and Mrs. Gallup was singing "Rock of Ages" and clearing away the supper table. He had been reading for a quarter of an hour when she quietly entered and sat down and said:

"Samuel, I don't want to disturb you nor make you feel bad, but I feel obliged to ask you a few questions. Last night at midnight Mrs. Watkins saw a light moving around in our back yard. It was a light which bobbed up and bobbed down and dodged this way and that, and when it finally went out it gave a great wink and a splutter. It was what they call a ghost lantern, Samuel, and it meant that there would be death in this house within a week. It'll be my death, of course. I've got 27 different ailments, with heart disease throwed in, while you are as healthy as a cornfield. Yes; it'll be me, but I'm not weepin over it. I'm sittin right here as calm as catnip, but I want to know some few things."

Mr. Gallup must have known of her presence, but he was too deeply interested in his paper to recognize it. He had found an article which said that a bedbug could be boiled in water for four hours and then come out with his ambition undaunted.

"I shall go to heaven when I die, of course," continued Mrs. Gallup as her voice broke a little. "I orter go there. Any woman who has whitewashed the cellar every spring for 27 years, besides makin soft soap, cuttin carpet rags, dyein over old clothes and makin one corset last her for 13 years, will go to heaven on the jump. What bothers me, however, is how I'm goin to act arter I git there. You know how company allus flustrates me. If three or four of the neighbors come in, I'm almost sure to fall off my cheer or knock over sunthin. How's it goin to be when I git up there and meet a hull pasture full of angels? There'll be millions of 'em, Samuel, and they'll all be lookin at me and wonderin who I am, and I'll be so upsot that I'll fall over my own feet."



"I'M SITTIN RIGHT HERE AS CALM AS CATNIP."

She paused to wipe the tears from her eyes with the palm of her hand, but as she had asked no direct questions Mr. Gallup finished the bug article and turned to one on the care of clotheslines.

"I don't want to be looked at and p'inted out and made fun of up there," said Mrs. Gallup as she sat with her eyes on the carpet. "All night long last night I couldn't sleep for thinkin that some of the angels would turn up their noses at me and want to know what on airth I was doin there. You remember Sarah Jane Bixby, who died two years ago? Sarah was snippy and sassy. If she went to heaven, it would be jest her way to want to know why I'd come flyin up there, with my rheumatiz and back aches. I'd have to sass her back, and then what would happen? Angels do sass each other sometimes, don't they, Samuel?"

If Mr. Gallup had ever given the matter a thought, he was too busy to discuss it. The statement was right before his eyes that 1,000,000 miles of clothesline went to destruction every year for want of being hung up in the wood shed when not in use, and he was reflecting on the carelessness of humanity in general.

"I may git up to heaven in the night, when all the angels are asleep, and so I'll slip in all right. I hope that'll be the way, because it'll give me a chance to kind o' git used to the place before daylight. Do you think they have any breakfast up there? Mrs. Watkins says they don't, but I don't really see how they git along without it. I know I should feel a goneness all day without breakfast. And I want you to look at me, Samuel, and see if I'm the humblyest woman ever born. I have read that when we die we are changed as in the twinklin of an eye. I hope it's so. If it ain't, then I can't expect no good times up there. Them angels will be p'intin out my lop shoulder, my big feet and my wabbly knees and whisperin to each other that I'd better staid down on airth among the cabbages. Nobody as knows me can call me obstinate or sot, but I'll be snummed if I propose to die and become an angel to be made fun of. You'll be on my side about that, won't you?"

Mr. Gallup heaved a long sigh and seemed about to speak, but no word came. He had finished with the clothesline and struck an article about the reasoning powers of the crow, and the most direct question from Mrs. Gallup would have passed unheeded. Her tears fell for two or three minutes, and then she asked:

"And how about the beds up there? You know we've slept on a feather bed ever since we was married, and I've allus bin particular to smooth it down from head to foot. I've got used to feathers, and if I changed off I'd jest lay there and kick around all night long. Do they hev beds, Samuel, or do they keep on flyin around all night long and singin "I've Reached My Home at Last?" Seems to me that flyin and singin all day would be enough unless I feel stronger than I do now. You orter know these things, Samuel, and you orter tell me so I'll know what to depend on. I might stand sass from a thousand angels, but I do want my own bed when night comes, and if one of my headaches comes on unexpectedly I want to know that I kin hev a cup of tea. Mrs. Watkins says they don't drink tea in heaven, but I don't see how she kin know."

Mr. Gallup was not directly appealed to, and as he was reading that a crow had been known to feign death to avoid having a crowbar thrown at him he made no sign.

"Waal, I've made up my mind to a few things," said Mrs. Gallup as the silence grew painful. "I'm goin up to heaven to do the best I kin. I'll be nayburly with all the angels I meet and let 'em understand that I don't want no more'n my share of harps and wings and things. If I don't find anythin to eat or any beds to sleep on, I shan't raise no fuss nor go into hysterics, the way Mrs. Taylor did at camp meetin last year. Yes; I'll put up with things as I find 'em and make the best of it, and I won't be jealous if a few of 'em hev better clothes on or kin sing better'n me. That's how I'll act, Samuel, and then if they pick on me they'll git as good as they give. I kin be sassed and picked on jest so fur, but arter that they want to look out. Would it put you out any, Samuel, if I died at night instead of in the daytime? As I said, if I died at night I could slip into heaven without any fuss, but if it's goin to make you any extra trouble I'll perish by daylight. What will be the most convenient hour fur you?"

There was deep silence. Mrs. Gallup's tears made no thud as they fell upon the carpet, and Mr. Gallup was reading with bated breath that an ostrich covers 13 feet of ground at every stride when in full flight. The clock ticked, the silence grew deeper, and the cricket on the hearth fell into a doze. Then Mr. Gallup suddenly laid aside his paper, stretched his arms and legs, with a "Ho-hum!" and looked around to find Mrs. Gallup asleep in her chair. She hadn't gone to join the angels—not yet.

Help... Nature

Babies and children need proper food, rarely ever medicine. If they do not thrive on their food something is wrong. They need a little help to get their digestive machinery working properly.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

will generally correct this difficulty.

If you will put from one-fourth to half a teaspoonful in baby's bottle three or four times a day you will soon see a marked improvement. For larger children, from half to a teaspoonful, according to age, dissolved in their milk, if you so desire, will very soon show its great nourishing power. If the mother's milk does not nourish the baby, she needs the emulsion. It will show an effect at once both upon mother and child.

THE KING OF HANDCUFFS.

How Harry Houdini, American, Surprised the British.

When Harry Houdini, the American king of handcuffs, arrived in England, he tried to arrange for an exhibit of his skill at Scotland Yard, but the authorities refused to allow him an opportunity of putting on or taking off official handcuffs, says London M. A. P. So, accompanied by a skeptical London manager, he paid an ordinary call as an American visitor to the police headquarters. Mr. Houdini, after making the usual remarks on everything he saw and heard, casually asked a question about a pair of handcuffs. The guide took them down and answered:

"Oh, these are handcuffs impossible to remove."

Houdini was greatly interested, and the incident closed by the American visitor requesting his guide to lock the handcuffs on his wrists. Then he turned his back and succeeded in getting them off in a couple of minutes.

One of Houdini's strangest adventures happened at a big hotel in St. Paul, Minn., where he was very well known. To his surprise, he found that a couple of men occupying the rooms on either side of his own appeared to be mounting guard over him. At first he only suspected this, but after a few days he was perfectly sure that one or the other of his neighbors shadowed his every movement. One afternoon, when Houdini was sitting in his own room, he heard the sound of scuffling outside the door. Flinging it open, he discovered his two unknown friends grasping a third man, who had evidently been wearing a long dark cape that was dragged on one side, showing that he was heavily handcuffed.

"We're a couple of detectives, Mr. Houdini," panted one of the men. "This fellow made his escape from jail some days ago. We knew that he wouldn't dare to go to a locksmith to get his handcuffs removed, and we suspected that he might come to you."

Sunday Habits.

The average man does himself so much harm on Sunday that he does not recover until the following Wednesday. In the first place, he loafs around the house, instead of being active, as on weekdays. In the next place, he eats his breakfast later than usual, and his dinner earlier, and the result is that he is knocked out until Wednesday. The best thing to do on Sunday is to conform to your usual habits as much as possible.—Atchison Globe.

Sunny Rooms.

It is said to be true that in all hospitals those rooms facing the sun have fewer deaths, other things being equal than those which are on the shady side of the house. Likewise statistics, where they have been kept, prove that the average time for a recovery is much less in a sunny room than in a shady one From these facts and from the fact that the tendency toward illness has proved greater on the shady side of buildings, like prisons and asylums, it follows that light is second only in importance to fresh air. A dark room is nearly but not quite so bad as a close room. In the case of sickness the sick room should be the sunniest one the house affords.

Strikes a Rich Friend.

"I was troubled for several years with chronic indigestion and nervous debility," writes F J. Green, of Lancaster, N. H., "No remedy helped me until I began using Electric Bitters, which did me more good than all the medicines I ever used. They have also kept my wife in excellent health for years. She says Electric Bitters are just splendid for female troubles; that they are a grand tonic and invigorator for weak, run down women. No other medicine can take its place in our family." Try them. GONE BEFORE.

The quiet of our little village was interrupted Saturday morning by the word that Mrs. Margaret Borden had suffered a stroke of apoplexy. Hardly had the report gone out when a second was announced that "She is dead." So suddenly, quietly, painlessly, ended the career of one of the true mothers in Israel. Nearly all of Britton's history lies within Mrs. Borden's coming to the place and her gracious Christian life has added much to its well being. The Reformed church people especially feel the grief as of a mother taken away.

Mrs. Borden was within a few days of 78 years old and, from the time of her early marriage with Rev. E. W. Borden, all her life was given directly to the service of the Gospel. As a faithful, model mother, she nurtured six children to maturity, two dying in infancy. Her patient, gentle, dove-like mildness of character was singularly united with a vigorous physical health and a practical energy in affairs.

The oldest son, Edmund J., lives in Colorado and could not be present at the funeral. The other children, Mrs. H. C. Palmer, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. C. C. Rice, of Clio, Mich., who has been living with her mother since last autumn; Rev. Geo. W. Borden, of Auburn, Neb.; and Mrs. F. E. Exelby, of Britton, were all in attendance when the Rev. G Kooiker conducted the last rites at the late residence in Britton on Monday, March 4th. Burial was made the next day in the family plot at Ann Arbor. A large concourse of friends paid their last tribute of love to her they so highly regarded by their presence at the funeral and by their gifts of floral emblems that spoke in purest, gentlest way the language of their hearts.

Watches That They Lend.

"They are all alike," remarked a man coming out of a Woodward avenue watchmaker's, accompanied by a lady.

"Who?" inquired his wife.

"Watchmakers."

"How?"

"I thought other cities maybe weren't quite like our small town in the wild and wicked west, but they are and more so. I take my watch, which, as you know, is a fine gold one, full jeweled, costing $300, in to have a few repairs, much or little, as may be, and the boss timekeeper gives me an old battered tin watch to carry in its place that makes me ashamed to look into the face of a reputable watch for weeks. In addition it excites suspicion in the minds of my nearest friends when they see me take it out, and if I should die with that watch on my person in a strange country the newspapers would say, 'Judging from the watch found on the deceased, he must have come from New Jersey.' Now, what I want to know is why don't jewelers have 'substitute watches' to match their customers'? That is to say, let the customer's watch left for repairs determine the kind of watch he is to carry until he gets his own again."

But his wife couldn't tell him to save her life.—Detroit Free Press.

APPETITES

Created and Maintained by Vinol.

THAT THE FOOD IS DIGESTED IS ASLO EQUALLY NECESSARY.

We Recommend Vinol as an Appetite Creator.

WE GUARANTEE THAT VINOL WILL AID DIGESTION.

Vinol is the greatest aid to digestion that we have ever known.

It is because Vinol acts so beneficially upon the stomach that it accomplishes so much good.

Vinol contains the active curative principles that are found in cod-liver oil, without any oil or grease.

These medicinal elements act so favorably upon the stomach, that this organ obtains for itself the elements necessary for creating new flesh, muscle tissue and for making rich red blood.

When the stomach acts easily and naturally, a desire is created for good simple food and a good appetite is the sure result.

With cod-liver oil as formerly taken the medicinal elements which it contained were too often unable to counteract the harm that was done by the obnoxious grease that enveloped them.

Now that in Vinol we have those same elements separated from the vile-tasting fat, we have a tonic and rebuilder that is simply marvelous in its action.

The following is a letter that will explain itself:

"This is to certify that I have used six bottles of Vinol, and have found it of great value as an appetizer and tonic in general debility. I have received so much benefit from its use that I gladly furnish this testimonial in order that others may be induced to give it a trial and prove to themselves its recuperative powers."—MRS. ELIZABETH FEENEY. Waterbury, Conn.

We want every one in this place to know more about our Vinol, how it cures and what it cures. Certainly the greatest tonic and rebuilder we have ever sold.

We, therefore, cordially invite any one interested to call upon us, and we want all to bear in mind that we will gladly refund to any one who is not satisfied with the action of Vinol every cent they pay for it.

TAX FOR THE RAILWAYS

Question of Equal Taxation a Matter the Legislators Have in Mind.

ELECTRIC ROADS ALSO INCLUDED

Supervision of B. and L. Societies Is Up Again—Labor and the Garnishee Law.

Lansing, Mich., March 12.—The present week will witness the making of considerable progress in the line of so-called equal taxation, not that an equal tax bill will be passed by either house this week, but that this very important topic will be given much careful consideration. Every one will agree that this matter is probably the most important and vexatious with which the legislature will have to deal, and it cannot be disposed of offhand. There are a multitude of bills covering the general subject in the hands of the committees, and the first thing to be done is to sift these out and take the best features of each for the purpose of drafting the best measure possible. The house railroad committee has progressed to the point that it is desirous of holding joint sessions with the senate committee, and these meetings will be arranged at once. The bill introduced by Chairman Chandler of the house committee on railroads was drafted by Attorney General Oren, and will doubtless be used as the basis for the completed document. It embodies many of the features which characterized the Atkinson bill, so-called, which has been passed by the lower house several times during the past four years. The sentiment of the house committee is clearly in favor of including the property of express, railroad, telegraph and telephone companies in a single bill, and against the creation of a new commission to make the assessments, the desire being to have this work done by the state tax commission. The state administration favors these two propositions, and it is, therefore, safe to say that this will be the conclusion reached by the two houses. Of course, an endless amount of detail remains to be arranged, and it will be some time before a measure will be ready to be reported.

Electric Roads Propose to Fight.

Speaking of railroad bills suggests the fact that it is very apparent that persons interested in the electric railways, already constructed or projected, propose to fight the bill bringing these railways under the supervision of the commissioner of railroads. It is natural for all companies, whether steam or electric, to desire as little state supervision as possible, but it is obvious that the lack of supervision will not work in the interests of the public. The argument used against the bill placing the electric roads under the supervision of the commissioner is that if this is done, the steam roads will have the best of it. In other words, that the commissioner will discriminate against the electric. There is, of course, no more reason for making this argument than for the steam roads to insist that they will be discriminated, but it has worked well in other cases and may in this. For instance, every attempt that has been made for years to place building and loan associations under the supervision of the state bank commissoner has been defeated with the argument that the commissioner would discriminate against them and in favor of the banks. The result has been no supervision of building and loan associations whatever, and some very disastrous experiences for the people.

Supervision of B. and L. Societies.

The looting of the Citizens' Building and Loan association of Flint has finally opened the eyes of the legislature to the necessity of strict state supervision of this class of institutions, and the result has been the passing in a few moments of a bill which has been persistently rejected by the law builders for many years. While the new law is by no means perfect, it is a very long step in the right direction, giving the state the right to inspect the books and affairs of any association at any time, and to resort to heroic treatment whenever it is discovered that the business is not being honestly or otherwise properly conducted.

Economy in Appropriation.

The taxpayers of the state will no doubt stand solidly back of Chairman Dingley of the house committee on ways and means in his demand that the strictest and wisest economy characterize the appropriations to be made this year. In order that his colleagues might not go into this matter of voting the people's money out of their pockets blindly, Mr. Dingley has made an exhaustive compilation from the bills pending in the two houses, to show the exact amount that is asked for by each and the aggregate amount they call for, together with a comparison with appropriations made for similar purposes two years ago. It will be recalled that the legislature of 1897 reached the high water mark in the matter of appropriations, the aggregate amount appropriated being $6,634,000. Considerably more than this was asked for as is always the case, and a greater sum might have been withheld without any particular detriment to the service. The total asked for this year is $5,817,278.66, and this does not include the appropriation for the general purposes of the state government which cannot be made up until the last day of the session, and which two years ago amounted to $1,998,864.72. This last item is not likely to be any less this year, so that if the legislature should appropriate all that is asked for the aggregate would closely approximate $8,000,000, as against a total of $6 634,000 two years ago. But all that is asked for will not be appropriated, and the showing thus early made by the chairman will go a long way toward opening the eyes of the legislators to the imperative necessity for pruning the appropriation bills very thoroughly but with care and discrimination. The chairman made a strong address to the house a few days ago, asking for co-operation in the efforts of the committee to bring this year's total at least $500,000 and, if possible, $1,000,000 below that of 1897. The members were informed that this would necessitate the cutting off of all frills, many of which are provided for in the various bills, and the granting of only such amounts as are absolutely needed. The establishment of additional state normal schools or other institutions was strenuously opposed, as was the construction of additional buildings at existing institutions, except in cases where the demands upon the institutions is such as to make enlargement a conceded necessity. A protest was made against the creation of new state boards and commissions, and a general plan of retrenchment and economy was urged. In this work Chairman Dingley and his committee will have the earnest support of Governor Bliss, who urges economy on all occasions.

Proposed Adjournment May 4.

The latest effort to set a mark for the legislature to work to has been made by Senator Atwood, who has offered a concurrent resolution providing for final adjournment on May 4. His resolution has not yet been acted upon and will be permitted to lie on the senate table for several days in order to give the solons a chance to consider the situation. It is argued in its behalf that with a date fixed for quitting the legislators will be more apt to work hard than they will if the plan is not to adjourn until all the decks are cleared.

A commendable disposition to hold down expenses has been shown by both houses lately, each body having sat down very hard on propositions to send joint committees off on junketing trips. This is such an unusual thing that it is worthy of remark, and the people should give the statesmen credit for their action.

Labor and the Garnishee Law.

The labor organiaztions of the state are making a determined fight against the Nevins bill which provides for amending the garnishment law by providing that 25 per cent. of a man's wages shall be subject to garnishment, and that the balance shall be exempt until that 75 per cent. amounts to $30, all above that sum to be subject to process. The present law exempts $25, and it is claimed by the retail merchants who are back of the new bill that this permits men who are earning $25 per week to avoid paying their just obligations. The labor representatives insist that the great body of workingmen of the state are honest, but that unfortunate men, who run behind through illness or lack of work, would be made to suffer by the passage of the proposed law. The indications are, however, that the bill will be favorably reported.

No Docking of Horses' Tails.

The house has passed the Rodgers bill prohibiting the docking of horses' tails, which also makes it unlawful to import docked horses into the state, and requires that all such horses now in the state be registered with the county clerk, so that the authorities may be able to know that the law is not being violated. The presence in any barn of an unregistered docked horse is made prima facie evidence of the guilt of the owner, and the owner of the premises is made equally guilty with the owner of the horse. The bill provides a penalty of a fine from $100 to $500 and imprisonment not to exceed one year. It is claimed that it is impossible to conceive of a more brutally cruel and painful process than the docking of a horse's tail.

Agricultural College Lands.

The committee which has been investigating the matter of trespasses on agricultural college lands and the method of settling for such trespass will not complete its labors for a week or ten days. Members of the committee intimate that the report will be very interesting, tending to show that some of the members of the college board knew of the trespass and arranged in advance for settlement on a basis of $2 per 1,000 feet for Norway and $4 for white pine, which is said to be much less than the timber was worth. In defense of the settlement it is claimed that the timber was in widely scattered tracts and not worth more than was paid for it, and further that this was the only way in which the college could realize anything from the land.

Game Warden's Department.

This week the special committee appointed by the house to investigate the expenses and work of the game warden's department will get down to business. Just what the investigation will develop can only be conjectured. Charges of undue extravgance against the smaller commercial fishermen and in favor of the larger concerns have been made, but it is hardly probable that all of them will be proven. Legislative investigations have generally proven that it is a heap sight more easy to make charges than it is to prove them.

Regulation of Freight Rates.

Representative Hardy has after months of earnest study evolved a bill for the regulation of freight rates and already considerable sentiment in favor of its passage has developed. The bill does not provide for any interference with the present duties of the railroad commissioner. The main principle of the measure is that every railroad company shall carry like kind of freight under similar conditions at the same rate. It fixes a schedule of class rates for distances up to 500 miles from which there shall be no advance unless by consent of the railroad commissioner, or upon eleven days public notice being given. It prohibits discriminations between shippers or routes, provides that all charges must be reasonable and that the same attention must be given to local as to through freight traffic. The right to petition and a reasonable plan for the adjustment of all claims is provided for. The present courts are given full powers to carry out the provisions of the act. All roads are classified on the basis of their gross freight earnings. It is claimed by the framers of the bill that the charges for carrying nearly all the staple products of Michigan have advanced over 50 per cent. within the past ten years. At present the state assumes no control whatever over the freight charges of railway companies. As a result some railroads are charging fully 50 per cent. more than others for exactly the same service. It is also claimed that until some such law as this is passed there will always be found a way for the railroads to make themselves good as against any legislation affecting taxation or charges for carrying passengers.

Three-Cent Fares No Good.

Cleveland, March 12.—A decision by Judge Ricks of the United States district court was handed down Monday, declaring unconstitutional the 3-cent street car fare ordinance passed by the city council two years ago. The judge maintained that the ordinance interfered with existing contracts. The suit to restrain the city from carrying into effect the terms of the ordinance was brought by the local street car companies. Director of Law Hogsett states that the suit will be carried to the higher courts as soon as possible.

Coming Home.

Washington, March 12.—The quartermaster general is informed that the transport Logan left Nagasaki Saturday for San Francisco with Maj.-Gen. Young and the Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth volunteer regiments. Gen. Young on his arrival at San Francisco will relieve Gen. Shafter of command of the department of California and the latter will be retired as a major-general.

DID NOT SIGN THEM

Gov. Bliss Allows Two Bills to Become Laws Without.

GIVES HIS REASONS THEREFOR

Several Nominations for State Appointments Sent to Senate—Attempt to Make Arrangements for a Hearing on Railroad Tax Bills.

Lansing, Mich., March 12.—Gov. Bliss Monday night notified both houses of the legislature that he had permitted two bills that had been passed to become laws without his signature being attached to them. One bill extends the period of the regular yearly session of the Detroit board of estimates from 10 to 20 days and increases the estimators' salary from $3 to $5 a day. The governor explains he did not sign this because of his general opposition to increasing boards and expenses of government. He declares that he wished to throw the responsibility principally on the Wayne delegation for the changes made by the law.

The other bill which has become a law without the governor's signature, prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors in Pomona, or, to be exact, within two miles of the center of Oleon township, Manistee county. His excellency says he believes the present laws are adequate, and that the board of county supervisors could practically stop the sale of liquor in Oleon township by refusing to grant any liquor licenses.

Appointments Sent In.

Gov. Bliss Monday evening sent to the senate the following nominations: For state veterinary surgeon, Dr. D. G. Sutherland of Saginaw, for the term of two years beginning the second Tuesday in July, 1901, succeeding Dr. D. W. Dunphy of Quincy; for member of the state court of mediation and arbitration, Charles H. Johnson, secretary-treasurer of the Detroit Street Railway Employes' association, for the unexpired portion of the term ending May 26, 1901, succeeding Wm. D. Mahon of Detroit, resigned; also for the full term of three years. The appointments were referred to the committee on executive business.

Gov. Bliss also announced the following appointments: For member of the Macomb county jury commission, Frank G. Hacker of Mt. Clemens, term beginning March 11, expiring April 17, succeeding Adam Bennett, deceased; for agent for Macomb county at the state board of corrections and charities, Alonza M. Keeler of Richmond, term beginning March 11, succeeding Thomas Dawson, resigned; for county agent for Van Buren county of the state board of corrections and charities, Rev. I. T. Crago of Lawton, term beginning March 11, succeeding J. C. Gould of Paw Paw.

Railroad Tax Bills.

Chairman Chandler has called a meeting of the house committee on railroads for Tuesday forenoon, when an attempt will be made to arrange for a hearing on the railroad tax bills. Senator A. L. Holmes of Detroit, chairman of the senate railroads committee, has returned from Washington, and a joint hearing before senate and house committees may be arranged for Wednesday or Thursday of this week. A great deal of talk is heard among legislators that it looks as though no general tax bill amounting to much in the way of genuine reform in taxation methods will be passed at this session of the legislature.

Meeting of Coal Operators.

Saginaw, Mich., March 12.—The coal operators of Michigan met here Monday to consider the miners' schedule of wages, which is adjusted each year. The session was behind closed doors, and these will not be made public until the joint meeting of the operators and miners. It is known, however, that the operators have come to an agreement as to what they are willing to concede. It is understood that the miners will meet here to-day to formulate their demands and that the joint meeting will be held in Bay City in the course of a few days. It is understood that the miners will insist upon an advance of 15 cents per ton.

Heavy Blizzard.

Petoskey, Mich., March 12.—A stiff blizzard, with considerable snow fall, raged all Monday, resulting in the worst railroad blockade of the season. Not a train reached Petoskey during the day, and the 9 a. m. train south had only reached Mancelona, a distance of 50 miles, at 5 p. m. Pere Marquette trains are stalled east of Traverse City.

Many Notaries.

Lansing, Mich., March 12.—During Lieut.-Gov. Robinson's term as acting governor while Gov. Bliss was in Washington last week, he signed about 300 notary commissions and three bills. Of the latter, two changed the names of persons, and the other provided a salary for the circuit court commissioners of Kent county. The lieutenant-governor says he acted only in matters that demanded immediate attention.

Alleged Swindler Caught.

Mason, Mich., March 12.—Elon A. Smith, who, it is alleged, swindled several people of this vicinity out of about $3,000, was found at Sprague, Wash., by Detective Hodge of Leslie. Smith was arraigned before Justice Lyon here Monday, waived examination and was bound over to the present term of circuit court.

Forger Gets Three Years.

Jackson, Mich., March 12.—James M. Ross, forger of the name of James O'Donnell, was sentenced to three years in Jackson prison, and C. H. Van Dine 90 days at the Detroit house of correction for larceny from a dwelling by Judge Peck Monday.

GOT A VERDICT.

Mrs. Action of Ann Arbor Awarded Damage Against Prof. Partridge.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 12.—Prof. Frederick Partridge is the socialistic candidate for mayor. Mrs. Partridge sold the tricycle of her daughter, who had outgrown the machine, to the young daughter of Mrs. Rose Acton, a poor lady. One dollar was paid as security, while the tricycle was given a trial. The machine did not give satisfaction, and was returned and the money demanded. Mrs. Partridge refused to pay it until she disposed of it to somebody else. Two years passed, when a sale was made, and Mrs. Acton, hearing of it, demanded her money back from Mrs. Partridge, who happened to be sitting on her front porch. Loud words ensued between the two women, and Prof. Partridge rushed out of his library. Mrs. Acton was sitting in a rocking chair on the porch.

"Get—get—get—!" commanded the professor, and he tilted the chair forward. Mrs. Acton was thrown down the steps, spraining her wrist. She had him arrested. He was found guilty and fined $15 and costs. Then she sued him in the civil court. On the first trial the jury disagreed, standing nine to three for Mrs. Acton. The present trial lasted three days, and Monday night the jury awarded Mrs. Acton a judgment of $691.25.

Prof. Partridge is a graduate of the literary and law departments of the university, and is engaged in writing a book on Greek verbs. He had Profs. Pattengill, Drake and Mecham sworn in his behalf as to his peaceful disposition.

Still a Mystery.

Niles, Mich., March 12.—It was not believed here Monday night that Cashier Johnson of the suspended First National bank is insane or that he is in Chicago. President Lacey admits that the bank directors do not know Johnson's exact whereabouts. Johnson's brothers in Chicago deny that they know where Johnson is. The belief is gaining that he has absconded. The city council met last night to raise funds to pay municipal expenses, as the city's money is all tied up in the bank. The outlook for business men and manufacturers is bad at present.

Arkansas City, Kas., March 12.—The report of the failure of the First National bank of Niles, Mich., caused much excitement here yesterday, for C. A. Johnson, the missing cashier of Niles is president of the Farmers' National bank of this place. The fact became known Sunday morning, and when the bank opened Monday morning there was a run on the institution. Cashier A. H. Denton had provided over $100,000 in currency and met the excited depositors coolly. The deposits at the time of the bank's last statement were $292,305, with over $107,000 cash on hand.

Alleged Swindler.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 12.—L. Bowman, wanted in this county, is under arrest at Neilsville, Wis., on the charge of forgery. When in Kalamazoo county, it is alleged, he operated under the names of L. M. Clausen, L. M. Miller and J. W. Auler. At Vicksburg he represented himself as a purchasing agent for cattle for a New York firm. He stopped at the McElwain house and had a livery rig every day, to go out on his alleged cattle-buying trips. He claimed to have bought several carloads and made arrangements with several owners of barns in Vicksburg for sheltering the cattle, until they could be shipped. In some cases the owners went to extra expense in getting their barns in shape. The day before the cattle were to be delivered, Bowman borrowed $45 of the proprietors of the hotel. The day Bowman disappeared without paying his hotel and livery bills. He is wanted in several other parts of the country. In some places he represented himself as purchasing horses for the United States army.

Divorce Granted.

Lansing, Mich., March 12.—Monday afternoon Judge Wiest granted a divorce to Rosa Knierim from Adam Knierim. The couple were married after a month's acquaintance, Knierim being then 68 years old and his wife 28. The court granted a new trial of the case of John F. Carter vs. Millard D. Olds, which was removed to this county from Cheboygan. A recent trial resulted in favor of the defendant, who was sued for $20,000 for personal damages due to the plaintiff being injured in his sawmill. The new trial is granted for the reason that two of the jurors conversed with the defendant about the case during the progress of the trial.

Soldiers Punished.

Washington, March 12.—The records of nine court-martials of privates stationed in Cuba are contained in special orders emanating from that department. Private Charles Hill of Troop D, Tenth cavalry, was found guilty of appearing with a dirty carbine at inspection and was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the service, to forfeit all pay and allowances for two months and also to be held in confinement the first seven days of each month in solitude and on a bread and water diet the remainder of the two months to be spent at hard labor. The sentence, minus the solitary confinement and sparse diet, was approved and will be executed. Musician Albert Houck, Battery H, Second artillery, found guilty of absence without leave, or scaling the wall surrounding his battery and post and visiting the prohibited district of Havana and of being drunk and disorderly, was sentenced to forfeiture of pay for one month.

RIVERS ARE RAGING

Big and Little Shenango are Both Swollen Torrents.

CONSIDERALE DAM4GE DONE

Mills Shut Down and Residents Compelled to Move—All Fears of a Flood at Pittsburg Are Passed—Damage by Landslide.

Pittsburg, March 12.—Fears of a floor at this point have been dispelled by a decided drop in the temperature and the cessation of the rain which has prevailed for the past 24 hours. The Ohio at 9 o'clock Monday had reached a stage of 18 feet and rising slowly. River men will be surprised if a 23-foot stage is reached. Trainmen report the Allegheny river practically clear of ice from Pittsburg to Oil City, and Brownsville on the Monongahela reports the river falling. No coal was shipped south Monday, but it is expected the up-coming boats will reach harbor before Wednesday, when a large fleet will start for southern points.

Greenville, Pa., March 12.—The Big and Little Shenango rivers are raging torrents, and still rising. The flats south of Main street and that portion of town bordering on the rivers are under water. Both rivers are full of ice and driftwood, although efforts have been made to clear the channel with dynamite. Residents on Race and Canal streets are moving out in boats and the Mathers Bros.' mills, John Pearce & Sons' woolen mills, and Hodges' Manufacturing Co. have been obliged to close down. The Bessemer Railway Co. has been badly crippled, trains going over the Erie & Pittsburg between Shenango and Linesville. The railway bridge south of town has been badly damaged, and the deep cuts north of Osgood have five feet of water in them.

New York, March 12.—A landslide near Hastings blocked the New York Central tracks for several hours. At Peekskill, McGregor brook overflowed flooding many streets, interrupting electric railway traffic and doing about $10,000 damage. Both the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies report serious interruption to their service. The greatest damage was sustained in the central west and northwest.

Chief Engineer Birdsall of the water department said Monday the rain had averted the threatened water famine and made the situation safe for a month, in which time he hopes that more water will fall. Kensico reservoir, which is the collecting basis for the Bronx supply, rose four feet as a result of the downpour.

Lake Croton, which is the source of the Manhattan water supply, took in 300,000,000 gallons of the rainfall and is now running over. Before it was down 17 inches, with 40 inches remaining. Manhattan is therefore well supplied.

Regarding Brooklyn Mr. Birdsall did not feel so sure. On Long Island the ground is soft and sandy and takes up much of the water. Mr. Birdsall said that he believed the corner had been turned, however, and that the danger of extreme measures of stringency in Brooklyn even had been removed for the time being.

Secrets to Avoid.

Glasgow, March 12.—Mr. John Harvard Biles, professor of naval architecture at the University of Glasgow, in the course of a lecture last evening said: "Great Britain has always been several years behind America in yacht construction. The problem is to reduce weight without reducing strength. The plea that British yachts have to cross the Atlantic has done duty as an excuse too long. Development has been steadily in the direction of lighter hulls and more sail; but we are yet behind the Americans. The evil of secrecy surrounding the conception and construction of British challengers is perhaps necessary to prevent the abstraction of secrets, but they are secrets which, if another knew them, he would only regard as things to avoid."

Developing Seriously.

Cape Town, March 12.—The bubonic plague is developing seriously in Cape Town. Fifteen new cases were officially reported Monday and 97 other persons were isolated because of having come into contact with victims of the disease. Yesterday two colored persons who had been attacked by the plague died in the streets of Cape Town. A European died while being removed to the hospital. The malady is reaching the more prosperous classes, and it has been necessary to remove to the hospital the entire family of a gentleman. The Malay priests are taking the side of the authorities, and it is now hoped that religious trouble will be averted. The removal of several thousand Kaffirs from the city to the Kaffir location will begin to-day.

Exports of Domestic Products.

Washington, March 12.—The monthly statement of the exports of domestic products of the United States shows that during February the total exports amounted to $65,760,998, as follows: Breadstuffs, $22,096,759, increase as compared with February, 1900, $4,800,000; cattle and hogs, $2,916,976, increase $250,500; provisions, $13,984,626, increase $600,000; cotton, $22,310,709, decrease $8,500,000; mineral oils, $4,451,928, decrease $1,000,000. During the last eight months the total amounted to $598,740,375, an increase of $80,000,000.

Held for Examination.

New York, March 12.—The twelve sailors of the British tramp ship Camperdown, who mutined after she stuck over two days on the Cape Lookout shoals, North Carolina, on March 4, because they said she was unseaworthy, were arraigned before United States Commissioner Shields Monday and were held for examination on March 14.

IMPORTANT CAPTURES.

Regarded as Indicating the Collapse of the Philippine Insurrection.

Washington, March 12.—The following cablegram has been received from Gen. MacArthur at Manila:

"Gen. Marian de Dios, four officers and 57 men uniformed and armed surrendered at Naic. This is regarded as very important and indicating collapse of the insurrection. The territory has been heretofore obstinately defended. Conditions throughout the entire archipelago are very encouraging—captures and surrenders of arms continue; 3,167 arms surrendered and captured since Jan. 1. M'ARTHUR."

Manila, March 12.—Col. Walter S. Schuyler of the Forty-sixth volunteer infantry has received the surrender of Gen. Mariano de Dios, four officers and 57 armed and uniformed men at Naio, province of Cavite.

Lieut.-Col. Edward B. Pratt of the same regiment has captured 38 rifles at Alfonso, province of Cavite. A detachment of the Thirty-ninth volunteer infantry has captured ten rifles at Batayan, province of Batangas.

In the case against Fernando Rustan, general agent of the Tabcaleria company, who is charged with having aided the insurgents, papers have been discovered which place in an unfavorable light M. De Berard, former French consul in Manila, who has returned to Europe.

A detachment of the Forty-eighth vounteer infantry has defeated a body of insurgents near Santa Cruz, province of Laguna.

A contract has been awarded for raising the Spanish war ships which Admiral Dewey sank in the battle of Cavite.

The coasting steamer Carmen, 266 tons, the property of Galliano Urrietto, and the schooner Orient, 97 tons, the property of Jose Ysanez, were seized on the recommendation of the commander of the United States gunboat Petrel on the charge of illicit transhipment of cargo between Sopsere and Bulan, in the province of Albay. Contraband of war was found on board the vessels, both of which will be held pending investigation.

CALLAHAN TALKS.

Says Police Arrested Him Because They Had to Do Something.

Omaha, Neb., March 12.—James Callahan talked freely Monday for the first time of the Cudahy kidnaping, and admitted he knew Pat Crowe well, but said he does not know the Cudahys. Callahan denied being with Pat Crowe when he bought the horse which figured in the kidnaping.

"They arrested me because it had come to a showdown and the police had to do something," said Callahan. "There had been so much talk that they felt that they had to do something, and I happened to be the victim. Now they will go ahead and try to put it on me, just to secure the reward; but if I am given a chance to get at my testimony I will come out and show myself to be innocent as any man living.

"As I have said before, the police don't want Crowe. They want to wait until they have tried me. Then if I am convicted they will still let Pat Crowe alone. However, I think that if I am acquitted, Crowe will come in, as he will then have nothing to fear."

Longshoremen's Meeting.

Cleveland, March 12.—All the 85 delegates, representing most of the ports of the great lakes, were present at the preliminary meeting of the longshoremen Monday. President Keefe presided. The time was taken up in finding what the wishes of the individual classes are, and these will be harmonized at a meeting to-day and will be submitted to the dock managers on Wednesday morning. Other than this nothing important was accomplished at yesterday's session. A preliminary conference was held between the lumber shovers and the Cleveland vessel owners carrying lumber, but it was decided that the question of wages should be left to the general conference of all unloading ports, the date for which has not been set.

Charged With Larceny.

Buffalo, March 12.—J. L. Tipton, secretary and treasurer of the Switchmen's International union, was arrested Monday afternoon on a charge of petit larceny. Tipton recently complained to the police that the safe in his office had been opened and robbed of $1,875. Grand Master Hawley of the order, who with Messrs. Cassaday of Kansas City and Welsh of Omaha, of the board of directors, who have been investigating the matter, said Monday afternoon that it had been learned that the total shortage of Tipton was $2,639. He added that the order was fully protected. Mr. Hawley said the arrest had been made at the instance of Tipton's bondsmen.

Strike Ended.

Shamokin, Pa., March 12.—The strike of 500 men at the Hickory Swamp colliery, operated by the Union Coal company, ended Monday by the employes returning to work. All nonunion men joined the United Mine Workers' union.

Opportunity.

In one of the old Greek cities there stood long ago a statue. Every trace of it has vanished now. But there is still in existence an epigram which gives us an excellent description of it, and as we read the words we can surely discover the lesson which those wise old Greeks meant that the statue should teach to every passerby. The epigram is in the form of a conversation between a traveler and the statue:

"What is thy name, O statue?"

"I am called Opportunity."

"Who made thee?"

"Lysippus."

"Why art thou on thy toes?"

"To show that I stay but a moment."

"Why hast thou wings on thy feet?"

"To show how quickly I pass by."

"But why is thy hair so long on thy forehead?"

"That men may seize me when they meet me."

"Why, then, is thy head so bald behind?"

"To show that when I have once passed I cannot be caught."—Christian Press.

Macbeth's Wife's Christian Name.

Miss Blank, who wished to become a candidate for the position of teacher in the public schools, went up for examination recently. Among other things she was called upon to read a passage from "Macbeth" which closes with the words which Macbeth speaks to Lady Macbeth, "I prithee come with me."

"And what," asked the examiner, "do you understand 'prithee' to mean?"

"I understand it to be a corruption of 'pray thee,'" replied the would be teacher, surprised at so trivial a question.

"I am glad," said the examiner. "The lady who came just before you assured me that it was the Christian name of Macbeth's wife."—Judge.

MY CAPTIVE.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER,
Author of "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Sun of Saratoga," Etc.

[Copyright, 1900, by Joseph A. Altsheler.]

The girl rose and walked over to me. Reaching down, she seized the end of my silk handkerchief, which was projecting from my pocket, and jerked it forth. She threw it into the fire and watched it burn, the red heat gripping the delicate silk and converting it in a moment to ashes. Then she turned upon me a face of flame.

"You dared to bind me," she said—"you a rebel and I an English woman, the daughter of a loyal English officer! You dared to insult me so!"

"And I presume that is the reason you burn the handkerchief with which I bound you," I said.

"Yes."

"Now that you have begun the job of burning I suppose you would like to burn me, too, as I am the man who tied the handkerchief, and I did so because you deserved it."

She was silent, but her cheeks were as red as ever

"I congratulate you upon your rescue, your rescuers, your company," I said.

"They are loyal British soldiers."

"They wear the British uniform. Any ruffian and robber may do that."

"I have seen Captain Crowder himself in the army of Cornwallis. My father knows him, and I do too."

"You know his face, and that is all. He may be a good enough British soldier when he is with Cornwallis, but elsewhere he is anything that suits his purpose Look at him and his comrades now"

Every man had produced a bottle and was drinking deeply from it. The odor rose and was too strong to be swept away by the wind.

"Look at them," I repeated. "I congratulate you on your company."

They drank deeply and replaced their bottles in their pockets, where I was sure they were not destined to remain long The red fled from the girl's face but she said nothing, and giving me the same curious look of mingled triumph and defiance went back to her old place on the log There she sat, staring straight into the fire, as if she were wholly oblivious of me and the other men around her

The partisans were in great glee. They laughed and cracked rough jokes, and presently, as I had expected, pulled out the bottles again and took a long, deep draft, once, twice, thrice Their faces flushed from the effect of the strong spirits, and the loudness and roughness of their talk increased. Crowder, the leader, was the loudest and roughest of them all

"That was a fine song you sang to that fellow there when you set him a-napping for us to catch, Miss Howard," he said presently, "and we like music too, don't we boys?"

"Yes, yes!" they roared, all together.

"And won't you kindly sing that song or another as good for us, Miss Howard?" he continued

She made no answer, staring straight at the red embers, her cheeks pale.

"I say, Miss Howard, don't you hear?" exclaimed Crowder roughly.

"Yes, I hear," she replied, "but I'm sorry I can't oblige you. I can't sing any more."

"If you can sing for that d——d rebel there," continued Crowder, "I should think you could sing for us, who are good and loyal English like yourself."

She was silent again

"Didn't we rescue you?" he continued. "Aren't we your saviors? Don't you owe us gratitude?"

Still unanswered, he swore an oath and said to his comrades:

"Here's gratitude for you, lads. Well, if she won't sing for us, we can sing for her How do you like this, my lady? It's called 'I'll Owre the Muir to Maggy,' and it goes very well with the song that you sang."

Then he sang the old song, which, like the girl's, was Scotch:

"And I'll owre the muir to Maggy—
  Her wit and sweetness call me—
There to my fair I'll show my mind,
  Whatever may befall me.
If she loves mirth, I'll learn to sing,
  Or, likes the Nine to follow,
I'll lay my lugs in Pindus' spring
  And invocate Apollo

"If she admire a martial mind,
  I'll sheath my limbs in armor;
If to the softer dance inclined,
  With gayest airs I'll charm her;
If she love grandeur day and night,
  I'll plot my nation's glory,
Find favor in my prince's sight
  And shine in future story

"Beauty can work wonders with ease
  Where wit is corresponding,
And bravest men know best to please
  With complaisance abounding.
My bonnie Maggy love can turn
  Me to what shape she pleases
If in her breast that flame shall burn
  Which in my bosom blazes."

His voice was not unmusical, and he had some idea of rhythm and measure. His comrades joined him, and they roared out a chorus which must have penetrated to the farthest edge of the wood.

"I'll not only sing for you, Miss Howard," said Crowder, "but I'll dance for you too."

It was plain enough that the man was drunk and was relapsing into his natural condition of savagery I hoped that he would fall into the fire, but he did not. His drunken head swayed from side to side, but he kept step to the beat of the song.

One of the men drew his empty bottle and beat upon its side with his knife blade. It made a lively tinkle that sounded like music, and the others, seeing his success, imitated him. Crowder had not only a vocal but an instrumental chorus as well. His zeal increased, and he danced like an Indian at a scalp dance, while the men roared out the song and beat their bottles with enthusiasm.

"Again I congratulate you on your company, your glorious band of rescuers, Miss Howard," I called out to her.

I know she heard me, but she did not reply. Her lips were set firmly, but her cheeks were growing paler and paler, and she seemed to be white to the hair. I tugged at my bonds, but I could not move them.

The song stopped for a moment, and Crowder, looking around for further amusement, spied me.

"A good song, boys, and good fun," he cried, "but here's better fun. Let's hang the prisoner and see him squirm."

The others, as drunk as their leader, shouted their approval, but the girl sprang up.

"You shall not do that!" she cried.

"And why not, miss?" asked Crowder. "He is our prisoner."

"Because I will not permit it!" she cried.

They roared with laughter.

"If you do," she said, "I will report your act to Colonel Tarleton. This man is an important prisoner. He can guide Tarleton to Morgan, and he will do it to save his life. He must be taken safely to the British camp. Tarleton will reward you well."

"All right, if you say so, Miss Howard," he said. "Anything to oblige, especially one as handsome as you are. And we won't hang him tonight. Maybe we will do it in the morning anyhow, but that's no reason why we should stop the fun now. A soldier's life is hard, and he ought to make merry while he can."

He took a large flask from his haversack and shared it with his men. Then they began to sing and dance again, all of them wild with drink.

It was an orgy of savages. The fire had died down and ceased to blaze; only the red embers glowed in the darkness. I could feel the blackness of the night which rolled up and encircled us more closely. The girl was as immovable as a statue. Her tawny hair shone in the dim light, and I could see that her face was still white, but that was all.

One of the men fell down presently from sheer exhaustion.

"Let him lie," said Crowder. "He'll sleep as well there as anywhere."

The man never moved, but began to snore, and a second one yielded to exertion and whisky and, stretching himself out on the ground, went to instant sleep. Crowder himself was the third and was followed speedily by the others, including the sentinel, who had joined without objection in the orgy. The six men were sound asleep in a slumber heavy with weariness and liquor.

A last brand fell over in the coals and blazed up. The girl rose from the log, and by its light I could see that her face had turned from white to red. She walked quickly over to me and said in a voice shaking with excitement and alarm:

"Take me away from here, Mr. Marcel! Take me away at once! I would rather be with you than these men, these savages, these brutes! Nor is your life safe here!"

"They wear the British uniform. They must be loyal British soldiers," I could not keep from saying.

"I do not know what they are," she replied, with alarmed insistence, "but let's go Pray take me at once."

She pulled at my shoulders as if she would have me rise and go on the instant.

"Untie my wrists," I said.

She tugged at the cords, but could do nothing. They were tied too tight.

"Take a knife from that drunken fool's belt," I said, indicating one of the men. "Don't be afraid. He won't wake."

She took the knife from the man's belt and cut my bonds. I rubbed my wrists together for a few minutes to take out the stiffness and to restore the circulation. Again she urged me to start without delay

"Wait a minute," I said. "We must provide ourselves."

They had taken my arms from me when they bound me, and I recovered them, adding to my supply Crowder's pistol and some ammunition Then I turned to the horses

Old Put's great dark eyes flamed with approval and gladness. He had stood at his halter's length, watching the orgy and my rescue with attention and understanding.

"We'll bid farewell to these beasts now, old comrade," I said in a whisper, patting his nose.

He was too cautious to whinny a reply. The brown hack was near him, but I saw another among those belonging to the guerrillas which I fancied much more than he. I hastily changed Miss Howard's saddle to his back, assisted her to mount and sprang upon Old Put.

I turned the heads of our horses toward the northwest, but as the woods before us were dense and interlaced with wiry bushes and creeping vines we dared not attempt more than a walk. The horses stamped and neighed as we left them. The girl's mount stepped on a large, dry branch, which broke with a crack like a pistol shot. Nor did ill luck stop at that. The abandoned horses, frightened by the report, neighed and stamped again, creating a great uproar.

The sentinel, who was the least drunk of the party, sprang to his feet. He was yet half dazed with sleep and liquor, but he saw the dim figures of a man and a woman riding away from the little encampment, and he knew that, according to the plans of Captain Crowder, it was not what should be. He fired a hasty pistol shot in our direction, the bullet clipping the dry twigs above our heads, and then shouted to his comrades to awake, giving emphasis to his cries with many sturdy kicks.

"Look out for your head!" I shouted to Miss Howard. "An untoward bough might prove fatal. And be sure you stay with me."

"I'll not leave you," she said.

"Now, Old Put," I said, "lead us out of this."

He curved his long neck in the darkness and looked ahead with sharp brown eyes. I let the reins fall loose, and he wound about among the trees with a judgment that was never at fault The other horse kept close at his side. Behind us we could hear the cries of the awakened men as they leaped upon their horses and rode after us, shouting to us to stop. Two or three more pistol shots were fired, but the air received them.

If the men could see at all, it was but dimly, though they could follow us by the hoof beats of our horses and the tearing of the vines and slapping of the bushes as we passed They made such a prodigious cursing and swearing that we were never in any doubt as to where they were. I had a mind for a moment to send toward them a pistol ball which would stop their fuss, but I concluded that the more noise they made the better it would be for us, as it gave us exact warning of their approach. They did not seem to be gaining upon us, which was a satisfaction for the present Out on the plain they would see us more distinctly, but I believed that our horses could leave them there

I saw a beam of light shining through the latticework of the boughs and then another and another and knew that we would soon be in the open. The girl's horse stumbled, and she uttered a little cry of dismay, but in a moment the horse was steady on his feet again, and we went on. The beams grew more numerous and fused into a broad shield of moonlight. Two minutes more and we would be out of the wood and into the cleared ground, with the fields racing behind us.

But the light had its evil for us. Against its broad silver disk we were silhouetted like the man in the moon, and the popping of pistols told us that we had become good targets. One bullet passed so close to my head that I thought it must have cut a lock of hair in its passage, and I took it as a warning to hurry

"Haste, Miss Howard!" I said "We want to be beyond pistol shot in the cleared ground, for the light will help them there."

She was riding well, and her expression was firm and courageous. We shook the reins against the necks of our horses, and taking the chances of bush and vine sped into the open as a volley of pistol shots whistled after us.

I uttered a shout half of pleasure, half of defiance, to our pursuers and bade Old Put show them what it was for a real horse to run his best I had confidence, too, in the horse that the girl rode, for he was long limbed He looked like a strong animal, and he certainly had a clean, fast gait that kept him alongside of Old Put

I regarded our escape as assured, and the girl seemed to take a like view of the case Relief showed in her eyes

"Miss Howard," I said cheerfully and egotistically, "I congratulate you on the improvement in your company"

"At any rate, you are still a rebel with a rope around your neck"

"I seem to have been preferred to the British behind us, who do not have ropes around their necks, but deserve them Remember that I ride with you at your own invitation"

"Then you consider me still your prisoner?"

"Oh, I am yours; but, whether one or the other, I am to be guide"

The men behind us were silent, and we were sure of gaining upon them I could see their figures rising out of the plain in the misty gray light, gigantic and distorted in shape, and the thud, thud of their horses' hoofs, as regular as the ticking of a clock, came to our ears.

"Which way do we go?" asked the girl.

"To Morgan, of course."

"Then I shall soon be with my father and friends again."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because Tarleton will certainly take Morgan, and of course I shall be retaken."

She looked at me with much of the old sparkle and defiance and the absolute faith in British valor that British defeats seemed unable to shake. I was annoyed, and my patriotic pride was hurt.

"You seem to take it for granted that Tarleton will win if he should overtake Morgan."

"I do."

"Yet you have heard the news from King's Mountain?"

"A chance, an accident."

"The same chance, the same accident, may happen again."

"Never"

I could not say her nay, for were we not retreating steadily before the advance of Tarleton, a retreat that seemed to all to be the part of wisdom, for again let it be said that we were fewer in numbers, far inferior in equipment, and more than half of our little army were raw troops, farmers! The exhilaration of the flight and escape disappeared for the time, and a heavy depression took its place.

CHAPTER VI.

IN A STATE OF SIEGE.

Old Put stretched his neck, and the regular steady beat of his flying hoofs was music to a man who loves a good horse But the new horse, too, lengthened his stride and kept by my side. I judged that he was a good comrade for Old Put The plain, grassy and undulating, rolled away before us, and I could not see its end

Our pursuers hung on, and I distrusted their silence. It betokened resolution, a determination to follow us mile after mile, to hang to the chase like hounds after a deer I judged that among Crowder's motives chagrin at having made such a fool of himself and a desire to repair the error were the strongest The men did not spread out fan shape, but followed us in a close group I was still sure that we were gaining, though very slowly, and they seemed to think so, too, for presently they fired two or three shots, as if they hoped to frighten us with spent balls. The girl's horse swayed a bit to one side, and I thought he had stumbled again, but she said he was merely startled by the pistol shots, and, pulling him back into the true course, we galloped on.

We crossed a swell of the earth, and far out on the plain I saw the dim outlines of a small house, or rather log cabin, rising from the earth The girl's horse threw up his head and uttered a neigh, or rather a cry or a great sigh, for it was almost like that of a human being, and staggered from side to side, his pace sinking quickly from a sure gallop to a shaky trot The horse's great eyes were distended with pain and fear, and blood and foam were on his lips A dark red clot of blood appeared upon his side, and I knew then that one of the bullets which I thought would fall short had struck him and the wound was mortal

Without my hand pulling upon his rein Old Put stopped and looked at the other horse with eyes of pity and sorrow, for he knew what was going to happen—he knew he was going to lose one who had been proving himself a worthy running mate and comrade

I leaped from Old Put's back and snatched the girl from the saddle just as her horse reeled and fell and gave up his honest life with one great groan

I half lifted, half pushed, the girl upon Old Put's back, where she sat securely despite the man's saddle Once she protested, but I roughly bade her be silent and obey me and we would escape yet Then she said no more

"See the house yonder?" I said "We will reach that and beat them off Maybe we will find allies there This should be a patriot region

I rested one arm on Old Put's shoulder The girl was on the horse's back, and I, partly supported by him, ran by his side It is a trick that the borderers will tell you is common and useful enough Old Put gave me great assistance, for he understood, and as we flew along my feet at times seemed not to touch the ground

Our pursuers reached the crest of the swell and raised a shout of triumph as they saw the dead horse in the path, and the single horse running on, carrying one of the fugitives and half carrying the other

I took one quick look backward and calculated that we would reach the hut in time Our pursuers evidently did not think so, for they fired no more shots. The girl was silent, her hands folded upon the pommel of my saddle and her face all white again She left the direction of everything to me.

The cabin continued to rise from the plain, the corners, the eaves and the roof appearing until it stood before us distinct and near at hand.

"Now, Put, old comrade, greatest of horses," I cried, "we are nearing the goal! Show them how much strength and speed you have kept in reserve for this last effort! Show them what you can do when you try your best!"

He replied by deed, and I fairly swung through the air as we raced straight to the cabin I expected some tousled head to appear, roused by the thunder of so many hoofs, but none came The cabin remained silent and lone There was a small garden, but no fence around either it or the house.

Old Put dashed straight for the door, as if he knew what was wanted of him, which, in fact, he did, and stopped five feet in front of it so abruptly that the girl would have shot over his head had I not held her

She sprang to the ground I slipped the bridle off Old Put's head, gave him a slap and cried:

"Go!"

BRITISH BANKRUPTS.

PRIVILEGES WHICH ARE ACCORDED BY LAW TO PEERS.

Some English Legal Decisions as to What Constitute the Necessaries of Life—They Widely Differ From Duke to Ordinary Mortal.

Recent bankruptcy cases in London have brought up various legal decisions which have been reached in England on the subject of what are necessaries of life for men of various stations and degrees who are not in command of their own incomes.

A duke, for instance, or even a marquis or an earl is entitled by law to one bottle of champagne a day if his trustees hold the money to pay for it. In the case of the former Duke of Manchester the law decided that seven bottles of champagne a week are necessary to a duke whose affairs may be in the hands of trustees and that if he had not the control of his own income he must be allowed to have a carriage with one horse, a riding horse as well, one manservant and a house with a rent of not less than £250 a year; otherwise he must be allowed to have the use of £2,000 a year, while the rest might be allowed to accumulate for the good of the estate till the trustee period expired.

A viscount or a baron is allowed by law to describe as necessaries things which smaller fry might struggle along without. But a viscount's income—provided there is anybody to pay it—is fixed at £1,500 a year and a baron's at £1,000. He is, supposing any guardians have a few thousands a year to pay out to him according to discretion, only entitled to claret as a beverage, for his yearly wine allowance only runs to £60, which would not keep him in champagne unless he drank it very seldom. The duke's wine bill may run to £150.

The viscount must have a carriage, but it may be attached for debt, and he cannot force his guardians to give him a horse. Of course, if he has no guardians, nor any income, either, he must do as other people and go without, but these things are considered necessary to peers. A manservant is allowed to a viscount or baron, but the house rent need not exceed £200, nor can it be less than £150.

A doctor is better off than a viscount in one way—his carriage cannot be seized in most cases, nor can the expenses of it be reckoned in his income tax returns. In selling up a doctor for debt he may retain one horse, and two of his carpets are considered as necessaries to his business—in the hall and consulting room—and reckoned at £20 apiece He may have surgical instruments and medical appliances to the [illegible] of £1,000, and these cannot be seized.

An ordinary man can retain nothing but his clothes, his hairbrushes and a few stern necessaries of that kind. No wine is allowed to a doctor, but if a student in the hands of trustees, he can demand a couple of servants and a house rent of £60 per year.

The son of a well to do merchant or tradesman making about £1,000 a year can demand neither wine nor horses nor servants, but the law may allow him a rent of £50 and another £150 or £200 to keep himself on, supposing he is in the hands of guardians, whether under or over age. As to debt, he can be sold up, bar his personal necessaries and his clothes, though he is not generally allowed to keep more than six suits of the latter.

If he has more a judge might allow them to be taken with the other chattels, and he can be left without a chair to sit on or a spoon to eat with. Jewelry, if he has any, can be taken; but if he has, sa [illegible] pairs of valuable sleeve link[illegible] keep only one of them. In [illegible] way he may keep a dress suit [illegible] if he has two an order may be made to sell up one of them.

A lawyer can have 500 books on legal subjects or in some way pertaining to law, and these have to be left alone by the brokers. There are extreme cases in which everything, even necessaries, may be taken, but the lawyer may also demand exemption even in such cases for his wigs, or at least two of them, and two gowns. As a student in the hands of guardians he can make them pay him £80 a year for chambers, and they must pay his examination and other fees.

A clergyman or minister of any kind is worst off of all and can keep very little for himself. He can make his guardians come down with the fees his profession needs, however, and if he lives in the country as a curate and has some trustees and also a guardian he can make them supply him with a gardener

Why She Wept.

Among the Mainotes, descendants of the Spartans, thieving is considered a very honorable employment. An English traveler, being entertained at the house of one of the mountaineers, took some silver articles from a packing case he had with him to eat his dinner with At the sight of such costliness an old woman began to cry, the Englishman having asked what affected her so much:

"Alas, my good sir," she replied, "I weep because my son is not here to rob you of those beautiful things!"

No Gentleman.

He is charged with selling liquor without a license This excuse having already been worn threadbare, Prosecutor Sampson decided upon some more effective plan of action and declared the bond forfeited. There were two charges pending against Billingsley, one before Justice Vandegrift and the other before Justice Humphrey, bonds having been given for $200 in each case, and both are accordingly forfeited. The county will now proceed to collect the same. Ab. H. Lane and Ira Bryant, of Hudson, are on the bonds and will have to make the amounts good.

Resolutions.

WHEREAS the Woman's Home Missionary society of Tecumseh has suffered the loss of a very highly esteemed lady, Mrs Maria Gamble, having passed through the shadow of death and having found out "as we believe" how beautiful it is to be with God. Therefore be it

RESOLVED, that we extend to her children our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in their sad lonliness reminding them we will ever cherish the remembrance of her loving untiring work with and for our society, also her long service as our presiding officer and we would in this way acknowledge our appreciation of her labors in the part of our Lord's vineyard Our hope of a reunion at God's right hand where we mortals must put on immortality and as we have born the image of the earthly we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

RESOLVED that this expression of our love, our hope and our prayer be spread upon the records of our society, also published in the Tecumseh papers and a copy be given to our dear sister's children.

MRS. F J. TEMPLE,
MRS. A WARING.

Birthday Dinner.

One of the most elaborate and artistic dinners ever given in Tecumseh was served to the King's Daughters by Miss Helen Anderson last evening, on the occasion of her mother's birthday. The parlors were decorated with pink and white hyacinths and carnations, the table decorations being beautiful pink roses and smilax. The meal was tastefully served in courses by Miss Helen and Mrs Loree, and the ladies were not only delighted with their entertainment, but with the artistic display of decoration and dinner.

To Whom it May Concern:

Tecumseh, Mich., March 7, 1901.

We have this day sold our stock of groceries, provisions, cigars, tobaccos, etc., to R. S. Moore, who removes the same to his store on W. Chicago street Patrons trading with him need not be afraid of buying old shelf worn goods as our stock did not contain this class of goods but nice fresh stock.

Thanking our many customers and friends for their patronage, we remain
Respectfully,

ROUND ABOUT US.

It was Monday morning and at the breakfast table the small boy remarked that his sister the previous evening reminded him of DeWet, the Boer general, whom the dispatches said was hard pressed. This happened in Adrian.—Hudson Post.

Through a sketch of the life of John Waters, in a Detroit newspaper, he has received letters from a brother from whom he had not heard for 50 years. The two were seperated when mere lads and are now old men. John Waters resides in Brooklyn, his brother in Grand Rapids.

The Tecumseh postoffice entrance must be in bad shape. Last week Dr. Jenkins, fell just at the door, and broke his elbow which struck a grate. He can't throw a baseball with that arm for three months C. E. Williamson got a fall also and struck his face upon the hard floor, snubbing his nose, and bruising his lip. Wightman would lose customers, if there were any other postoffice in the burg.—Adrian Press.

Here is a case that actually happened at Morenci. A little three year old boy attended a baptizing, and shortly after visited a neighbor's home, accompanied by his five year old brother. The three year old, imbued with the spirit of what he had seen, decided to baptize his brother, and with a face all seriousness, he stepped up to him, and caught him by the nape of the neck, "I'll ess I'll baptize you." He got a little mixed on the words used, and instead of using the form, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost," with all gravity, as he brought his brother down with a resounding whack on his back on the floor, he exclaimed, "I baptize you, holy Moses, you son of a gun."—Adrian Telegram.

LETTER NO. VI.

Walter Norris Favors Us Again.

Headquarters Dept. of the Visayas.
Iloilo, Panay, P. I., Jan. 17, 1901.

EDITOR HERALD:

Soon after landing at Manila, I learned that that city was not to be my destination after all. I found that the ordinary American idea of the Philippines geographically is somewhat limited and that there is a great deal of this country not called Manila. So another clerk and myself made preparations for our departure for Iloilo, the second city of importance in the Philippine Islands and situated a distance of about 400 miles from Manila on the Island of Panay. We obtained transportation on a Spanish coaster, a small tub of about 400 tons, which was scheduled to leave Manila the latter part of October, but whose departure was postponed several times until we finally left November 8. This postponement is very common among the Spaniards Two of their most common expressions are "poco tempo" (after a while) and "manana" (tomorrow).

But we finally found ourselves once more on the ocean headed for this more distant part of the Philippines. We had very poor accommodations on board the ship. The first class passengers were composed of a few army officers with their families and the clerks Among the second class were soldiers, Chinese and Filipinos. We had the small upper deck on which to live. Most of us had no staterooms and those who did, appeared to desire to live outside of them more than inside. The result was that our small area on deck was our sitting-room, dining-room and bed-room all in one. So when the first night came, men, women, children, all made themselves as comfortable as possible on the deck. Those who didn't have them were furnished with cots or beds. My bed-fellow and myself soon went through ours and had the soft deck on which to sleep.

That first night out we were "rocked in the cradle of the deep" in earnest. During the earlier part of the night we were alternately on our heads and on our feet, with a very short interval between in a horizontal position. But we were all seasoned sailors and no one was seasick. During the most of our journey the sea was as smooth as glass We were in sight of land at all times and had a good opportunity to view the different islands, the scenery of some of which is fine.

We enjoyed our trip with the exception of meal time, especially breakfast. This may seem strange but Spanish mealtime is not the same to me as meal time in America. A Spanish breakfast is a pretty small meal. Then the meals are not only poor in quality, but are quite apt to be rather unclean. One time on going below, I observed a Filipino cleaning spoons. He had one of his bare feet resting on the bench on which he was working, and I noticed some of the spoons were beneath his foot As "ignorance is bliss," I was careful not to watch culinary operations any further.

After two days of this delightful(?) trip we arrived in the channel in front of Iloilo. But it being late we must needs content ourselves with a look at the lights on the shore and another night on board.

The next morning we ascended the river upon which Iloilo is situated. This river is small and at low tide is hard to enter. At this time it was low tide and, after wiggling and twisting for a time, we became stranded on the sand in a shallow part of the river. But a small boat took us ashore, while the Belgika, the ship, waited for high tide. Our impression as we neared Iloilo was that we were finally landing on one of the most forsaken parts of earth—a sort of desert island.

The city is very low and when the tide is out it looks very much like a swamp. During a rainy time much of the city is covered with water. I can look out from my window on a rainy morning and see a water buffalo wading in a swampy place within a stone's throw of the house. Though on becoming better acquainted with Iloilo we found it to be much better than a casual observer might think. Situated as it is between a channel of the sea and the river, it is almost surrounded by water and we have a cool breeze most of the time. The weather since I have been here has been fine. Of course the sun shines down hot during the day as it must necessarily, within 11 degrees of the equator, but in the shade and with no manual labor to perform, it is fairly comfortable. The nights thus far have been fine, cool and pleasant in which to sleep.

Living expenses are very high in the Philippines. Since the American occupation almost everything has jumped in price, and prices in Iloilo are worse than those in Manila. Government employees avoid the high hotel prices by forming messes. By doing this they can live for about $40 Mexican per month. Everything over here is Mexican. One dollar Mexican has the same purchasing power as 50 cents American. Free silver might be a good thing in the United States, but the free silver over here is a mighty inconvenient thing to carry.

I think the different values of the moneys may have something to do with the high prices also. A new man comes over from the States and asks the price of an article and when he receives his answer he will ask whether the price is Mexican or gold. This gives the merchant the opportunity to double his price.

It is almost impossible to get dwelling houses in Iloilo. We clerks in the the adjutant general's office happened to be lucky enough to get a good one on the beach. For the upper story alone we pay $50 Mexican per month which gives an idea of what rental prices are here. For this we get one large room, two chambers, cook room, etc. No American thinks of renting the lower story of a house in this country.

The view from where I live is one of finest in the city. Just across the channel lies the island of Guimaras, said to be one of the prettiest bits of scenery in the Philippines. Then toward the west the view is directly up the channel where in the evening we see a fine sunset which, with the picture made by Guimaras and the placid sea flecked with white-winged prows, any artist would love to attempt to put on canvas

Iloilo contains about 15,000 inhabitants. At one time it was one of the prettiest cities in the Philippines, but in February, 1899, just as Gen. Miller was about to enter the city after a bombardment from the channel, the Filipinos, fleeing before the Americans, burned the city behind them. The Filipino flag was at that time over the city. Spain held very little aside from Manila. Iloilo is now built up to some extent and is process of building.

This town is if anything a little more monotonous than Manila. The principal amusement has been a Filipino circus which consists mostly of tumbling, accompanied by a Filipino band The tumpling is quite skillful, but the band is a poor one. As they play on an average three times a week and about the same thing every time, it becomes very monotonous.

The Filipinos are inclined to be quite musical, and some of them are well educated in music, especially instrumental. I have't yet heard what I thought was good singing among them, although I have heard a good deal of practicing. At one of our neighbor's homes I heard a young lady trying to sing the scale, practicing her music lesson, I suppose. I never realized so fully before the meaning of so many of the humerous stories told on would-be accomplished daughters.

One of their customs here is serenading. A band, or orchestra of about ten pieces, violins, flutes, guitars, fifes, etc, has been serenading the homes around our neighborhood lately. Some of their productions are well worth listening to. In nearly every house a piano may be found, and it is an uncommon thing not to be able to hear a piano at some house or other at all hours of the day, and I might say, the hours of the night also. Some of the members of the United States regimental band are Filipinos, usually those who play the flute. as they appear to be better adapted to that instrument than any other.

This is the time of year when old Michigan is covered with her blanket of snow and ice. It scarcely seems possible here where every day is warm and balmy As far as climate is concerned I think Iloilo would make a good winter resort But only the climate recommends it as thus far I have found nothing else in its favor. And when I speak of climate I do not mean the whole islands Iloilo is said to be among the healthiest of locations in the Philippines. But, however, the islands generally are not the "land of fevers" to such an extent as is believed by some in the states. It is true that a great many soldiers are taken sick in the Philippines, but although it is caused to some extent by the climate a great deal of sickness could doubtless be avoided by the exercise of proper care.

Very respectfully,
WALTER E. NORRIS.

Robert Boyd.

Died at his home in Raisin Feb. 26, 1901, after an illness of six weeks. The deceased was born in county Antrim, Ireland in January 1831. He was married at the age of 22 to Miss Mary J. Preston with whom he came to Michigan about 45 years ago, having to endure many troubles and trials as all the old pioneers did. He was at the time of his death a little over 70.

Although not a member of a church he always lived an honest Christian life, being a Christian worker in his own home, ever giving his children good Christian advice which they will always remember. He was never found reading anything but the bible or some other good religious book on the Sabbath. All that loving hands could do was done for him but God thought best to take him to a better home beyond where sorrow and parting will be no more.

A dear and loving husband, a kind and affectionate father has gone to rest, respected by all who knew him. He was the father of nine children, six having gone before, three still living, Mrs. Jake Schaber, Wm J. and Francis H. Boyd, and six grandchildren. The widow has been confined to her bed by sickness a number of years, not being able to get from her home at all. She with her children mourn the loss of one they dearly loved. The funeral was held Friday from the residence at half past one, Rev. M. T. Seelye officiating The funeral was attended by a large circle of friends and neighbors.

He also leaves five brothers, David Boyd, of Albion; Jos. Boyd, of Ada, Mich.; Thos. and Alex Boyd and a brother in Ireland, five brothers and sisters having gone before, one of them Mrs. Jos. Russell, who died last May.

But, dear father, we will miss you,
We shall see your vacant chair,
But in heaven we hope to meet you,
There will be no sorrow there.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank the kind neighbors who so kindly assisted us during the sickness and at the funeral of our dear husband and father, also to the choir.

Strikes a Rich Friend.

"I was troubled for several years with chronic indigestion and nervous debility," writes F J. Green, of Lancaster, N. H., "No remedy helped me until I began using Electric Bitters, which did me more good than all the medicines I ever used. They have also kept my wife in excellent health for years. She says Electric Bitters are just splendid for female troubles; that they are a grand tonic and invigorator for weak, run down women. No other medicine can take its place in our family." Try them. A MATTER OF FAITH.

Many of the Clergy in Michigan Endorse the Little Conqueror

Our religious opinions are, as a whole, a matter of faith. Whatever denomination or sect we follow we pin our faith on the words and teachings of our Pastor. His sincerety is never doubted; that he thoroughly believes his adopted creed is unquestioned. The opinions of the clergy on any subject carry well deserved weight with all classes of people. Many reverend gentlemen in Michigan are testifying for the little conqueror, their praise is not given lightly and only after personal experience. Gratitude and a desire to promote the welfare of the public bring forth such testimony as follow:

"The Rev. F. A. Smith, of 829 First street, Kalamazoo, Mich., says: "When I procured Doan's Kidney Pills I was, at the time, and had been considerably troubled with my kidneys. Backache was quite pronounced, being especially severe when I sat or stood in a stooped position for any length of time. Other symptoms usually attending disordered kidneys plainly indicated what caused the difficulty. Doan's Kidney Pills corrected the annoyance in a very short time and I have not noticed, up to date, any indication of a recurrence. As I took no other medicine there can be no doubt but Doan's Kidney Pills were the direct means of curing me. I am most faverably impressed with them."

THE GRIP EPIDEMIC.

The Disease More Prevalent than Ever and Quite as Fatal. The Best Treatment.

The grip has surprised the doctors and health authorities this season by its rapid spread and by some novel symptoms. While it spares nobody it is proving especially dangerous to middle aged and elderly persons. In many cases either a fatal onset of pneumonia, or a complete breakdown of health and strength, is apt to follow an attack of grip.

The wise course for all is prevention. By wearing a Benson's Porous Plaster on the chest and back you protect the lungs from cold and chill and (with ordinary care) you are safe from grip.

For those who are already suffering from grip, or from the usual winter coughs and colds, Benson's Plasters are a sure and speedy relief and cure. Highly medicinal and scientific.

Refuse imitations and substitutes. Only the genuine are effective. Examine when you buy. Seabury & Johnson, Manufacturing Chemists, New York.

ME.

Through many, many summers
I look, as through a glass,
And see a world of showers and flowers
And laughing children pass,
And in her big blue sunbonnet
One other little lass—

A lass who watched the swallows
Skim just beyond her hand
And where the flickers fled and sped
And nests of hang birds fanned
And felt those birds were fairy folk
On wing to fairyland.

In her warm fist she carried,
Trudging o'er hills and dales,
In tiny papers laid and weighed
As if in fairy scales
The salt that catches bobolinks
When sprinkled on their tails.

A little lass and wistful,
Who gazed up the far sky,
And reached for fairy things and wings
In vain and wondered why;
Poor little lass, I wonder still,
Could she be really I?

ALLAH AND AMERICA.

A Persian Legend About the Creator's Visit to Earth.

In Persia, on a morning after the vermin had been particularly vigorous, I said something caustic about getting back to God's country. An Armenian who had reposed in utter comfort in the same caravansary heard it and smiled. Being an Armenian, he hated the Persians, probably. Incidentally the Persian reciprocates.

Well, this Armenian, rubbing his hands and with his head skewed over on one side, said: "The Persians have a legend for everything. They have a legend for what you said just now. It is this:

"Allah—that is God—once said to his angel, 'I will see this world which I made.'

"And so Allah and the angel descended invisible in a cloud to the earth, and the first place at which they arrived was France—that is, in Ferenghistan. And there they saw the railroads, and the tramways, and the theaters, and the great picture galleries. And Allah looked in disappointment and said: 'Alas, no! This is not the world which I made. I made none of these things.'

"So they journeyed to Inglezistan—that is, England—and there were mighty ships in the harbors and huge mills which make all sorts of things and food in plenty. And again Allah said: 'Alas, no! This is not the world which I made.' And everywhere they traveled in the cloud Allah looked upon the land and said, 'No; this is not it.'

"At last, in despair, the angel led the way to Persia, and Allah sat himself down upon a very high mountain, and, looking far on every side, he saw neither railroads nor tramways nor theaters nor picture galleries nor ships nor mills nor schoolhouses nor plenty to eat.

"And Allah said: 'Yes, at last. This is the world which I made. Not a thing is changed. The people whom I put there have done nothing.'"

"Why didn't he come to America?" I asked.

"Sir," answered the Armenian, "in Persia they had not even heard of America."—Harper's Weekly.

A Word Kept Him Up.

An absentminded ruralite was the cause of much amusement at a Memphis hotel a few nights ago. He registered early after supper, but did not go to his room right off. About 9 o'clock, his usual bedtime, he remarked to the clerk that he believed he would "remain."

"All right," said the obliging man behind the counter. The big clock ticked off another hour, and the old man addressed the clerk again:

"I say I believe I'll remain."

"You have my permission, sir."

When the hands on the dial pointed to 11, the old fellow, who was so sleepy he hardly knew where he was "at," called out in a half angry voice:

"By the eternal, I say I believe I'll remain!"

Again the clerk assured him of his permission, but the situation was becoming critical, and something had to be done.

"When you are ready to retire," said the clerk, "you can get your key at this desk."

"Retire," said the exasperated guest. "That is the very word I've been trying to think of for two hours. Give me the key to my room. I'll sleep until 10 o'clock in the morning to make up for lost time!"—Memphis Scimitar.

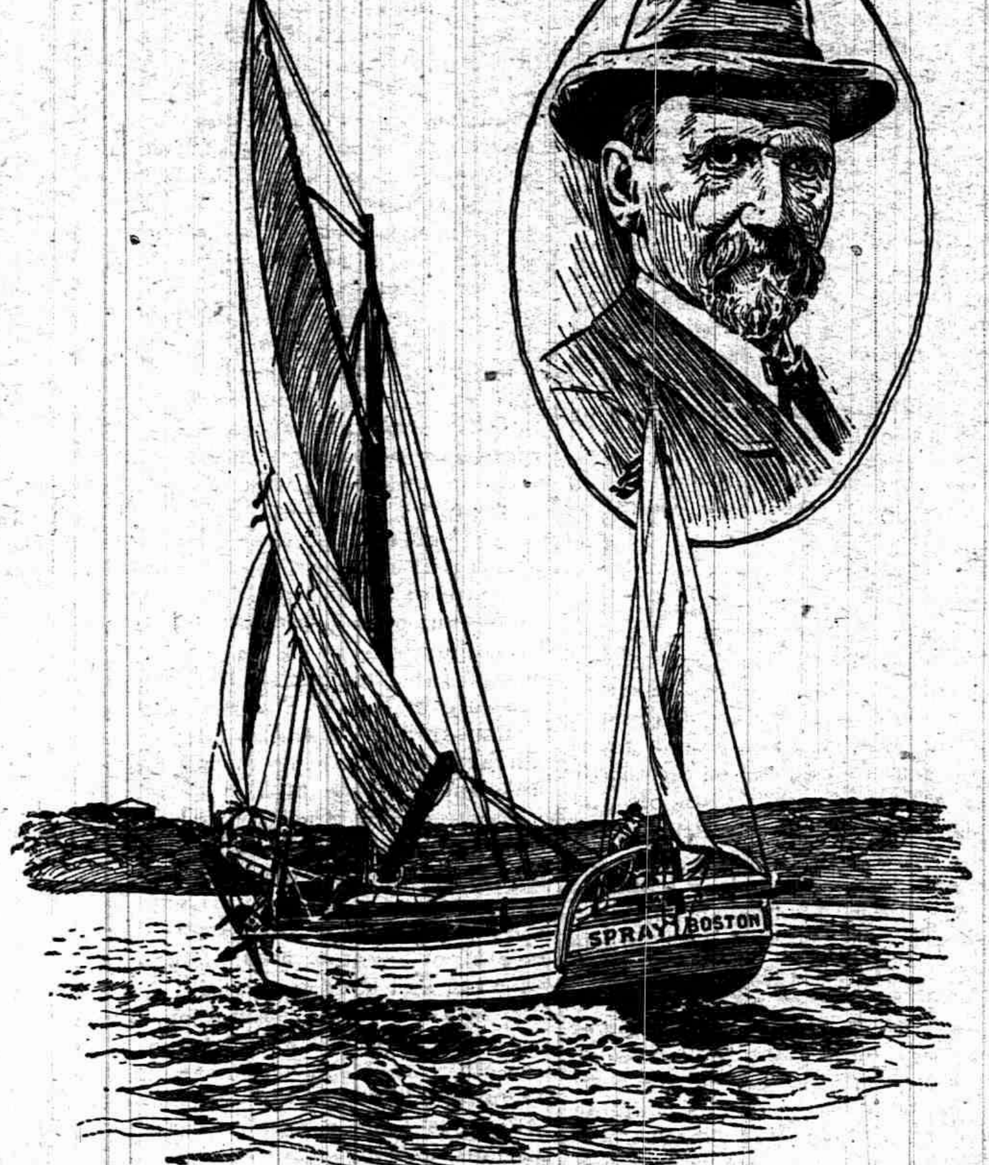
A YANKEE SEA KING.

CAPTAIN SLOCUM SAILED AROUND THE WORLD IN A SLOOP.

The Bold Navigator and His Famous Craft, the Spray, Will Be at the Pan-American Exposition In Buffalo Next Summer.

The nautical adventures of the Vikings of old, which have been celebrated in song and story, are overshadowed in importance by the remarkable voyage of Captain Joshua Slocum around the world in a sloop 36 feet 9 inches in length over all and nine tons net burden. The solitary Yankee sea king cruised 46,000 miles on all the oceans, ten times the distance ever claimed for a Viking ship. It was the first and only successful attempt to circumnavigate the globe alone in a small boat. The extraordinary character of the voyage can only be gauged by those who have devoted their lives to sailing the seas and know their varying moods, and they one and all regard it as a most remarkable exploit.



CAPTAIN SLOCUM AND THE SPRAY.
[To be at the Pan-American exposition.]

Captain Slocum and the boat in which he made his around the world voyage will be at the Pan-American Exposition next summer. The craft will ride upon the waters of the Beautiful Park Lake, where it may be viewed or boarded by Exposition visitors. That it will prove to be a great attraction goes without saying.

The intrepid Yankee globe circler is a slender man, not above the medium height and is somewhat bald, but there is little gray in the fringe of surviving hair or in his full beard. He has blue eyes, which are frank and direct. He possesses a dry humor which is very amusing. That he is daring and plucky is attested by his long and solitary trip.

The boat in which Captain Slocum made his voyage is named the Spray. It was originally a fishing boat, supposed to be a century old, and when it came into Captain Slocum's possession was in process of decay. Unaided, he rebuilt it upon the original lines, and the splendid manner in which it behaved on the long tour is sufficient evidence that he builded well.

Captain Slocum sailed from Boston on April 24, 1895, and his voyage consumed 3 years and 2 months, coming to a close during the Spanish-American war. In lieu of a chronometer he had an old tin clock, but he was rarely at fault in his longitude. The voyage was attended with many unusual incidents. The first occurred after the Spray had left her first port of call, the Azores. The Captain had eaten freely of plums and a native cheese, and they did not agree with him. He was attacked with stomachic cramps. He double reefed the mainsail and with a full jib put the sloop on her course, lashed the wheel and went below to the cabin, where he rolled in agony on the floor. Becoming delirious, he imagined that a strange man came on board, announced himself as "one of Columbus' crew" and guided the craft. A blow came up, and the Spray ran like a deer. When the Captain regained his full senses and was able to go on deck, she was holding true to her course. She had made 90 miles during the night in the rough sea.

The Spray went through the very dangerous Straits of Magellan, whose shores are strewn with wrecks and inhabited by pirates, without accident, but after weeks consumed in the passage was driven by a furious gale southward and thence eastward around Cape Horn, necessitating a second passage of the Straits.

Captain Slocum was received at every landing place with the most cordial hospitality, for his name was known the world around among seafaring men, and the cabled news of his progress went before him. In Samoa Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson visited him. In Tasmania Lord Hampden was a caller. At the Cape Sir Alfred Milner saw him. A pass over the Cape railways permitted the skipper to pay his respects to President Kruger of the Boer Republic. While he was cruising the Spanish-American war broke out, and his first intimation of the fact was gleaned from the United States cruiser Oregon, which signaled, "Are there any Spanish men-of-war about?" Captain Slocum knew of none being in that locality. He flippantly replied, "No, but let us keep together for mutual protection!"

It was on June 27, 1898, that the Spray cast anchor at the moorings she had left on her voyage around the globe.

To see the skipper and the craft of globe circling celebrity will be a treat which all Exposition visitors will want to enjoy. ELBERT L. LEWIS.

OUTDOOR MACHINERY.

One Class of Engine That Is Not Housed to Protect It From the Weather.

The oldest type of engine represented at the Pan-American Exposition is the windmill. The earliest mention we have of a windmill being employed to do any work was in Alexandria 150 B. C., when an invention driven by wind power was employed to operate a musical instrument. As even this must have been the product of evolution it leaves us entirely in the dark as to the actual origin. However, we know that windmills were employed in useful labor in many parts of Europe long before Columbus discovered America.

These old windmills were quaint affairs. Some of them floated on water and were turned by hand to meet the vagaries of the wind. A later development was built on a post, and still later the roof of the building was pivoted, which allowed the building itself to remain stationary.

It remained for the engineers of the nineteenth century to construct a wind engine that was at once simple, useful and practical. The amount of power developed and usefully applied by this time honored invention amounts in the aggregate to hundreds of thousands of horsepower.

At the Pan-American Exposition a group of windmills will be gathered together and planted in a corner of the grounds, where they will be required to pump water and in other ways demonstrate their usefulness. These will comprise many different types, showing the evolution of the engine from the old fashioned four sail pattern down to the ordinary multitudinous sprocket plan in which the sail area is automatically adjusted to the wind pressure and the speed is regulated by a governor. Some of these engines will develop a tremendous power, while others are simply devised as a cheap and reliable means of working a farmer's pump.

Experiments extending over a period of years have been conducted for the purpose of generating electricity by this means. Developments along these lines so far have not been entirely satisfactory, though indications point to ultimate success. The difficulties met with are principally owing to the inconstancy of the wind, which must be overcome by storing up the energy of the gale to be given off as required. As the slow development of the storage battery retards this important achievement we await with impatience the improvements in this direction that we know ought to be made. The time will undoubtedly come when electric lighting will be done in this manner—in fact, the electric light plant in a village in Scotland is now partially operated by a wind wheel which is built on the horizontal principal.

To those unfamiliar with the production of the wind engine as used at the present time a visit to this section of the Exposition will be a revelation. Hitherto this early invention has been useful merely to the farmer and stockman. Possibilities in the immediate future point to a much wider and more extended usefulness when power from this source will be bottled up in storage batteries and shipped to distant points to be used in the mechanic arts.

HERBERT SHEARER.

An Old New Jersey Schoolhouse.

The pupil of today would think his opportunities very great if he could see the school equipment of a hundred years ago. A Morris county (N. J.) school of that period is thus described in an old letter of one of its attendants:

The building was constructed of logs, and instead of glass for windows, sheepskins were stretched over the apertures made by sawing off an occasional log. The windows had one merit—they prevented pupils from being interrupted in their study by what was going on outside. The time was regulated by an hourglass, and the pupils drank water from a tumbler made of a cow's horn or from a ground shell.

In spite of these differences of equipment, the schools of a century ago resembled those of today in one notable respect—they had for the most part the same great literary works that are the standards of our language now. The greatest literature is fortunately the possession of many centuries.

Do Not Drink While Eating.

Liquids at meals if taken too often or too carelessly are liable to dilute the gastric juices. Take no liquid of any kind when food is in the mouth. Take as little as possible till the close of the meal. The digestive agents themselves being fluids, it is reasonable to suppose that an excess of liquids taken with the food will have a tendency to dilute and thereby weaken the digestive juices.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Competent, but Uncanny.

A. A. Gallagher, district passenger agent of the Missouri Pacific railroad, while en route south was taken quite ill and was compelled to stop at Montgomery, Ala. He went to a hotel and sent for a physician.

The medical man said:

"You have a case of pneumonia and must have a nurse."

"All right," said Gallagher. "Do you know a good nurse you can send to look after me?"

The doctor said he did and would have the nurse at the hotel within an hour. In about an hour a colored woman who measured about nine feet in girth put in an appearance, and Gallagher asked her if she had ever nursed sick people.

"Yes, indeed," she replied. "I'ze had considerable sperience with ailing pussons. I nussed Marster John, and he died; then I nussed Mistress Lucy, and she died; then I nussed Mistress Lucy's sister. The doctor didn't think she was so very poorly, but she done died."

"Have you had any other experience in nursing?" asked Gallagher.

"Yes, indeed. Only last week I left Colonel Carter's house, where I nussed the colonel for five days."

"Well, did the colonel get well?" asked Gallagher.

"No. The colonel he died, too, but Dr. Jones, who 'tended him, run a big knife into the colonel and opened him up. The doctor had been out late the night before and was a little nervous. The knife sort of slipped and just about cut the colonel's heart out. Then the doctor said all h— couldn't save him."

"You seem to be a good nurse," said Gallagher, "and you're engaged."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Not So Far Gone.

The last letter he received from wifey conveyed the intelligence that she was quite sick, and of course he was considerably worried. But he was comforted by the fact that she was with her mother. He wrote her an affectionate letter and told her to be sure and let him know if she grew worse. The next letter conveyed the intelligence that she was a little worse, though the doctor said it was nothing serious. But he worried a great deal.

The next afternoon a telegraph boy sauntered into his office with the usual nonchalance of a messenger boy conveying a "rush" message and shoved the book under hubby's nose.

"Is dis Mr. Blank?" asked the boy.

"Yes," gasped hubby, cold chills chasing up and down his spine.

"Message f'r you. Sign here. De charges is 60 cents."

Hubby grabbed the fateful manila envelope and hastily tore it open. What he suffered while tremblingly unfolding the bit of yellow paper can be imagined, but not described. He was almost afraid to read it, but finally he nerved himself for the worst. This is what he read:

"Turn off the water and don't forget to give the bird plenty of seed."—Omaha World-Herald.

Fear of the Dead.

Fear of the dead is instinctive in man. There is no doubt about that. I do not profess to be able to enter into the exact reasons for that fear; whether it be that man instinctively recoils from contemplation of the fallen temple alone or what not, it is sufficient that the fear exists.

Neither is this instinctive fear of the dead confined to man. I owned a horse once that could never be driven past a dead horse. The animal exhibited all the signs of true fear.

Fear coupled with shock can produce insanity. I do not think that the reason of a normal man would be unseated if he were locked up alone with a corpse for many hours, though a person with weak nerves certainly might be so affected. If a man discovered that his sweetheart had died suddenly while alone with him, the shock might render him insane.

Even to those most familiar with death and dead bodies there is something awe inspiring about a corpse, and no man's nerves are proof against a fright. I remember once, when I was alone in the dissecting room at night, the hand of the subject upon which I was engaged became loosened. I did not notice what had happened. Suddenly the arm of the subject swung around, and the hand struck the side of my face. Years of training in immunity from superstition vanished in the jump that I gave.—Dr. John D. Quackenbos in New York World.

A Sergeant's Surprise.

"When Indians were being recruited for the regular army," said a western representative, "it was the custom to give them civilized names. Down at Fort Apache army officers were recruiting Yumas and Apaches. A recruiting sergeant was naming them. Finally a company had been formed, and the first sergeant who was an American, went out to the front and center to report his company to the commanding officer.

"'Company D, sir, four privates absent.'

"'Who are they?' asked the commanding officer.

"'Jay Gould, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Joe Jefferson and Russell Sage, sir,' shouted the sergeant."—New York World.

The Coroner's Two Verdicts.

"Inquests are sometimes very funny affairs," remarked a western man. "I remember one in the early days of my county in Kansas. A man was found dead by the side of a small stream out on the prairie. No mark was found on his well dressed body. His gun was fully loaded in his hip pocket, and $25 was found in his pocketbook. Of course the coroner took charge of the money. A jury was impaneled and after finishing its deliberations found that the man clearly died of heart failure.

The coroner promptly paid from the dead man's pile the $12 due for expenses and discharged the jury. The $13 remaining bothered him. He argued that to turn that $13 over to the county, to be held in trust for the man's possible relatives, would be the same as throwing it away. The man was a stranger in those parts. Possibly he had no friends.

The coroner was equal to the occasion, however. He declared himself dissatisfied with the verdict and called the jury together again. They sat on the body a second time and found exactly the same verdict, but the coroner's mind was at ease. The $25 was exhausted."—Washington Star.

Less Hopeful For Himself.

George, the colored janitor, needed some money and went to the church treasurer for it.

"There isn't a cent in my hands just now, George," said that officer, "and won't be till next Sunday's collections are handed over. Can't you wait till then?"

"Don't see how I kin, Mistah Gubney," persisted George. "K'yarn't run de house widout money."

"The best I can do for you," returned the treasurer, "will be to advance you $3 out of my own pocket and run my risk of getting it back from the church."

"Well, suh," solemnly rejoined the janitor, "ef you don't git it back 'm de chu'ch, Mistah Gubney, you'll git yo' reward in de good world, but it's diffn't wid me. Ef I cain't git dat free dollahs f'm you, I'd like t' know whah I kin!"—Chicago Tribune.

A Case Lincoln Would Not Take.

All clients knew that, with "Old Abe" as their lawyer, they would win their case—if it was fair; if not, that it was a waste of time to take it to him. After listening some time one day to a would be client's statement, with his eyes on the ceiling, he swung suddenly round in his chair and exclaimed:

"Well, you have a pretty good case in technical law, but a pretty bad one in equity and justice. You'll have to get some other fellow to win this case for you. I couldn't do it. All the time, while standing talking to that jury, I'd be thinking, 'Lincoln, you're a liar,' and I believe I should forget myself and say it out loud."—Success.

PALE WOMEN

A Bloodless Face Indicates Trouble.

Watery Blood a Menace to Health.

WE KNOW HOW PALE PEOPLE CAN GET RICH RED BLOOD.

COME AND LET US TELL YOU ABOUT VINOL.

When blood is watery and thin, or, as doctors would say, lacks red blood corpuscles, it is a sign that much is radically wrong.

We would advise everyone who has such symptoms to start at once to take a proper remedy to overcome this trouble.

That remedy is Vinol, the greatest and most modern tonic and rebuilder.

Vinol owes its virtue to the fact that it contains in a highly concentrated state the active curative principles extracted from cods' livers, the same elements that have made cod-liver oil famous for wasting diseases.

These medicinal elements are dissolved in a delicious table wine so that Vinol is most palatable.

None of the vile-smelling obnoxious grease that characterizes cod-liver oil and frequently makes it an impossible remedy for those who should take it, is found in Vinol.

We could relate many instances where Vinol has done good and restored the roses of health to the pale cheeks of the sufferer.

The following is a fair sample of the way people write in regard to Vinol:

"For several months I suffered lassitude and tired all the time. Also a sinking feeling in my stomach, which nothing would relieve, and I was pale and weak. As an experiment I tried Vinol and if I wrote pages I could not tell all it has done for me."—MRS. A. K. LA PRUSCH, Amesbury, Mass.

Because we know Vinol so well, and because we know so surely what it will do, and how it will accomplish the good it does in a scientific way, we unreservedly endorse and recommend it, and in every instance guarantee to refund to any one what they pay us for Vinol if they do not find it entirely satisfactory.

THE LEGISLATURE

The Credit Bill Given a Knockout Blow in the Senate

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE DID IT

The House Starts a Movement to Defeat Colby's Election Bill—Committee Appointed to Draft Resolutions on Gen. Harrison's Death.

Lansing, Mich., March 15.—The credit men's bill to regulate the purchase, sale and transfer of stocks of goods, wares and merchandise in bulk," was treated to a dose of knockout drops by the senate judiciary committee Thursday. The bill provided that the vendor shall furnish a written statement of all his creditors and the amount due or owing or to become due or owing them from him, before he is paid a cent by the man bargaining for or purchasing any stock of goods, wares or merchandise in bulk for cash or on credit.

Senators Atwood and High objected to the bill because it seemed to be designed to help and protect only a particular class of wholesale merchants and manufacturers. They talked, however, as though they would not object to a well-drafted general bill.

O. R. Baldwin, Henry M. Campbell and D. C. Delamater of Detroit spoke in favor of the bill, as did also Senator Murfin of Detroit.

Senator Nichols, chairman of the committee, contended that the people asking for the passage of the bill have sufficient protection under existing laws—the garnishee and judgment creditor acts, and by resorts to attachments, replevin and other similar proceedings in court.

Senator Gad Smith's bill to require the filing of contracts for the purchase of merchandise from merchants on the installment plan of payment was informally considered.

A movement has been started in the house to defeat Rep. Colby's bill to abolish political conventions in Wayne and Washtenaw counties. Some of the opposition members say they believe the bill is substantially the same as the Colby primary election measure for Wayne county, which was defeated in the senate a few weeks ago, and that it would meet a similar fate if it reached the upper house.

As a sort of "feeler," as well as to have some fun with Colby, the house Thursday afternoon, in committee of the whole, on Rep. McKay's motion, struck out all after the enacting clause of the bill relative to primary elections in Wayne and Washtenaw counties. Colby insisted upon a roll call when the committee's report on his bill was read.

Reps. Hurst and Ames of the Wayne delegation at first voted to concur in the committee's report, but later changed their votes. The motion to concur was lost by a vote of 8 yeas to 60 nays. The bill went back to the general order.

On motion of Rep. McCallum, the house authorized the payment of the "necessary expenses" incurred by the committees on mines and minerals and geographical survey on their recent trip to the upper peninsula, which Speaker Carton tried to prevent being taken.

Rep. Hurst's bill to allow the people of Detroit to vote on the proposed $1,000,000 bond issue for a new public library was placed on the general order. It will come up for consideration in committee of the whole either today or early next week.

Rep. McCallum had his bill to raise the specific tax on railroad property taken from the table and ordered printed, and tabled again. McCallum says Chairman Chandler of the committee on railroads refused to have the bill reported out, and for this reason it was not referred to any committee. He can call it up now any time he desires.

When Rep. Totten's bill to exempt all lands owned by Grand Army posts from taxation came up, Rep. Branch had it amended so as to provide for the exemption of the property of secret societies in buildings used exclusively for lodge and society purposes, and which yield no revenue. The bill, as amended, was passed.

The house adopted a resolution offered by Rep. D. E. Burns, instructing the speaker to appoint a committee to draft appropriate resolutions on the death of ex-President Benj. Harrison. Speaker Carton appointed Reps. D. E. Burns, Dingley and Dupont as such committee.

The house also adjourned until Wednesday night at 9 o'clock out of respect for the late Gen. Harrison.

Outfit Demolished.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 15.—A rather startling "Carrie Nation" episode took place in Fulton village, this county, early Wednesday morning. Charles Sherman had established a gambling joint there which was frequented by young men. The W. C. T. U. and members of the Methodist and Reformed churches planned a raid. A rescue committee was appointed and after a long parley Sherman was compelled to sell his pool and billiard tables and cards for $25. At 2 o'clock in the morning a crowd of over 100, mostly women, took the outfit into the public square, smashed the tables with axes and made a huge bonfire. The raiders say that the next time they will not pay for the tables but will smash them. Mrs. Peter Dir and Mrs. Polly Dekalb, officers of the W. C. T. U. were the leaders.

Not Reliable.

Lansing, Mich., March 15.—Secretary Baker of the state health board declares that people should take no prescriptions for smallpox which are printed in some of the daily papers of the state. He says they are entirely unreliable. The only thing to do is to place smallpox patients in the hands of a reliable physician, but vaccination will prevent the disease.

SNOW BLOCKADE.

Delayed Traffic on the G. R. & I. Being Resumed.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 15.—The first train since Tuesday night arrived from the north on the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad Thursday night. The train left Mackinaw Tuesday noon, reached Mancelona and then was hung up, unable to proceed. Last night the track was tolerably clear at Cadillac, and it is expected the road will be open clear through to-day unless new difficulties arise.

The railroad men have some big stories to tell of the storm. They say in places that the snow is from 10 to 15 feet deep. It is not of the light, fluffy kind, but the storm was alternately rain, hail, sleet and snow and the result is a mass that is almost as solid as ice and upon which snowplows can make hardly any impression. Some of them recognized the hopelessness of the situation and hung up at the first station they could reach.

In the stalled trains the passengers were taken to farm houses or the nearest town, while those on the trains which stopped at stations were given the best accommodations the local boarding houses could afford at the company's expense.

Freight traffic, which was suspended when the blizzard first struck the line Monday, is still out, but unless the blizzard resumes its sway it is expected it will begin again to-day or Saturday, when the road will be cleared.

Reports from the north are to the effect that the storm is pretty well spent. Snow and rain are still falling but in small showers rather than in lots. The temperature is also moderating.

CHARGED WITH LARCENY.

Grand Rapids Young Lady Identifies a Clairvoyant at New York.

New York, March 15.—Miss Ethelyn Quimby of Grand Rapids, Mich., appeared in the police court Thursday as complainant against Mrs. Belle Fitzgerald, who is otherwise known as Mme. Zingara, fortune teller and clairvoyant. Miss Quimby charges Mrs. Fitzgerald with the larceny of $600 in April, 1900, at Grand Rapids when she was known as Mildred Fenton.

Mrs. Fitzgerald, or Zingara, has been in the Tombs since last August, when she was brought here from Chicago on two charges of grand larceny She was indicted on these charges, but the indictments were dismissed on Tuesday. She was then rearrested and held to wait the arrival of Miss Quimby.

Miss Quimby was accompanied from Grand Rapids by Sheriff Chapman of Kent county, Michigan. She is the daughter of the late I. L. Quimby, a wealthy lumber dealer of Grand Rapids, and is prominent in society there and is treasurer of the "Butterflies," a social organization. She went to the Tombs prison yesterday and identified Mrs. Fitzgerald as the woman who had, she says, swindled her at Grand Rapids. She picked her out from a number of female prisoners The case was adjourned until Saturday. Miss Quimby had nothing to say in court, but to reporters she said that she met Mrs. Fitzgerald in Grand Rapids by accident. The clairvoyant had an office in the same building with he dressmaker. Her father's estate was in litigation at the time and she says that the clairvoyant promised to settle the case by hypnotic influence. She gave her $600 and some jewelry. Mrs. Fitzgerald then left the city.

Not Guilty.

Mt. Clemens, Mich., March 15.—John Burroughs of Lenox township was acquitted Wednesday in the circuit court of an attempt to murder his son-in-law, Fred Koehler. On Jan. 4 Burroughs, while in a state of intoxication, armed himself with a shotgun and revolver and left his home at midnight, going to his son-in-law's house, some three miles distant. He aroused Koehler from his sleep. On gaining entrance to the house, a quarrel ensued and Koehler claimed Burroughs threatened to kill him, and discharged the gun. A quick move on his part saved him. Burroughs claimed the gun was discharged accidentally, he having no intention of doing harm. The jury took the same view of the case. Burroughs is a farmer with some property and was in jail over two months.

Held for Smuggling.

New York, March 15.—Mrs. George F. Hall, the Chicago dressmaker who, in September last, it is alleged, endeavored to bring $4,000 worth of silks, laces and Parisian-made gowns into this country without paying the duties, was arraigned Thursday before United States Commissioner Shields on the charge of smuggling. She waived examination and gave bail in $1,500. Mrs. Hall had four trunks. They passed the custom house inspectors at the pier and were taken to a hotel in this city. Special Customs Inspector Theobald later went to the hotel and seized the trunks. Mrs. Hall had gone on to Chicago, but later she came here of her own accord and by payment of the duties and value of the goods obtained possession of her trunks, the civil charge being thus disposed of.

A Threatening Letter.

Toledo, O., March 15.—Senator W. C. Gear of Upper Sandusky, who is quite prominent in state politics, has received the third letter demanding $500 on the threat of burning his home, waylaying one of his daughters and burning out her eyes. Detectives have been employed on the case.

Municipal Police Disbanded.

San Juan, P. R., March 15.—The San Juan city council has decided to disband the municipal police and to petition Gov. Allen to assign the insular police to city duty. The governor, who is now visiting Humacao, will probably comply with the request.

From the African Desert.

Berlin, March 15.—The official laboratory at Hamburg has discovered that the sand which fell during the recent snowstorm in northwestern Germany came from the African Sahara.

A Rich Find.

Victoria, B. C., March 15.—News has reached here from Cape Nome that during December a rich bar was staked, which is beneath Behring sea and parallels the coast, for about 100 miles up from Snake river. Those who located the claims had to cut through five feet of ice to reach the sand and gravel, which was very rich. In summer the claims will be totally submerged. J. Densmore has returned to Nome from Kuskokwim and reports that his party had a hard trip, having run short of provisions and had eaten three dogs, their moccasins and deerskins. They found no gold, although they prospected the country thoroughly. Stampedes have occurred from Nome to American creek, in Kougrock and Norton sound, where rich strikes have been made.

A GRAVE SITUATION

Relations Between St. Petersburg and Other Capitals Strained.

IS NEARING A SETTLEMENT

That is the German Opinion Concerning the Manchuria Question—A Conflict is Considered Very Unlikely Over the Matter.

London, March 15.—"Advices from Niu-Chwang assert that Admiral Alexieff has reinstated the Tartar general, Ssing Chi, in full command at Mukden, supported by 4,000 Russian troops," says the Shanghai correspondent of the Times. "This is the Russian method of reinstating Chinese officials."

The Vienna correspondent of the Times, discussing the gravity of the issues raised by Russia's seizure of Manchuria says:

"The relations between St. Petersburg and at least one other European capital are unquestionably strained, although it is quite unlikely that these conditions will lead to a conflict.

"In fact, Russia's financial embarrassment is so great that she will be almost compelled to take account of European protests."

Berlin, March 15.—The opinion is gaining ground in official circles here that the Manchuria question is nearing a peaceable solution, but that Russia, in order to secure her interests in North China against possible Japanese interference, will during the month increase her troops there, which now number in round numbers 100,000 men.

The North German Lloyd line has petitioned Count von Buelow to declare that, in view of the importance of Shanghai to European trade, an improvement in condition of navigation in the Woo-Sung river, now little better than a mere tidal channel, be included in the final peace negotiations with China. It is understood that British and French steamship companies have addressed similar petitions to their respective governments

London, March 15.—"Hsi Liang, the reactionary governor of the province of Shan-Si, has been removed," says the Shanghai correspondent of the Standard, "and Chun Hsun, governor of the province of Shen-Si, succeeds him. Tuan Fang, a pro-foreign Manchu, has been appointed acting governor of Shen-Si."

Pekin, March 15.—China has strenuously objected to the limitations of the Manchurian convention respecting the importation of arms, the reorganization of the army and the practical control by Russian over Chinese forts.

At Thursday's meeting of foreign ministers the question of indemnities was further considered. Li Hung Chang is reported as again in good health. Field Marshal Count von Waldersee left here for Tien Tsin. Gen. Gaseless, British commander, has left Tien Tsin for Wei-Hai-Wei and will thence go to Shanghai.

Sentence Approved.

Washington, March 15.—The president has approved the sentence of the court-martial in the case of Capt. Samuel K. Schwenck, U. S. A., retired, and he has been dismissed from the military service, on a charge of duplicating his pay accounts. He was a veteran of the civil war and was retired in 1876 He was appointed from Pennsylvania.

Ordered to the Philippines.

Washington, March 15.—Col. Chas. F. Humphrey, who has been chief quartermaster with Gen. Chaffee in China, has been ordered to the Philippines. He will make a tour of the islands, visiting various posts and return to Manila about June 1st to assume the duties of chief quartermaster in the islands, relieving Major Miller.

English Evangelist Arrives.

New York, March 15.—The Rev. F. B. Meyers and his wife of England arrived here Thursday on board the steamer Majestic. Mr. Meyers comes here to conduct evangelical services. He will go at once to Richmond, Va., where he will begin his work. He will conduct services in Atlanta, Cincinnati, Louisville, Birmingham, Indianapolis, Chattanooga and Omaha, sailing for home on April 17.

Time Extended.

Washington, March 15.—Arrangements were made during the call of Lord Pauncefote, at the state department Thursday, for the signing of protocols extending the time for ratifying the British-West Indian reciprocity treaties The formal execution of the extensions will be made in a day or two, and in the absence of Reciprocity Commissioner Kasson in Florida Secretary Hay probably will sign with Lord Pauncefote.

Coal Rates Advanced.

New York, March 15.—A joint notice advancing the freight rates on bituminous coal from the mines to tide water has been issued by the Pennsylvania R. R., the B. & O., the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Norfolk & Western. The advance will be 10c per ton and will take effect April 1.

Report Untrue.

Mexico City, March 15.—Alarmist reports regarding the health of President Diaz and conspiracies here are absolutely baseless. These reports are believed to be fabricated by men who are hostile to the government and for stock speculation purposes. There is no political agitation here.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, March 15.—Thursday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve, in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $149,812,695; gold $91,113,684.

Not as a Rule.

He had been trying all evening to make a good impression. He had told all his humorous stories and had given one impassioned speech from "Cyrano," but was still unconscious. Thick skinned, he failed to perceive all her efforts to get rid of him. Finally there was a deep silence. Fidgeting, he grew nervous and cast about for something to say.

"Do you wear that sort of collar as a rule?" he stammered foolishly.

"No," the haughty maid replied frigidly; "as a collar."

Then he fled.—New York Times.

SHOT TO DEATH.

Cashier Killed by Robbers in Attempt to Loot a Bank.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 15.—Chas. W. Ryan, cashier of the Halifax National bank, was shot to death by Henry Rowe and Weston Keiper of Lykens at noon Thursday in an attempt at a daring bank robbery. The robbers were captured by a party of citizens soon after the crime and were brought to the Harrisburg jail, together with F. B. Straley of Lykens, who is suspected of being an accomplice.

Rowe and Keiper drove to Halifax from Elizabethville Thursday morning, and hitching their team on the outskirts of town boldly entered the bank with revolvers presented and demanded the attaches of the bank to throw up their hands and turn over the money. One of them held in check Abraham Fostenbaugh, the president; Isaac Lyter, the teller, and ex-Representative Swartz of Duncannon, who was in the bank on private business. The other covered Cashier Ryan and under the menace of a revolver they collected the cash in the drawers to the amount of $2,000 and placed it in a satchel the robbers had brought with them. Rowe, with the cash-stuffed satchel in his hand, backed out toward the door, and Keiper also moved toward the entrance of the bank.

Just when it seemed that the robbers would succeed in getting away, Cashier Ryan leaped forward in an attempt to knock up the revolver from the man with the money. In the scuffle several shots were fired, and Ryan fell to the floor, shot through the groin by a bullet from the pistol of Rowe.

Mr. Fortenbough grabbed Rowe and after a short scuffle threw him to the floor. Keiper ran out the door. The noise of the shots attracted J. F. Lyter, who has a store near the bank building. He ran out with his shotgun and pursued Keiper for one block and shot him in the back of the head, when the robber surrendered. The wounded cashier was taken to his home after the capture of the desperadoes, where he died early in the evening.

British Submarine Boats.

London, March 15.—Now that the British government has admitted that it is building submarine boats, the Vickers company has given out their corrected dimensions and other particulars. They will be 63 feet 4 inches long, have 11 feet 9 inches beam, and have a submerged displacement of 120 tons. The main engine, of the gasoline type, will be of 160 horse power. The boats will carry enough fuel to enable them to steam 400 knots. The maximum surface speed will be nine knots. The main motor will be electric, giving a submerged speed of seven knots. Means will be provided for expelling torpedoes under a variety of conditions. The armament of these boats will consist of a single torpedo expulsion tube located in the bow of the vessel. They will be able to carry five torpedoes each 11 feet 8 inches long.

Two Soldiers Suicided.

San Juan, P. R., March 15.—Two members of the Porto Rican regiment, Beltran and Arroyo, committed suicide Thursday. Beltran had been reprimanded by an officer for untidiness and ordered to do kitchen duty. He went to quarters and blew off the top of his head with his rifle. While the body of Beltran was being buried, Arroyo, who was a close friend of Beltran, killed himself in the same fashion. There have been several suicides in the native regiment during the last six months. Thursday morning Clayville, an apprentice of the United States training ship Monongahela, Commander W. H. Emory, was accidentally killed while practicing with a revolver.

Are Greatly Agitated.

Washington, March 15.—Great agitation among the candidates for army appointments now in Washington resulted from a long visit to the White House Thursday by Secretary Root and Adjt.-Gen. Corbin. It was known that for the past two or three days the president had been endeavoring to arrange all, or nearly all, of these troublesome appointments. Many congressmen also remain in the city awaiting action upon the applications they have filed. But after two hours spent in close conference, Secretary Root came away from the White House leaving the appointments still to be finally arranged, though it is expected that an end can be reached in the course of a few days.

Hopes for a Veto.

Washington, March 15.—Senator Kearns of Utah has received a copy of the Evans bill, recently passed by the legislature of that state, amending that portion of the revised statutes of Utah relating to prosecutions for adultery. The senator is very much opposed to the measure and said that in his opinion it was not a good thing for the state and would offer another argument for the adoption of a constitutional amendment He added: "I believe the passage of this bill was unwise and uncalled for at this time and I sincerely hope that Gov. Wells will veto it."

Will Demand Shorter Day.

Toledo, O., March 15.—May 1 the International Machinists' Association of America will enforce a demand for a shorter work day A decision has just been reached by the international organization. In towns where machinists are compelled to work ten hours they will strike for nine hours, and in towns where they work nine hours they will demand an eight-hour day. In every case they will attempt to secure the same wages as those now in force.

Manifest Little Interest.

Washington, March 15—Private advices received here from high authority in Havana are to the effect that the Cuban people as a whole are manifesting very little interest in the proceedings of the constitutional convention, and also that it is not possible for any person at this moment to forecast knowingly the action of the delegates upon the pending propositions touching relations with the United States.

A Difficult Wife.

An Englishman thus describes the wife of his bosom in his will:

"Heaven seems to have sent her into the world solely to drive me out of it. The strength of Samson, the genius of Homer, the prudence of Augustine, the skill of Pyrrhus, the patience of Job, the philosophy of Socrates, the subtlety of Hannibal, the vigilance of Hermogenes, would not suffice to subdue the perversity of her character."—Exchange.

NATION MOURNING

The Loss of a Loyal Son in Gen. Benjamin Harrison.

THE CIVILIZED WORLD JOINS

Arrangements for the Funeral for Sunday Completed—Many Distinguished Citizens Will Attend—Many Messages of Condolence Received.

Indianapolis, March 15.—The arrangements for the funeral of Gen. Benjamin Harrison, ex-president of the United States, have been completed. The body will lie in state at the capitol Saturday from 11 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock in the evening, and the funeral services will be held from the First Presbyterian church Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. M. L. Haines officiating.

The event will not only be one of national significance, but of international importance. Cablegrams are reaching the family of the dead statesman from all parts of the world offering condolences in the hour of bereavement. Gen. Harrison was a man of international reputation and was held in high esteem throughout the civilized world. He had been entertained by the crowned heads of Europe, and his death is felt keenly, not only throughout the United States but throughout the civilized world as well.

The funeral will be attended by many of the noted men of the United States. President McKinley and members of his cabinet will be here. Gov. Yates of Illinois telegraphed that he will be here attended by his staff. Gov. Nash of Ohio, with his staff, will attend the funeral. Gov. Durbin yesterday afternoon sent a notice of Gen. Harrison's death to the governors of many of the states, and it is the belief that the majority of them will be here. The members of Gen. Harrison's cabinet have sent word that they will be here, and it is the intention to have them act as honorary pallbearers. Telegrams have been received from Gen. Tracy of New York, secretary of the navy, and John Wanamaker, postmaster general under the Harrison administration, to the effect that they will be here, and rooms were engaged for them. Francis W. Parker, president of the Chicago institute, sent word that he will attend and a room has also been reserved for him. The railroads have made arrangements for a rate of one fare for the round trip, which will have the effect of greatly increasing the crowds.

Many state and city organizations of different character held meetings Thursday and took action on the death of the noted statesman. During the morning a meeting attended by Gov. Durbin, state officers, representatives of the family and citizens, was held in the governor's parlors and arrangements were made for the funeral. The Merchants' association of Indianapolis held a meeting in the afternoon and drafted a memorial on the death of Gen. Harrison. Arrangements have been made for a joint meeting of the State and Marion Bar associations, to be held in the senate chamber at the state house this afternoon, at which ex-President Grover Cleveland has been invited to be present and speak.

The body will lie in state in the capitol Saturday from 11 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock at night. All arrangements have been completed and the body will be taken from the home Saturday morning, accompanied by a military escort composed of the national guard and Grand Army posts. By order of Gov. Durbin, James K. Gore, adjutant-general, issued orders for the mobilization of the entire state national guard. The troops will arrive this evening and Saturday morning and remain until Sunday evening. Saturday there will be a military display, but the exercises Sunday will be unostentatious.

All of the members of Gen. Harrison's cabinet have been heard from with the exception of Redfield Proctor, who is now in Ohio. Telegrams have been received from Benjamin F. Tracy, ex-secretary of the navy; Charles Foster, ex-secretary of the treasury; John W. Noble, ex-secretary of the interior; S. B. Elkins, ex-secretary of war; John W. Foster, ex-secretary of state; John Wanamaker, former postmaster-general. Telegrams have also been received from Justices McKenna and Harlan of the supreme court; Joseph H. Manley of Maine; T. W. Palmer of Detroit, and W. R. McKeen of Terre Haute.

Mrs. Harrison received a telegram from President McKinley as follows: "In the death of Gen. Harrison the country has lost a distinguished statesman, a devoted patriot and an exemplary citizen. The people of the nation mourn with you. You have the heartfelt sympathy of Mrs. McKinley and myself in this hour of overwhelming sorrow in your home."

Ex-President Grover Cleveland has telegraphed that it will be impossible for him to attend the funeral. Telegrams have been received from Gov. Beckham of Kentucky, Gov. Nash of Ohio, Gov. Dietrich of Nebraska; also from Wu Ting Fang, Mexican Ambassador Azpiroz, T. Dagetau, commissioner from Porto Rico; Sir Richard Webster of London, who was chief counsel for Great Britain in the famous Venezuela case, and Holleben, imperial German ambassador. Telegrams were received from the department of Minnesota G. A. R., from many clubs, G. A. R. posts, faculties and trustees of several universities; also Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, Gen. J. M. Schofield, John Philip Sousa who was leader of the Marine band while Gen. Harrison was president; Charles C. Nott, chief justice of the court of claims; John G. Woolley Charles Emory Smith, and many other distinguished men.

There is a feeling of gloom throughout the city and state. Flags are at half mast and buildings are draped in mourning. While the body lies in state all the merchants in the city will drape their places in mourning, and business will practically be suspended

An Epitaph.

In the churchyard of Leigh, near Bolton, will be found a tombstone bearing the following amazing sentence: "A virtuous woman is 5s. to her husband." The explanation seems to be that space prevented "a crown" being cut in full, and the stonemason argued that a crown equals 5s.—Notes and Queries.

REGRETTED IN GERMANY.

Gen. Harrison Highly Esteemed in the Kaiser's Realm.

Berlin, March 15.—The death of Gen. Harrison is generally commented upon by the German press with the exception of the semi-official organs; but a high official of the foreign office said to a representative of the Associated Press:

"Gen. Harrison was highly esteemed here, and his death is keenly regretted. The estimation in which he was held as an able American statesman Emperor William voiced on the general's visit in 1899, when the emperor paid him special honors."

The uninspired papers, however, differ widely in their comments. The Lokal Anzeiger says:

"With this statesman, one of the most emphatic republicans has departed. He was a declared champion of the Monroe doctrine, with a pan-American tendency, and an advocate of the extremest protectionism."

Nearly all the papers print long biographies. The Boersen Zeitung says: "Gen. Harrison, personally, was scarcely popular. His exterior was unprepossessing, and he often showed rude behavior."

On the announcement of Gen. Harrison's death the flags of the United States embassy and the United States consul general, as well as those of many members of the American colony in Berlin, were half-masted.

VERDICT OF MURDER.

The Coroner's Jury Accuse George Allen and May Bain of the Crime.

Kansas City, Mo., March 15.—The inquest over the body of Wesley Baine, whose body was found lying near the tracks of the Fort Scott & Memphis R. R. last Sunday morning was concluded Thursday, the jury returning a verdict to the effect that the man was murdered by George Allen and May Bane, wife of the deceased and recommending that they both be held for the crime, and they were immediately placed under arrest. Evidence was introduced which went to show that Baine had been assaulted in his own house and the body carried to the spot where it was found. The most damaging evidence was given by the 10 and 12-year-old sons of the dead man. They say that Allen struck their father twice on the head and then Allen and their mother carried their father out of the house. One of the boys went with the officer and got the club from under the house, where it had been concealed after the crime had been committed Murder and Suicide.

Norwood, Mass., March 15.—Ralph G. Bateman killed his sweetheart, Ella F. White, at her home here Wednesday night and then committed suicide by shooting. Bateman was 22 years of age and Miss White was 20. They were alone together when the tragedy occurred. A sister of the murdered girl sitting in an adjoining room heard the first shot and opened the door of the room in which the tragedy occurred just in time to see Bateman put the pistol to his head and fire, falling dead on the instant. Jealousy is attributed as the cause of the affair, although young Bateman's family think his mind had been unsettled by an attack of grip, from which he recently suffered.

Ketcham Is Willing.

Toledo, O., March 15.—It is proposed to pit Cresceus, The Abbott, Charley Herr and Boralma against each other and settle the question of which is the fastest trotter in the world. A. J. Welch has offered to bring off the big sweepstakes race at Hartford, Conn., next summer. The conditions will be $1,250 a corner, with $20,000 added. The first races will be on Labor Day, with Cresceus against The Abbott and Charley Herr against Boralma. George Ketcham, owner of Cresceus, said: "I will enter Cresceus in every class and stake to which he is eligible through the grand circuit this year."

A Chinese Mother-in-law Story.

"The Experiences of a British Pharmacist in China" was the title of an address by Mr. Frank Browne, who was introduced as the government analyst at Hongkong.

As illustrating the Chinese regard for filial piety the lecturer told an interesting mother-in-law story. A man and his wife maltreated the husband's mother. As a punishment the scene of the act was openly cursed, the active agents were put to death, and the mother of the wife was bambooed, branded and exiled for her daughter's crime. The house in which the offenders lived was dug up from the foundations. Moreover, the scholars of the district were precluded from attending public examinations, and even the magistrates were deprived of their office. These drastic measures were designed to render the empire filial.—London News.

MY CAPTIVE.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER,

Author of "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Sun of Saratoga," Etc.

[Copyright, 1900, by Joseph A. Altsheler.]

He galloped around the house and disappeared, his hoof beats dying away in the darkness. Then I shoved the door open and rushed in, dragging the girl after me. I slammed back the door and looked for the bar that is commonly used as a fastening in such frontier houses. There it was, and I shoved it into its place. Nothing but a battering ram could break in that door now!

"Safe for the time!" I cried. "I defy them to take us in this fort!"

Then I looked around me. The girl, half fainting, had staggered against the wall and was leaning there. It was a house of but a single room. On a wide brick hearth a fire was still burning, or rather smoldering, yet it threw out enough light to disclose the contents of the room. No human being was there. Everything of value except the heavy furniture, which was of the rudest description and worth not much more than raw lumber, had been removed, and the whole appearance of the place indicated that its occupants had taken a hasty departure. It was easy enough to guess the cause. Some poor family, frightened by the converging of the armies upon this region, and with good reason, too, for no other state was harried in this war as was ours of South Carolina, had gathered up their portable goods and fled to safer quarters and perhaps not an hour before our arrival, as the fire still burning proved.

"They might have made things a little more comfortable for us," I said cheerfully, for my spirits had gone up with a leap, "but it's good as it is, and we haven't any right to complain. Mr South Carolina farmer, whoever you are and wherever you are, we thank you."

The girl smiled faintly and walked mechanically to the fire, where she sat down on a rude stool and spread out her fingers before the coals as if she were in her home.

"Take a little of this," I said, for I saw that she was half dazed. There was yet a little whisky left in my flask, and I handed it to her. She obeyed me like a child and drank it.

Then I turned my attention to the single window, which was closed with a heavy but ill fitting shutter, some wandering moonbeams finding a way through the cracks. Peeping out, I could see the guerrillas dismounted beyond pistol shot and holding a conference.

"They are talking, but let 'em talk, my dear," I said to the girl. "They can't get us in this cabin What a neat, stout little place it is!"

I really began to have a friendly feeling toward her We had been through so many dangers together, and besides she was my prisoner It is much easier for the conqueror to be generous to the conquered than for the conquered to be generous to the conqueror

She did not reply either to my words or my manner. Her cheeks, which had been so white before, were faintly flushed with pink, but I could not tell whether it was the fire or not. She seemed to me to be in a state of collapse, natural to a girl, even the strongest and bravest, after so much

"Now set the table for us," I said. "We must eat a little after our long, hard ride, for we will need our strength. See if you can't find a candle in that cupboard And, here, take my bundle and get out the food."

I handed her the wallet of bread and meat which I had snatched from Old Put's back almost with the same motion with which I had swept off his bridle. She took it, drew the rough pine table to the center of the room and spread the food upon it. Then, sure enough, she found in the cupboard a piece of old tallow candle, which she lighted and stuck in the middle of the table. These simple household duties seemed to revive her. Her eyes brightened, her color came back, and her first thought was half to defend, half to apologize, for her previous collapse.

"I was tired merely," she said. "I did not lose courage. Don't think that I'm an English girl."

"I never said you lost courage," I replied. "I think that you have borne yourself bravely, almost as well as an American girl would have done in the same situation."

"Show me the one who would have done better," she said, with a snap of the eye.

But that was manifestly impossible at the time, and I made no such attempt.

"The table is ready, and we wait only for the army to take a seat and enjoy itself," she said in a light tone.

"Come and take a look at our enemies first," I said, noticing how her strength and courage had come back and how well they became her.

She put her eyes to one of the cracks and looked out. Crowder and his men, unconsciously imitating us, had begun to make themselves comfortable, first by building a great bonfire and then by sitting around it and keeping themselves warm They had tethered their horses near, and from their position they could watch the house very well and detect us if we came forth.

"Why do they follow us so persistently?" the girl asked.

"For a variety of reasons," I replied. "I might mention for one that they are anxious to take me You know you told them that I was the bearer of very important news which I would tell under proper pressure to Tarleton."

"But that was not true."

"They do not know that it was not."

"I wish they were real British soldiers," she said. "I do not believe that any of them ever saw England. I believe they are American Tories, maybe American rebels in British uniforms."

I did not care to argue with her, such is the strength of prejudice founded on teaching and training, especially British prejudice and most especially the prejudice of British women.

"Why did you take off his bridle?" she asked as she turned away from the window.

I had hung up Old Put's bridle on a nail in the wall.

"In order that I may have it when I want to put it on him again, which won't be long, I hope," I replied.

"Why, the horse is gone!" she said.

I laughed, laughed in her face, which turned red, and then, seeing that it was red, deliberately laughed again. Here was a woman who prided herself on her intelligence and quickness of mind, and with good cause, too, so I had begun to believe, and yet after passing a day and part of a night in Old Put's presence she knew so little about him!

"Why do you laugh?" she asked redly and angrily.

"I laugh at your ignorance," I said, "the fact that you know so little of our comrade, in many respects the shrewdest and ablest of us three, as he is certainly the swiftest and the strongest. That horse has not left us. I merely took his bridle off in order that he might not be troubled with it, that he might eat better, for no doubt he will find somewhere around here, even in winter, a bit of grazing on some sheltered and sunny southern slope. He will take care of himself and come back to us when we need him."

"But suppose the guerrillas take him?"

"I wish I was as sure that they would not take us," I said.

Then I led the way to the table. I drew up the stool for the lady and an old pine box that I found in a corner for myself. A little water was left in the canteen. She drank part of it and said:

"Here's to the health of King George!"

"Yes," I said as I drank the remainder of the water, "this is to the health of King George—George Washington! I'm glad to see that your conversion has begun."

She frowned at me, but we had an amicable dinner over the scraps nevertheless. I stopped at intervals to watch the progress of the partisans outside. They had not yet made any movement against us, and all sat or lay around the fire. I counted them—six—and I knew that all were there, as choice a lot of scoundrels as one could find on the soil of the 13 colonies.

I turned my eyes away from the crevice to look at the girl. The rest and the bite of food had made a wonderful improvement. She was a true English rose, I could see that—a rose of Devon or Warwick or Kent, or whatever is fairest among their roses, a girl with yellow hair that shone like fresh gold in the sun, tinted with red in the firelight, and a brow of white and cheeks of the warm pink that is the heart of the pink rose. Oh, well, as I said twice before, everybody knows that the most beautiful women are the most dangerous, and I wondered if these Saxon maidens of old England were ever an exception. For a moment I felt a feeling of warmth and kinship to old England, but then this England, which is so kind to herself and so appreciative of her own merits, has never been anything but an enemy to us.

"What are you thinking of, Mr. Marcel?" she said suddenly as she looked up. "Why are you so serious?"

"I am astonished that you should address me as Mr. Marcel and not as a rebel, with a rope around his neck."

She patted the floor meditatively with her foot and looked away from me and at the fire.

"It was a mistake due to forgetfulness," she said, with an air of resentment. "I will not do it again."

"I would not forget epithets when you speak of us," I said. "You will get out of practice, and then you will be unlike the remainder of your countrymen and countrywomen."

"Do you want another quarrel?" she asked pointedly. "I should think that we had enough to do to carry on our quarrel with those men outside."

She went to the window and took a long look.

"They are still by the fire," she said, "and I see your horse too. He is dining like the rest of us."

"Where?" I cried, for I was somewhat surprised at the early reappearance of Old Put.

"There's another crack here. Use it," she said. "Don't you see him grazing over there to the left in that field, surrounded by a tumble down fence, or rather the rails of what used to be a fence?"

In truth, it was Old Put, about 50 yards to the left of the cavalrymen and grazing with supreme horse content, as if no enemy were within 50 miles of him. It was a southern slope on which he stood, and I suppose some blades of grass had retained their freshness and tenderness despite the wintry winds. It was these that Old Put sought, with the assiduous attention to detail and keen eye for grist characteristic of him.

There was a fine, full moon, shedding a silver gray light over the earth. Old Put was clothed in its radiance, and we could see him as distinctly as if he stood at the window—the long, tapering head; the velvety nose, which slid here and there over the grass in search of the tender stems; the sinewy neck and the long, powerful body, marked often, it is true, by wear and war, but in the prime and zenith of its strength. My saddle was still upon his back, but that was a trifle to which he had long since grown accustomed in his life with a cavalryman.

How rash of him, I thought, to come so near the British! The old doubt which I had of Old Put when he allowed himself to be deceived by the girl came back to me. Perhaps he was really growing old, falling into his dotage. Surely nothing else could account for his taking such a risk! I would have shouted to him to go away had I thought he could hear me, but I knew my voice could not reach him, and in suspense and anxiety I merely watched that old horse as he continued to graze almost within the light of his enemy's campfire.

CHAPTER VII.

THE TEMPER OF OLD PUT.

My fears found ample justification, for the men soon turned their attention to the horse, and two rose and approached him. I looked upon him as one impounded, and he alone was to blame, for he should have known better. One of the men made a wide circuit and came up carefully behind, while the other approached with equal caution from the front, whistling in a soft and coaxing way and holding out his hand. Evidently the men appreciated the value of a good horse, and no doubt they had stolen enough from patriot farmers to have experience. Old Put never raised his head to look at them, but continued his hunt for blades of grass. He certainly heard their approaching footsteps, and I was convinced now that his dotage was really at hand.

"I thought you said he was the most intelligent of us three," said the girl ironically, "and here he is, gone to sleep and letting himself be taken, to be used perhaps as a common cart horse."

Her words were an insult to us both, Old Put and me, but I knew no timely reply, and I endured them in silence.

The man in front, emboldened by Old Put's gentleness, approached more rapidly and was soon within 15 feet of the horse. Old Put raised his head, and looking at the man a moment lowered it and went on nipping the grass.

The man holding out his hand stepped forward and seized Old Put by the neck. The horse, with a neigh that was human in its anger, turned and bit deep into his shoulder. A scream, wilder, more fearful than any I have ever heard before or since, rose from the man's throat as the horse reared high in the air and smote him to the earth with his fore feet. The girl turned her eyes away in horror as the man was crushed to pulp beneath the fierce beat of the steel shod hoofs, time for but one cry being given to him, but I kept mine at the crevice, though I will confess that the blood was rather a chilly torrent in my veins.

The other man, the one behind, faced about and fled when he saw the death of his comrade, and the one look that I had of him showed fright to the marrow The horse, raising his head, trotted away over the hill. The moonlight fell upon him there in distorted rays and enlarged him into a gigantic figure. In the gray light he looked like some phantom horse, a wild creature that brought death.

The band, recovering from the momentary paralysis caused by the sudden acquaintance of their comrade with death, snatched out their pistols and fired at the horse as they would have fired at a man in his place, but their aim was wild, for the horse gave no sign of a bullet, trotting steadily on, his figure growing larger and more threatening in the exaggerating rays of the moonlight, until he disappeared beyond the swell of the earth. The thing that had been living lay in the dead grass, and I was glad that it was hidden almost by some rocks and the roll of the earth.

"He is gone, Julia," I said, "and I don't think those men will try to take my horse again."

I laughed a little, with a rather forced gayety, for the influence of the sudden tragedy was still upon me. Yet I was glad that Old Put had redeemed himself so conclusively from the charge of incaution and dotage, which I would never again bring against him, even should they come to be true in the course of the years.

The girl came back to the crevice, and we watched the British for some minutes. After the hasty discharge of the pistols they returned to the fire, making no movement either to pursue Old Put or to remove the body of their dead comrade. They would have liked well enough to obtain a good horse, but they were not going to bother about such a trifle as a dead man.

"Do you think they will attack us?" asked the girl.

"Well, no; not yet, at least," I replied. "The advantages of the defense are too great, and these men are mere raiders and robbers. They are not going into a dangerous venture unless the chances are on their side. Perhaps they think we will become frightened and surrender tomorrow."

"You surely will not do that?"

"I had no such intention, worthless rebel as I am, but if you say surrender I will go out and notify them this minute."

"You know I meant nothing of the kind."

She spoke rather sharply, and leaving the window went back to the table, which she began to clear away. She gathered up the scraps and put them back neatly Then she brushed the crumbs off in her hand, for lack of anything else, and threw them in the fire, and having done that pushed the table to one side against the wall. I made no offer to help her, as she did everything with such skill and dispatch, and I was content to watch her. Nor did she say anything to me, but, her work done, took her stool again and sat down at the corner of the hearthstone, leaning her head against the wall of the chimney and gazing into the dying fire.

The last log was smoldering on the hearth and threw but a feeble light. I blew out the candle, thinking we might need it in case our enemies made any hostile movement, and the darkness gathered at once in half the room, only a dim light showing as a fringe to the fire.

"I think you'd better go to sleep," I said to the girl. "It is always well to save one's strength, and now is a chance for rest."

"And you?"

"I don't need any sleep. I'll stay at the window and watch."

"But you need rest as well as I."

"Why do you bother yourself about a villainous rebel who is going to be hanged anyway by his justly angry king?"

"I wish you would stop talking that way."

Her tone was rather plaintive. Undoubtedly she was tired and worn by anxieties, and I obeyed her request. I made her wrap her cloak around her, and, though she declared stoutly that she would not go to sleep, merely wishing to lean her head against the wall and rest, her eyelids drooped and fell, and in two minutes she was asleep.

The fire sank lower, eating its way along the log until only a few inches of wood were left. The girl slept soundly. The curve of the chimney into the wall formed a kind of nook, and her head and shoulders rested easily there like a picture framed against the rough logs, which were unplastered and not even smoothly hewn. I trusted that she would sleep the night through, and as the fire sank lower and lower and the darkness crept up to the hearthstone, almost hiding her figure, the stillness of midnight came, and I could hear her regular breathing in the dead silence.

I went back to the window. The fire of the British faced it, and I could see that three of the men had lain down and gone to sleep. The other two were sitting up, weapons at hand, and I inferred that they had been detailed as sentinels, though their lazy attitudes showed well enough that it was a job they did not like. For all I could tell at the distance, these men, too, might be asleep sitting.

I watched them for a half hour or more and grew very tired of the business. The brightness of the moonlight had culminated, and the earth lost its silver tint, shading into a dark, dull gray. The figures of our besiegers grew shadowy and shapeless. It was a time for sleep, and I felt it in all my bones. A trooper doesn't ask much. If I could have taken my blanket and put myself down on a reasonably smooth piece of turf under the shade of a tree, with the certainty that no enemy would waken me, it would have been sufficient for me. I would have slept the sleep of the just or the tired unjust, which is often as good

I drew the old pine box up to the window and sat on it, resolved to listen, now that I was tired of looking. I wondered what had become of Old Put, the man slayer, and tried to discover why I had been such a fool as to distrust him even for a moment.

Thus musing, I discovered that the fire had gone out; that I could see nothing—in fact, that the room was pitchy dark. I opened my eyes, remembering that all things must be dark to a man with his eyes shut, and saw again the flickering fire and the figure of the girl half reclining in the chimney corner.

This would never do. I was the whole army—horse, foot, artillery and baggage wagons, commander in chief, colonel, captains and privates—and we could never go to sleep all at once. I undertook to walk briskly around the room in order to stir my sluggish blood into watchfulness, but that would wake the girl, and I did not want to do such a cruel thing. I stopped in front of her and looked at her face attentively. Asleep she did not look at all the spitfire she was awake. Mingled with her beauty now was a certain wanness, a something that was pathetic, a look that appealed to a man for protection and strength. After all, she was but a girl, and why should I care for the bitter things she said when probably half the time she said them she was sorry?

A Fable For Women.

There was once a Woman who Felt that her Husband staid Out too Late at Night. She therefore Devised a Plan to Cure him of this. Her Plan was to Rise Early in order to Insure his Retiring Early.

"Only in this Way will he be able to get Enough Sleep," she said.

Her Husband, who usually Endeavored to Please her, rose Without Complaint at Six O'clock, but Continued to stay Out Late. Perceiving that her Purpose was not Accomplished, the Woman changed the Hour to Five O'clock.

"The Morning Hours are the Best for Work," she said, "and I understand that the Morning Air possesses Great Virtues."

Her Husband Objected, but Rose at Five, as she Wished.

Still be continued to Come In Late. Then the Woman fixed the Hour at Four-thirty.

"I have always enjoyed Seeing the Sun Rise," she said.

"In that Case," said her Husband decidedly, "I Shall Not go to bed At All, since it Would Not be Worth my While. I will Stay up All Night and take my Sleep at My Office in the Afternoon. So We will have Breakfast at Three O'clock if you like."

This teaches us that the Early Worm will Turn.—Century.

Always Willing to Oblige.

It was a Texas town, and a long limbed Texan was making across the public square toward the courthouse with a revolver in his hand when he was stopped by a man who asked:

"Are you on your way to the courthouse?"

"Yes, sir; I am," was the reply.

"Going to shoot anybody?"

"Yes, sir; Lawyer Johnson. If it hadn't been for him, I shouldn't have lost my case yesterday. Yes, sir; going to fill him full of lead."

"Are you in any great hurry about it?"

"No special hurry, but when I have shooting on hand I like to get it off my mind as soon as possible."

"Of course; but, you see, Lawyer Johnson is now arguing a case for me and won't be through for 40 minutes. He's going to win it for sure if not interrupted, and if you will only hold on for awhile you will do me a great favor."

"Why, certainly; glad you mentioned it; no hurry about the shooting so as it comes off today, and you can count on me. Have a drink with you? With the greatest of pleasure, and if Johnson is a particular friend of yours I'll shoot him as softly as I can and give him every show to die like a gentleman."—Boston Globe.

The Useful Telephone.

Two young ladies on St. Paul street went to the theater the other evening, and their father, thinking they had a latchkey, went to bed at his usual hour, and the servants all left. When the ladies returned, they rang the bell repeatedly and beat on the door, but got no answer. Finally they began to despair, when a neighbor who had been awakened by the din appeared in white at his window opposite and asked what was the matter.

"We are locked out and cannot awake papa," came the reply in duet.

"Wait a minute," said the quick witted man on the other side of the street. "Your father has a telephone in his room, and I will call him up." So the central was called.

"Give me number ——," said the neighbor.

As soon as the bell sounded in the room of the sleeping father he awoke with a start and ran to the telephone.

"Hello, what is the matter?"

"Is that you, So-and-so?"

"Yes; what is wanted?"

"Your daughters are at the front door trying to get in. Open the door. Good night."—Baltimore Sun.

A Skeleton.

"What is a skeleton? Can you tell me, children?" asked a teacher of her Sunday school class.

The infant class looked troubled. Their ideas on the subject were of the most vague description and, they seemed to think, hardly worth mentioning. The question passed down the class almost to the very foot, meeting only a blank look or a shake of the head, until at last the smallest tot of all ventured a reply:

"Pleath, mith, it ith a man without any meat on it."—London Answers.

A farmer stepped into a rural printing office and said to the editor: "I'd like to take your paper, but I'm too poor." "Go home," said the editor, "pick up a hen, and call her mine, and if she wants to set, let her, and next fall bring her and the produce from that hen. I'll send you the paper." When fall came he found he was paying the price of two papers. After that he was never too poor to take a paper. —Adrian Daily Times.

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but when all other medicines failed, three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 58 pound." It's absolutely guaranteed to cure Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Bronchitis and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at C. A. Wright's drug store.

WOMAN

IS LIKE A DELICATE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

In good condition she is sweet and lovable, and sings life's song on a joyful harmonious string. Out of order or unstrung, there is discordance and unhappiness. Just as there is one key note to all music so there is one key note to health. A woman might as well try to fly without wings as to feel well and look well while the organs that make her a woman are weak or diseased. She must be healthy inside or she can't be healthy outside. There are thousands of women suffering silently all over the country. Mistaken modesty urges their silence. While there is nothing more admirable than a modest woman, health is of the first importance. Every other consideration should give way before it. Bradfield's Female Regulator is a medicine for women's ills. It is the safest and quickest way to cure leucorrhea, falling of the womb, nervousness, headache, backache and general weakness. You will be astonished at the result, especially if you have been experimenting with other so-called remedies. We are not asking you to try an uncertainty. Bradfield's Regulator has made happy thousands of women. What it has done for others it can do for you. Sold in drug stores for $1 a bottle.

RAILROAD NEWS.

An old and trusted employe of the Lake Shore road Julius Hoffman died at Jackson Wednesday. He was well known in this city and county. Mr. Frank Kirchgessner, of Clinton, who was visiting his son, E. F. Kirchgessner here, left for Jackson to attend the funeral which takes place at 9 o'clock Friday morning.—Adrian Times.

Supt. Al. Smith, of the Lake Shore, made an investigation of the street crossing at Hudson City last week and will at once put up gate barriers of four gates each and a tower on each side of the river.

There was a wreck on the D. & L. N. this morning one mile north of Wauseon when twelve cars were pushed off the track. No one was hurt but the cars were badly smashed.

Mrs. W. H. Yeazell and daughter Helen came up from Detroit Wednesday to spend a few days with old friends.

Engr. Hill is now running the passenger train from Lima to Detroit.

The C. N. road is talking about opening a gravel pit near Moscow.

Some cars on the C. N. were pushed off the track yesterday.

THE CHURCHES.

There was a meeting of the board at the Universalist church last evening. They decided to invite their pastor to stay another year.

The pastor at the Universalist church will preach Sunday afternoon at 2:30 taking for her subject "Faith." There was no meeting last Sunday on account of the storm.

At the Presbyterian church Sunday morning the pastor will preach on "The Hidden Support of Life." The subject of the evening sermon will be "At Their Wit's End."

There will be a meeting of the members of St. Peter's parish at the church Tuesday evening, Mar. 19 at 7:30 standard time. The meeting is for the purpose of considering plans for securing a rector. All members of the parish are expected to be present.

Last Meeting.

The last meeting of the present township board will be held at the clerk's office on Tuesday evening, March 26, 1901, at which time all accounts against the township will receive attention. It is the wish of this board to so wind up its affairs that there will be no accounts to be held over. Kindly send your accounts to either the supervisor or clerk.

STREET TALK.

Notes, Ideas and Remembrances about People and Things in and out of Tecumseh.

GREEN-HAIRED PEOPLE.

Whether it is a fact or not, as often alleged, that jealously makes people green-eyed, it is the current belief that such a thing as green hair was never heard of among men. This belief is not founded on fact, for a number of cases are on record of men and women with hair as green as June grass. Some years ago there was a patient in the St. Rocco Hospital of Pesth, Hungary, who had green hair of a beautiful grass tint, and had been born with it. This, naturally, was a freak of nature, but green hair may be acquired, if desired, by eating certain foods and drinking certain wines colored with oxide of copper—a frequent custom in some continental countries to give a particular color and taste to their wines.—Frank Leslie's Weekly.

The above article seemed strange to me at first but soon I remembered about a man who lived in Tecumseh having green hair and then the rumor seemed common and likely enough.

Years ago a prominent and highly respected citizen of Tecumseh married, for his second wife, a lady equally respected and about his age. Both parties had seen the prime of life, the man possessing a thick head of hair although perfectly white, while the hair of the lady was coal black although of equal heaviness. This couple frequented society to quite an extent and it seemed to the lady that if her husband's hair should be colored a beatiful glossy black, the appearance of both of them would be much improved. The master of the house was made acquainted with her intentions but uttered a loud and final kick. So decided, indeed, was he in his opinions and statements, that for some time the subject was dropped. But when a woman's mind is thoroughly set it is hard for her to give up.

It was a habit of the husband to take, each day after dinner, a long and solid sleep and, as the wife with wakeful eyes watched these daily naps, it occurred to her that the hair coloring process could be executed at such a time and when the loving spouse should see himself with raven black glossy hair, he might be well pleased and bless her for unusual thoughtfulness.

The coal black dye was secured and the next day applied. The master's nap that day was longer than usual and all went well, but in the lady's hurry to put on the liquid, she neglected to read the last clause in the directions which said, "This dye must be dried in a darkened room to preserve the color," and imagine the feelings of both man and wife. when the next morning he beheld himself in the glass with hair colored the most brilliant and livid grass green.

HASTE MAKES WASTE.

Dr. O. Q Jones is an urgent man, work with him is all in earnest and when busy he attends to his affairs quickly and at once. His team also has the same disposition and last Monday morning, when the doctor wheeled the team up in front of the Chinese laundry with a dash, he thought to save time by throwing the bundle onto the walk where the Chinaman could secure it at leisure, but the motion of throwing made the team jump and the bundle landed through the glass in the front door. The last heard of Yee Kee, he was remarking, "Doc. hellee sweatee. Smashee whole flont laundry."

PUG IS DEAD.

Everyone who knows Bertram Wood knew "Pug" and a better broken, kinder dog never lived Friday morning last he was found dead near Lawrence's house and now the whole neighborhood mourns. The man who drops dog poison always gets the wrong dog and is a despicable person anyway.

SAVED HER LIFE.

It is said that many very smart men are unable to make up their minds quickly and know what to do in case of emergency. The other day when the 3:05 Lake Shore train came down from Clinton, there were a whole lot of passengers to get off at Chicago street and by some error the train was ordered out before the people were all discharged from the train. As the train started a number of men jumped and out followed a woman with the same intention. The brakeman met the lady on the platform, promptly grabbed and set her back into the car, then pulled the bell rope to stop the train which was at that time half a block south. Much snow was on the street and, if the lady had been left to her own way, would no doubt have been killed. This brakeman was indeed a quick, thoughtful man and will no doubt make his mark in the railroad business.

WHAT WOULD WE DO?

In these days of labor excitement we often hear of new machines being invented which will throw numbers of men out of employment Not many years ago there was a great outcry against harvesting machinery on this account. A statistician has recently been amusing himself with figures and now states that if all the men and women and children in the United States were to be put to work in the harvest field they could not market the crop of any year without the use of machines. Thus it is the equalization of all things keeps going on and we need not worry about the world coming to an end.

HE SLEPT IN SECURITY.

The Tonic a Small Boy Used For His Weak Feeling.

There is a 5-year-old boy in Massachusetts avenue who is of the blood of patriots. His grandfather was in both the Mexican and civil wars, and his father was also a soldier, consequently the little fellow has heard much "flag" talk in his short life and has exalted ideas of its protective qualities. He was the baby of the family till very recently and occupied a crib bed in his mother's room. When the new baby came, Harold was put to sleep in a room adjoining his mother's, and as he had never slept alone before his small soul was filled with nameless fears which he was too proud to tell in full.

"It's mighty lonesome in here, mamma," he called the first night after he had been tucked in his little white bed.

"Just remember the angels are near you and caring for you," replied mamma from the outer room.

"But, mamma," he objected, "I ain't acquainted with any angels, and I'd be scared of them if they came rustling round, same as I would of any other stranger."

"Now, Harold, you must go to sleep quietly. Nothing will hurt you."

"Can't I have the gas lighted in here?"

"No; mamma doesn't think it necessary, and it is not healthy."

There was silence for some time, and then the small voice piped up again. "Oh, mamma!"

"Yes, dear."

"May I have grandpa's flag?"

"Why, what for? I want you to go right to sleep."

"Please, mamma!" and a small nightgowned figure appeared at the door. "Just let me stick the flag up at the head of my bed, and then I'll go right to sleep, indeed I will! You know the other night grandpa said at the meeting that 'under the protecting folds of the flag the weakest would be safe,' and I feel mighty weak, mamma."

He got the flag, and when his mother looked in on him an hour later he was fast asleep, with a fat little fist under his red cheek, holding fast the end of the "protecting" flag.—Washington Star.

"JES' COMMON OLE MISERY."

Why Rufus Suddenly Decided That He Didn't Have Paralysis.

The boy's name is Rufus, and he was busily engaged in polishing the doctor's shoes while he was being shaved. As was his custom, the doctor said, "How are you feeling, Rufus?"

"I ain't much. Kindly poohly, thank you, doctah," answered the boy.

"What's the matter?"

"Paralysis."

"What?"

"Paralysis."

Had the doctor not been so well acquainted with the negro race, he might have allowed himself to show astonishment. As it was, he determined to see what would result from further inquiries.

"Where's your paralysis?" he asked kindly.

Rufus was drawing a rag swiftly across the left shoe.

"In the right hip, doctah," he answered.

"It's probably rheumatism," suggested the physician.

"No, indeed. It's paralysis. I reckon I knows rheumatism and I knows paralysis. This is suttenly paralysis."

The doctor drew a good sized pin from the lapel of his coat.

"Well, Rufus," he said seriously, "there is only one way to tell. Come here. I'm going to jab this pin in your hip. If it hurts, then you have rheumatism. If you don't feel it, then you are right, and you have paralysis."

The boy did not rise, but drew the rag thoughtfully across the shoe. Finally he said:

"Doctah, I reckon you mus' know more about them things than I do. I know it ain't nothin but jes' common ole misery."—Kansas City Star.

Treasures of the White House.

There are doubtless in every large city in the country larger and more valuable collections of bric-a-brac and art furniture than that to be found in the private apartments of the executive mansion, but it is a question whether there is in the length and breadth of the land any other half so interesting. Rarity is, of course, a universal characteristic of the artistic gems scattered through the home of the presidents, but better than that is the fact that almost every piece is fraught with memories and associations that make it a prized possession. Of the whole number probably half are the gifts of kings and rulers, tokens of appreciation from friendly nations, and the remainder, having been fashioned especially for the White House, have no duplicates anywhere else in the world.—Woman's Home Companion.

Very Like a Scandal.

"This dollar that I hold in my hand," he said, "reminds me of a deep, dark, scandalous secret."

"Oh, George!" his wife exclaimed, dropping her hands in her lap and bending forward eagerly, "tell me about it."

"Yes," he went on, "it reminds me of a secret of that kind, because it's so hard to keep."

And then she refused to speak to him for three hours.—Chicago Times-Herald.

New Hotel.

It is less than one month since Orrin A. Coon, of Detroit, assumed the management of the Central Hotel and began to cater to the traveling public, but that the change in management was needed and the efforts of Mr. Coon to please is appreciated by hotel patrons, is evident when one glances at the register of that now deservedly popular hostlery.

Under the careful supervision of Mrs Coon the entire house has been thoroughly renovated, cleaned and arranged for the comfort and convenience of guests. Mrs. Coon is a model housewife and to make the Central as home-like and comfortable as possible is her one thought.

A competent chef is in charge of the cuisine and in this department the Central is second to no other hotel in the state, even of those where the rates are much higher. This is true of every day in the week, but, realizing that on Sunday busy people have more time to enjoy it, particular attention is given to the dinner. Tired wives and mothers will do well to remember this and that they too can have a day of rest, sure of an excellent Sunday dinner with none of the worry and trouble of its preparation.

As we have said, the register of the Central shows a constantly increasing patronage which fact is proof positive that the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Coon are recognized and appreciated.

What do you think of a sword blade that contains a thousand sheets of metal? Yet they are not uncommon and, as you will readily imagine, are of oriental workmanship. Our painstaking, patient Japanese friends are the makers of them, and a few days ago I had the pleasure of seeing one in a Fourth avenue curiosity shop and had its method of manufacture explained.

The blades of these sabers are made from magnetic iron ores. The steel is produced in small, very thin sheets, and the workman begins by fixing one of them to the end of an iron rod which serves as a handle. To this are soldered other small sheets until the mass has a length of about eight inches, a width of about two inches and a thickness of a little more than a quarter of an inch.

This bar is brought to a white heat, doubled on itself and hammered until it is down to its original dimensions. This process is repeated 15 times. Four similar bars are then soldered together, doubled upon themselves, resoldered and heated, the operation being repeated five times. This process makes the superposed layers so thin that a saber contains at least a thousand sheets of metal.

If you find one of these swords that has a veined appearance, you may know it is caused by alternate layers of iron and steel being soldered together. —New York Herald.

A MATTER OF FAITH.

Many of the Clergy in Michigan Endorse the Little Conqueror

Our religious opinions are, as a whole, a matter of faith. Whatever denomination or sect we follow we pin our faith on the words and teachings of our Pastor. His sincerety is never doubted; that he thoroughly believes his adopted creed is unquestioned. The opinions of the clergy on any subject carry well deserved weight with all classes of people. Many reverend gentlemen in Michigan are testifying for the little conqueror, their praise is not given lightly and only after personal experience. Gratitude and a desire to promote the welfare of the public bring forth such testimony as follow:

"The Rev. F. A. Smith, of 829 First street, Kalamazoo, Mich., says: "When I procured Doan's Kidney Pills I was, at the time, and had been considerably troubled with my kidneys. Backache was quite pronounced, being especially severe when I sat or stood in a stooped position for any length of time. Other symptoms usually attending disordered kidneys plainly indicated what caused the difficulty. Doan's Kidney Pills corrected the annoyance in a very short time and I have not noticed, up to date, any indication of a recurrence. As I took no other medicine there can be no doubt but Doan's Kidney Pills were the direct means of curing me. I am most favorably impressed with them."

STOCK AND STABLE.

STUDY OF VENTILATION OF INTEREST TO STOCKMEN.

Necessity of Cleanliness, Fresh Air and Sunlight to Procure the Best Results—System to Be Used at Pan-American Exposition.

The Pan-American Exposition will prove to be of more genuine benefit to those interested in the proper care of live stock than any previous effort in this direction. Stable construction is a question that appeals with great force to every farmer who is anxious to secure good results. The question of expense is a great barrier to the proper building of this necessity. Unfortunately some of the early examples of good stables were built by men of large means, regardless of what the cost might be. As a result practical farmers were slow to take the matter up, as the idea of a properly constructed stable became at once associated with great expense.

One object of Mr. F. A. Converse, who has charge of the live stock and dairy products at the Exposition, in building a model stable at the Exposition is to counteract this erroneous impression.

A properly constructed stable is not necessarily an expensive one. Cleanliness, fresh air and sunlight, with a modulated temperature, may be obtained in a building of ordinary cheap construction if properly arranged.

A light, cheap framework covered with paper which is protected with a sheathing of very common boarding and covered with a good roof makes a very good start. This should stand on ground that is well drained and exposed to the sunlight, but protected from cold winds. The floor should be of cement and carefully designed to facilitate cleanliness in every particular. Double doors, fly screens and dark blinds should be provided and made to fit properly.

A system of ventilation should be provided that will ventilate. Anything will not do. By excluding the cold and the light ordinarily we also shut out the fresh air, without which no animal can thrive. Many stockmen are careful about the quality of the food, though careless about everything else in connection with the stable. In this manner they are protecting their stock in one direction while leaving them exposed in many others.

Stable air is devitalized by passing through the lungs, it is also being contaminated by chemical decomposition of the excrementum as well as the fumes arising from the fermentation of damp bedding, etc.

To thoroughly understand how to properly ventilate a stable it is necessary to study the circulation of air at changing temperatures, which is governed by fixed laws and may be easily understood. Warm air is lighter than cold air. Generally speaking, foul air is heavier than fresh pure air from the outside, even at the same temperature. Starting from this well known principle, ventilation should be arranged accordingly. Fresh air should be let in at the top and the foul air taken out at the bottom.

By experimenting we find if we smoke a cigar in the middle of a room the smoke goes first to the ceiling, where it spreads in every direction until it reaches the side walls, when it will descend.

This would indicate that we should admit fresh air at or near the center of the ceiling and draw the foul air from the different sides of the room near the base. There are two systems in use in our best stables. One forces the fresh air in, the other, the King system, draws the foul air out. As Mr. Converse prefers the latter, that is the system he will demonstrate at the Exposition.

It consists of an air stack with a hood, the opening of which is turned away from the direction from which the wind is blowing. To this main air pipe are attached feeders from different parts of the stable. These feeders have slide openings to admit and carry off the foul air from near the floor at the sides of the stable. Fresh air is admitted through a central opening in the roof.

As the draft that is created by the hooded stack is sufficient to draw the bottom air from the stable, fresh air must go down through the central opening to take its place, and a change of air is a certainty. To prevent the intake from striking the animals too strong a shield is placed under the opening which assists in directing the flow of fresh air along the ceiling. In this manner it mixes with the warm air that naturally rises in the center of the stable, and all is intermingled and diffused.

With a good stable well ventilated and good feed intelligently fed the winter care of stock should be profitable as well as pleasant.

Epidemics have no bad effects on such stock, and a visit from the board of health has no unpleasant consequences for the owner.

TOWER ON THE PLAZA—PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

PROFUSION OF LIGHT.

More Than Three Hundred Thousand Lamps at Pan-American.

It has been said that the Pan-American Exposition will be a Rainbow City by day and City of Light by night, and if this be true it should prove the most beautiful sight of its kind ever created for the delectation of the human vision.

Much has been written about the illuminations of the Exposition, but the public is scarcely aware of the magnificence of the scene which is to be created by the use of incandescent lights in such generous profusion about the main court of the Exposition and the buildings immediately surrounding it. When one says that 300,000 of these lights are to be used, the figures look large, but they are nevertheless true. Nor does this include all the lights that are to be used in the general illumination of the Exposition, for on the Midway several concessions, such as the Thompson Aeric Cycle, Streets of Mexico and some others will use as many as 2,000 lights each. In the buildings and about the border of the grounds will be arc lights, while incandescent lamps will also be used by many individual exhibitors. Thus the figures 300,000 will be considerably increased. The illumination of the Electric Tower is going to be not only astonishing and novel, but truly artistic.

Automobile Exhibit.

The automobile has won such favor that the construction of these vehicles has become one of the important new industries of the world. In any new and prominent field like this the United States, with its wealth of active inventive minds, is expected to take the lead. That this country does lead will be demonstrated by the exhibit made at the Pan-American Exposition.

An Instructive Exhibit.

On the street, in the stores, in dwellings, all about, there is evidence of the advancement of that wonderful force, electricity. Is it any wonder that people in all walks of life, of all classes, want to know about it? This is why the electrical exhibits of the Pan-American Exposition are destined to interest and instruct so many.

On Better Authority.

"You are looking handsome tonight, Miss Flite," Bagster remarked in the pauses of the dance.

"So Mr. Smythe told me a few minutes ago."

Bagster (only remembering that Smythe is his hated rival)—Well, you wouldn't believe anything that chump said, would you?—Philadelphia Times.

Conflicting Orders.

"The average photographer," said Henpeck musingly, "is an unreasonable creature."

"What's the matter now?" asked his friend.

"Oh, while my wife was sitting for her picture today the fool photographer sung out: 'Look pleasant, please. Be natural!'"—Philadelphia Press.

Black Teeth.

The custom of women in Japan at marriage giving their teeth an everlasting coating of blacking is practiced now by only a small percentage, but there are still seen in the cities hundreds of women hideous with black ivory, and dentists' showcases contain sets of black teeth.

The Time to Break the Rule.

There is an anecdote in some volume of French theatrical memoirs narrating an experience of Mlle. Clairon, the great tragic actress, with a pupil of hers, a girl of strong natural gifts for the histrionic art, but far too frequent and too exuberant in her gesticulation. So when the pupil was once to appear before the public in a recitation Mlle. Clairon bound the girl's arms to her side by a stiff thread and sent her thus upon the stage.

With the first strong feeling she had to express the pupil tried to raise her arms, only to be restrained by the thread. A dozen times in the course of her recitation she was prevented from making the gestures she desired until at the very end she could stand it no longer, and in the climax of her emotion she broke her bonds and swung her hands to her head.

When she came off the stage, she went humbly to where Mlle. Clairon was standing in the wings and apologized for having snapped the thread.

"But you did quite right!" said the teacher. "That was the time to make the gesture, not before!"—Brander Matthews in Harper's Magazine.

Getting Thin

is all right, if you are too fat; and all wrong, if too thin already.

Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: overwork and under-digestion.

Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it—true—but, by it, you can. There's a limit, however; you'll pay for it.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the readiest cure for "can't eat," unless it comes of your doing no work—you can't long be well and strong, without some sort of activity.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other. If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

Fashion's Demands.

The conscientious young man of fashion now brushes his hair differently when wearing a hat. Chancellor Tisdall, the acknowledged Beau Brummel of Dublin in his youth, had inexpressibles variously cut for walking and for sitting and once sat down in the former with disastrous results. Not long ago a milliner advertised with a newly invented hat that it "necessitated the mouth worn slightly open." What shall we come to next?—Vanity Fair.

PURE BLOOD

Necessary to Life. Vinol Makes it.

POOR BLOOD CAUSES ERUPTIONS AND WEAKNESS.

Vinol Makes Pure, Rich, Red Blood.

BECAUSE WE KNOWN THIS WE GUARANTEE ITS ACTION.

Impoverished blood is a sure sign of internal disorders. We see every day too many people whose faces plainly show that there is something radically wrong.

We want all of our fellow-citizens to know of our splendid blood purifier and blood maker.

We refer to Vinol.

Vinol, as we have before stated, is a purely scientific preparation.

Vinol owes its virtue to the fact that it contains in a highly concentraced state the active curative principles, taken from the livers of live cods—the same elements that formerly were found in cod-liver oil, and which made it famous.

Vinol does not contain the grease or fat that characterized cod-liver oil and made it in many cases worthless.

Vinol acts upon every one of the great vital organs, and by invigorating and giving them strength, enables them to properly perform their functions.

Vinol's effect on the stomach is marvelous. It tones up this, the greatest of the organs of the body, and enables it to obtain from the food which is taken into it the necessary elements to create flesh and muscle tissue, bone structure and pure, rich, red blood.

We are in receipt of a letter from a Salvation Army woman which reads as follows:

"I took Vinol after a bad attack of grippe, and so much good did it do me that I persuaded my sister to take it. She was all tired out. Had no appetite and her blood was very poor. It did her as much good as it did me."—BETSY HABERSHAW, 718 River St., Fall River, Mass.

Won't you please come in and see us? We are always glad to extol the merits of Vinol.

We will give you back your money if you don't find Vinol will do all we claim it will. Could any one do more for you?

FARMERS MAKE KILLING

Pass Bill Prohibiting the Coloring of Oleomargarine to Resemble Butter.

BILL IS VIGOROUSLY FOUGHT

Coming Week of Great Importance So Far as Disposition of Bills Are Concerned.

Lansing, Mich., March 19.—The farmers of Michigan had their day in the legislature during the past week, and no one can say that they did not make the most of it. The result of their killing constitutes the most important bit of legislation of the week. This was the final passage by the house of Senator Goodell's bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored to resemble butter. The farmers of the state and their representatives in the legislature had set their hearts on passing this bill just as it was introduced, and they did it. No amendments were permitted, although a number were offered. The bill was vigorously fought on the ground that it was class legislation, etc., but its friends stood by their guns, and passed it by a vote of 72 to 23.

Evidences are constantly increasing that the numerous bills providing for new state boards, state institutions, etc., are doomed. It will be surprising if a single one passes. During the past few days the house committee on state affairs has done some very commendable work in this direction, burying in the committee room pigeon hold bills providing for the examination and licensing of architects and also creating the office of state accountant whose duty it shall be to perfect a uniform system of bookkeeping for cities and counties. Most all of this class of bills have been referred to the state affairs committee, and Chairman Alward, who is a hard headed, intelligent farmer, emphatically asserts that none of them will be reported out if he can prevent such action.

It is expected that this will be a week of great importance so far as the consideration and disposition of important bills are concerned. Much headway will probably be made with the railroad taxation bills. The first hearing on these measures is set for tonight, and numerous representatives of interested corporations are here to be heard on the subject. The bills cover railroad, telegraph, telephone and express companies, and the discussion will cover both the specific and ad valorem taxation of these classes of property. The principle measure along the line of ad valorem taxation is the Chandler bill, which covers all classes of property named. It is doubtful, however, if express companies can be retained in this bill it having been discovered that the constitution expressly limits specific taxation to corporations, whereas the American Express company is not a corporation, but a joint stock company. The queer thing about this discovery is that it has just been made, and the company has for years paid a specific tax without protest, not having been aware of this phase of the situation.

Lots of Material for Speechmaking.

There will be no lack of material for the legislators and corporation representatives to talk about, there being numerous bills aside from the Chandler bill which has previously been described in these columns. The lateset ad valorem tax bill was completed by the executive committee of the state grange since my last letter was written, and is now in the hands of the committee on railroads. It, of course, has the endorsement of the state grange, which instructed the executive committee to prepare it. The measure provides not only for the assessment of the property of railroad, telegraph, telephone and express companies, but also of palace, sleeping car and union depot companies, the assessments to be made by the state tax commission. The property is to be assessed at its cash value, which is to be determined from the reports made by the companies to the state, the value as listed on the stock exchange in New York and Boston, and any other evidence that can be procured that will go to establish such true cash value. The bill makes it the duty of the companies affected to annually file in the month of May with the secretary of state a statement of their property income, its location, and all other data necessary in making the assessment. The tax commission is to determine the average rate of taxation paid in the state for all purposes by dividing the aggregate taxes for the year by the aggregate assessed valuation of the property of the state. A departure from the Atkinson law, which was held unconstitutional under the old constitution, is the provision directing that the governor and attorney general shall act with the tax commission as a board to review the assesssments. The former bill made the action of the assessors final. The revenue collected under this act is to be credited to the school fund.

Representative McCallum will endeavor to induce the committee and the legislature to substitute for the ad valorem tax bill a specific tax measure he has just completed, believing the latetr to be the better method. He has simply increased the rates in the present law so that the annual income of the state from the railroad companies will amount to $2,250,000 per year approximately, or an increase of about $1,200,000 over last year's revenue.

The electors of the state, as the result of last week's legislation, will be called upon to vote upon two and possibly three proposed amendments to the constitution. Both houses have passed the joint resolution submitting a proposition to provide a method of compensating members of the legislature. Under the present arrangement the solons receive $3 per day for the entire sitting of the legislature, together with mileage at the rate of 10 cents per mile for one trip to and from their homes. The proposition is to substitute for this a salary of $1,000 for the full term of two years and mileage. The advocates of the change contend that the present compensation is niggardly, and while that proposed is not much better, it will enable the state to avail itself of the services of a better class of legislators. The second proposition to be submitted is to amend the constitution so that a valid law may be enacted to permit the indeterminate sentencing of convicts, thus leaving the prison officials to be the judges of how long they shall be incarcerated. A law of this kind which was enacted several years ago was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court.

The other measure which will doubtless be submitted to the people is an amendment doing away with the fifty-day limit for introducing bills in the legislature, leaving the legislators free to introduce bills whenever the spirit moved up to the day of final adjournment. The limit now observed is but little short of a nuisance, and it results in practically nothing being done during the first fifty days of the session other than the introduction of bills.

Colby Comes Up Smiling.

Representative Colby has come up smiling after the defeat of his pet measure abolishing all political conventions in Wayne county and providing for the nomination of all candidates and the election of all delegates by direct vote, under the Australian ballot system, and has induced the house committee on elections to make a unanimous and favorably report on a bill of the same nature which applies to the entire state. When the Wayne county bill was so ruthlessly slaughtered in the senate some of the senators who opposed it, gave as a reason for so doing the fact that Wayne county should not be treated differently from the balance of the state in this respect, and broadly intimated that they would support a general bill of this nature. Although doubting their sincerity somewhat Mr. Colby proposes to give them an opportunity to show their colors. It is hardly probable that the bill will pass the senate.

House Passes the Wade Bill.

The house has passed the Wade bill amending the law creating the state live stock sanitary commission so as to provide that at least one of the three members shall be a veterinarian. In speaking in support of the bill Representative Wade said that the present commisisoners are all farmers, and charged that they cannot diagnose diseases of animals, thus rendering the commission useless notwithstanding the great expense of maintaining it.

The house appears to have overreached itself in amending the bill exempting the property of Grand Army posts from taxation. The amendment exempts the property of all secret and fraternal orders. This is considered altogether too sweeping an exemption in the senate, and that body will either restrict the exemption of Grand Army property or kill the bill altogether.

Ambitious politicians throughout the state will be pleased to know that a start has been made toward disposing of the obnoxious law which requires candidates to file sworn statements of their election expenses of every name and nature. It is perhaps just as well to repeal this law for the reason that only a small per cent. of the total number of candidates ever paid the slightest attention to it, while not a few of those who did warped their consciences by the statements they made under oath. In fact, the introducer of the bill frankly stated that all the law had accomplished was to manufacture a few perjurers.

Will Hold Appropriations Down.

Chairman Dingley and his colleagues on the ways and means committee have entered upon their announced policy of keeping down the appropriations. They commenced on the bill appropriating $15,000 for the expenses of the Northern Normal school at Marquette for the last half of the current fiscal year. As amended by the committee the bill appropriates only $11,000. The committee does not propose to cripple any institution, but does propose to hold the appropriations down to actual needs, leaving the frills to be provided for by some future legislature. It is only natural for the management of a state institution to take much pride in extending it and making it an ideal, and also for the legislative committee in charge of such institution to look upon it as deserving of just a little better treatment than any other institution on the list. This explains why appropriation bills as drawn are generally a trifle extravagant in their provisions, and why the budget as finally passed is always a number of hundred thousand dollars less than asked for.

Hardy Bill Attracting Attention.

The Hardy bill, which makes it a crime for a hypotist to make a person commit an offense while under hypnotic influence, is attracting considerable attention. Most of the legislature took very little stock in the measure until a few days ago, believing that hypotism was simply a fake. However, a pretty young girl happened along and gave some fifty of the legislators a demonstration of what can be accomplished by a person through influence over another, and now many of the statesmen are wabbling. They really don't know whether the so-called science is a myth or not. It is understood that further exhibitions will be given before the committee reports on the bill.

The controversy between Robert Oakman and William T. Dust over the title to the office of state tax commisisoner for the term of four years will soon be decided by the supreme court. Much to Oakman's disgust Dust succeeded in arranging with Secretary of State Warner for getting the question before the court. This was accomplished by Warner refusing to accept Dust's oath of office for filing, whereupon the would-be commisisoner asked the court for a mandamus to compel such acceptance and filing.

Another interesting question now before the court is whether the governor has power to employ special legal counsel without the approval of the attorney general. The latter claims that he has not, and for this reason is defending the board of state auditors in an action brought by ex-Supreme Justice Edward Cahill to compel the auditors to allow his claim for legal services rendered Governor Pingree, the auditors having refused to allow the claim solely because it was not approved by the attorney general.

Steer Clear of Smoking Cars.

"I seldom advise my patients to stop smoking, because I know it's a waste of breath to do so," remarked a suburban physician yesterday. "In many cases I do advise moderation in the use of the weed, and when a patient has a weak throat there is one thing that I positively insist upon, and that is that he shall not ride in the smoking cars attached to railroad trains. Breathing that atmosphere for half an hour will do a man more injury than smoking half a dozen cigars in the open air or in a properly ventilated room that is not crowded with other smokers. Smoke if you must, I say, but steer clear of smoking cars."—Philadelphia Record.

FROM THE ORIENT

Brutal Assault on Major Mulford and his Wife at Kioto.

RUSSIAN OUTRAGES REPORTED

The Provisions of Russia's Control In Manchuria As Given By a Chinese Paper—Other News From the Far East.

Victoria, B. C., March 19.—The steamer Kinshiu Maru arrived Monday from Yokonama and the orient. She brought news of a brutal assault on Maj. H. B. Mulford of the Thirty-ninth infantry and his wife at Kioto, while returning from Manila. A mob of 100 attacked the Mulfords while they were embarking on a train. Their clothing was torn and both were roughly used, despite the major's strenuous resistance. He was in uniform.

The North China Daily News tells of an outrage committed by Russians at New Chwang, where a party of Cossacks pursuing Chinese into the British consulate, shot and killed the watchman there.

The North German Lloyd mail steamer Muchen was lost near Yap, one of the Caroline islands lying 800 miles east of the Philippines, while en route to Yokohama from Australia. All hands were saved.

Japanese companies in Echigo, where the Standard Oil company have begun operations, have formed a combine to compete with the American company.

Jiji prints the following details of the provisions of Russia's control of Manchuria, gleaned from the most reliable sources. It says, by its Pekin correspondent: "This Russo-Chinese secret agreement provides for the nominal restoration of Manchuria to the Chinese, when peace is declared, but Russia intends to station troops there to protect her railways. Should a disturbance arise in China these troops are to be dispatched to assist the Chinese government. In the event of China wishing to station her own troops in Manchuria, she must first refer the matter to Russia. The importation of arms and ammunition into Manchuria by China is prohibited.

"Local officials are to be appointed by Russia and no other foreigners than Russians are to be appointed to the positions. The Chinese forces, army and navy, in northern China are to be drilled by no other foreigners than Russians. A system of self-government shall be proclaimed at Kinchow. No concessions for mines and railways shall be granted to other nations than Russia, who alone shall collect taxes north of Hai Chow. The expenses in the recent campaign incurred on the railway and elsewhere shall be borne by the Chinese. China shall also concede other privileges to Russia as compensation for these damages, and shall permit Russia to construct a branch railway to the great wall."

In Korea the Russians seem to be installing themselves well, according to news from Kin Shin to a late issue of the Korea Review. It says that of late all Korean army officers have adopted Russian military uniforms.

The Koreans were much agitated when the last mail left over reports that the former leader of the "righteous army," Chi Yu Sui In, was bringing a Chinese army across the Yalu intent upon asking the death of the Korean queen.

Do Not Pay Promptly.

London, March 19.—The difficulty of obtaining payment of bills from some members of the British aristocracy was illustrated by a case heard Monday when a decorator sued Georgiana, dowager countess of Dudley, for £11,000 sterling for work done on the countess' residences. Her ladyship pleaded that the charges were unreasonable. Counsel for the plaintiff received a check for £1,500 on account. "That check," counsel added, "was post-dated and twice dishonored before we got the money." The plaintiff, in the course of his evidence, said Lady Dudley told a customer that it took him six years to collect a previous bill for repairs on her house in Grosvenor square. He, the plaintiff, explained that one had to give long—very long—credit in the west end of London. The case was adjourned.

Ordered to Produce Letter.

Omaha, Neb., March 19.—James Callahan, the alleged kidnaper, and his attorneys were Monday served with an order of the court commanding them to produce at Callahan's trial Wednesday the original letter sent to Edward A. Cudahy demanding $25,000 ransom for his son. This letter was inclosed in the sack of gold deposited by Mr. Cudahy at the place signified by the abductors. The county attorney and police say that they have evidence that Callahan has the communication. Fourteen new witnesses have been subpoenaed for the state, and all preparations are now being made to begin the trial Wednesday.

Left for Hawaii.

Knoxville, Tenn., March 19.—A colony of 100 negroes left Knoxville Monday for Hawaii under a three-year contract to the Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co. The party was raised by S. R. Maples, an intelligent negro, who goes with the colonists. The negroes are to be used on a large sugar plantation. In raising the party an attempt was made to get whole families, for the reason that the company has had difficulty in keeping American negroes without families on the plantations. The attempt was partially successful.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, March 19.—Monday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve, in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $150,643,705; gold, $91,846,694.

When Mr. Gladstone was alive, he was once discussing with some friends at Hawarden castle the greatest day in the world's history. Each member of the group was asked to say on which day he, in the past or the future, would prefer to live, it being supposed that he should have his present knowledge and afterward return to his present existence. Mr. Gladstone chose a day in Greece when Athens was at its highest glory.

A DISASTROUS BLAZE.

St. Louis Visited By a Fire, Causing $100,000 Loss.

St. Louis, March 19.—Perhaps the most disastrous fire in the history of the south side Monday afternoon burned the ice storage plant of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co., the repair shop of the American Car & Foundry Co., together with a number of box cars, the factory of Stule & Co., pickle manufacturers, five rooming houses and a number of small sheds. The total damage is estimated at $100,000, the greater part of which is covered by insurance. Two men, employes of the American Car & Foundry Co., were injured, but not seriously.

The burned district embraced two square blocks bounded by Zepp, Utah, First and Kosciusko streets. The fire broke out at 12:25 o'clock in one of the Anheuser-Busch ice houses, all of which are connected. A spark from a passing switch engine is credited with having ignited straw in the loft. While the fire was in progress a stiff southeast wind blew across the river from the Illinois side, fanning the flames and making the work of the firemen an exceedingly difficult one. Piles of lumber adjacent to the storage house quickly ignited, causing an intense heat. Several valuable buildings, which escaped damage, were seriously threatened.

By far the greater danger attached to buildings more remote from the scene of destruction, but in the direct line of the wind. The high wind lifted burning embers and carried them for blocks to the northwest, terrorizing residents, and several times the department was compelled to divide its force in answer to reports of the igniting of fires elsewhere. No buildings not in the immediate path of the flames suffered damage, however, although cautious residents and business men as far away as six blocks from the scene removed goods and furnishings from dwellings and stores in a fear that the fire would develop into a widespread conflagration.

Following is an estimated list of the losses: Anheuser-Busch ice storage plant, $37,000; American Car & Foundry Co. car shed, $10,000; 50 box cars belonging to the Anheuser-Busch and Wm. J. Lemp Brewing companies, $25,000; Stules & Co.'s plant, $5,000; five rooming houses, $15,000.

ANOTHER YANKEE VICTORY.

Harry Harris Defeated "Pedlar" Palmer in Fifteen Rounds.

London, March 19.—At the National Sporting club last night, Harry Harris of Chicago defeated "Pedlar" Palmer of England on points in a 15-round boxing contest.

Harris had the advantage of nearly five inches in stature over his opponent. Both were in splendid condition. The attendance was large, as the match excited the greatest interest. Harris was the favorite in the betting, the odds being 5 to 4.

In the opening rounds Harris had the worst of the exchanges, but from the fourth round he made the most of his extra reach, and in the sixth round had his opponent in a bad plight.

The Englishman showed indomitable pluck, and in each of the five succeeding rounds went to his corner in a dazed state. Toward the end Palmer put in a gallant effort and was quite as strong as his rival, but Harris renewed his jabs on the face and won a fine contest on points. Palmer was badly punished about the face, but his courage earned him the applause of all present. So far as points were concerned, it was a one-sided battle, Palmer failing to display his accustomed dash.

Postponed Indefinitely.

New York, March 19.—The hearing before United States Commissioner Shields in the charges of swindling against George Howard, charged with luring Englishmen across here and obtaining money from them under false pretences, to have been held Monday, was postponed indefinitely. Howard's counsel, W. J. Rose, said his client was too ill with pneumonia to appear.

Mills Closed Down.

Fall River, Mass., March 19.—The Chase, Robeson, Merchants, American linen and Metacomet cotton mills, operating 350,000 spindles, were stopped Monday in pursuance of agreement to curtail production. It is probable that next week the majority of the mills in this city, including the Laurel Lake mills, which at first had decided to close yesterday, will be shut down.

Suffers No Pain.

Paris, March 19.—M. De Rodays, who was wounded last Saturday by the Count de Castellane in a duel, is without fever and suffers no pain. The bullet has been located with the X-rays and will probably be extracted to-day.

Gover Is Sixty-Four.

Princeton, N. J., March 19.—Ex-President Cleveland spent Monday, his 64th birthday, at home with Mrs. Cleveland and their children. He entertained no callers. Congratulatory telegrams in abundance from friends were received.

Whole Family Burned.

Wellston, O., March 19.—The charred bodies of Jeff Hill, his wife and five children, were found Monday night in the smoldering embers of a burning house. Hill and his family lived in a log cabin northeast of Wellston two miles. Their nearest neighbor, Edward McGinnis, discovered the house in flames at a late hour last night. It seems that only one door opened out of the room in which the seven members of the family were sleeping. The fire caught in front of that door, blocking the only way of escape. The whole family perished, and a little yellow dog, the pet of a younger child, was the only living thing in the house that survived. It is generally supposed that the fire caught from a wood stove, although the theory is advanced that the family may have been murdered and the house burned to hide the crime.

THE LEGISLATURE

Loomis' Liquor Bill Laid on the Table in the Senate.

SENATE GIVEN GOOD ADVICE

By Ex-Senator Thompson, Who Suggests An Adjournment and a Journey Homeward—Several Bills Referred to Committees.

Lansing, Mich., March 19.—In the senate Monday night, Senator Murfin caused to be taken from the committee of the whole and referred to the judiciary committee Senator Loomis' bill prohibiting the selling of liquor within 500 feet of a school or church. Atwood moved to amend to refer to the committee on religious and benevolent institutions, saying that Loomis had requested this. Helme offered as a substitute that the bill go to the committee on liquor traffic, insisting that this committee was constituted for the purpose of handling bills on this subject. Murfin said that bills had to go to the judiciary committee, as it was of the greatest importance, and a five-man committee could give it the best attention. Further than this, he said, there is a grave question of its constitutionality, and its title is clearly defective. Murfin said the passage of the bill would cut off three-fourths of the saloons in his district and cause a loss of thousands of dollars annually to the taxpayers of Wayne county. The matter was disposed of by a withdrawal of all motions and tabling the bill to await the return of Loomis.

Ex-Senator W. G. Thompson and ex-Rep. Lou Burch stirred this up. Ex-Senator Thompson was invited to address the senate. He said he was no "dowager senator" with a lot of advice to give. If he were to give any advice at all, it would be to adjourn and go home. He believed the senators' private business would be benefited by such action, and knew the state would be the gainer.

Senator Baugham had three bills taken from the table and referred to the committee on finance and appropriations. They relate, respectively, to the salary of the dairy and food commissioner, the regulation of the manufacture and sale of black pepper, and amending the law relative to the adulteration of food products. Kelly had the Muskegon charter bill passed and given immediate effect. When the bill relative to elections in Calumet township, Calumet county, was returned, as per Senator Fuller's request, all steps that had been taken were retraced and the bill was amended so as to provide that the board "may" instead of "shall" erect certain election precincts. The bill was then passed.

On Senator Murfin's motion Rep. Bland's house bill amending Detroit's charter was taken from the table and referred to the committee on cities and villages.

Attempted Suicide.

Flint, Mich., March 19.—Milo Miller, a well-known farmer living in Elba township near the Genesee county line, put two bullets into his head and one in his body with a revolver Monday morning in a desperate attempt at suicide, and will die. His wife attempted to stop him, but was compelled to desist by threats that he would shoot her. Miller is about 70 years of age and was suffering from abcess of the neck, which made him despondent, as he feared he had a cancer. Besides his wife he has two sons by a former marriage. One of them, Frank, who is now living in the west, attempted to commit suicide several years ago with poison and by shooting.

Are Far Apart.

Bay City, Mich., March 19.—The session of the coal miners and operators for the purpose of agreeing on the wage scale for the coming year commenced here Monday. The miners have been in session in Saginaw for a week and have formulated the demands. They want a 10 per cent raise and the operators are demanding a reduction of 10 per cent from the present scale, which runs out April 1. They are now paying more per ton for mining than are the operators of Ohio, Indiana or Illinois, and declare that they find this increased cost a serious handicap in doing business in competition with mines in other states.

Cut Her Throat.

Eaton Rapids, Mich., March 19.—Mrs. Alonzo Childs committed suicide Sunday evening by cutting her throat. She was partly deranged.

The arpa, or drum, of the south Pacific islands is of wood, one end resembling a vase and the other evidently made in imitation of a shark's head. The head is covered with snake or fish skins.

It cannot be too often repeated that it is not helps, but obstacles, not facilities, but difficulties that make men.—W. Mathews.

A Horrible Outbreak.

"Of large sores on my little daughter's head developed into a case of scald head" writes C. D. Isbell, of Morganton Tenn., but Bucklen's Arnica Salve completely cured her. It's a guaranteed cure for Eczema, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Sores, Ulcers and Piles. Only 25 cents at C. A. Wright's.

REMANDED TO JAIL.

Cashier Johnson Could Not Furnish $10,000 Bail.

Columbus, O., March 19.—Charles A. Johnson, the absconding cashier of the First National bank at Niles, Mich., was arraigned here before United States Commissioner Johnson and held under a bond of $10,000. He was unable to furnish it and was remanded to jail to await the orders of Judge A. C. Thompson of the United States district court at Cincinnati relative to his return to Michigan.

He was very nervous when he appeared before the commissioner. The veins on his forehead stood out like whipcords, while he listened to the reading of the affidavit which charged him with having stolen $150,000. He retained Attorney E. C. Irvine to defend him, and, through his counsel, waived the preliminary examination. The hearing was very brief, and when it was concluded Johnson was taken to the county jail, where he will be kept until the orders of Judge Thompson are received.

He was a little more inclined to talk yesterday than he was when arrested. He said that the bucket shop which was operated over the Niles bank was responsible for his trouble. He denied, however, that the defalcation will reach $100,000, but admitted that it will run away up into the thousands. When he had talked with his attorney he refused to make any other statement and declined positively to discuss the shortage when question as to the disposition of the money or the amount which he is in position to restore to the bank.

The United States officers say, however, that he has spent nearly all he stole playing the markets. The money found on him amounted to $400 and a certificate of deposit for $1,000 is probably all that he has left. He says he is much relieved by his arrest, and prefers it to the nervous tension of being hunted by the officers. His health is badly shattered, and it is very doubtful if he will survive a prison sentence if convicted.

HON. MARK S. BREWER DEAD.

A Well-Known Michigan Man Dies at Washington.

Washington, March 19.—Hon. Mark S. Brewer of Michigan, a member of the civil service commission, died here last night from a complication of diseases. Mr. Brewer had been at home sick for the last ten days, although for some time past his health has been poor. He was 64 years of age, and leaves a widow. The funeral will be held at Pontiac, Mich., Thursday. Mr. Brewer was at one time active in the politics of his state. He served as a state senator several terms and was in congress for four terms. From 1881 to 1885 he was in the consular service, being stationed at Berlin. He has been a member of the civil service commission for several years.

Smallpox at Flint.

Flint, Mich., March 19.—Four new cases of smallpox were reported Sunday to the board of health. All the persons affected have for some time past been in quarantine. The cases are all mild and the health board has the situation well in hand. The pest house in Burton will be abandoned in a short time.

Manderson Rearrested.

Albion, Mich., March 19.—S. B. Manderson, who was released from the county jail Monday after serving a term for obtaining money under false pretenses, was rearrested and brought here to stand trial on a similar charge. He will be tried before Judge Smith to-day.

Bloody Battle.

Chicago, March 19.—A special to the Chronicle from Lexington, Ky., says: Ten men were wounded in a bloody battle between rival political factions at Caney, Morgan county, on Sunday. A primary election was being held in Caney and a dispute arose, it is said, over the question of the right of certain persons to cast their ballots. Nearly every man at the polling place was armed and as the quarrel progressed weapons were drawn. The first shot was the signal for a general fight, and when the smoke cleared away ten wounded men were lying on the ground. They were carried to neighboring houses and physicians were summoned. The doctors stated, however, that none of the victims would die.

A messenger carried the news of the affray to West Liberty, but he knew none of the details beyond those given. The names of the wounded are not known.

Insane Woman's Suicide.

Norwalk, O., March 19.—Mrs. John McMahon committed suicide here Monday by jumping from the Wheeling & Lake Erie railroad bridge to the bank of the river below, a distance of 60 feet. Her head sank in the soft mud and death was caused by suffocation. It is believed she was insane.

Still No Choice.

Lincoln, Neb., March 19.—The following ballot was taken yesterday for United States senator: Allen, fusion, 42; Hitchcock, fusion, 42; D. E. Thompson, 31; Crouse, 7; Currie, 11; Meiklejohn, 23; Hinshaw, 17; Rosewater, 17; scattering, 14.

A Queen Who Married Her Brothers.

At 17 years of age Cleopatra was married to her half brother, Ptolemy Dionysius, who was then 13. This was because of the will of his father, who left him the throne on condition of the marriage with his sister. They reigned jointly under the guardianship of the Romans until Cleopatra became dissatisfied with her brother's attempt to gain sole power. She plotted against him, and, obtaining the aid of Julius Cæsar, she brought about Ptolemy's death. Thereupon she married another brother, a boy of 11, whom she later poisoned, assuming sole power 43 B. C. With her death (30 B. C.) ended the dynasty of Ptolemy in Egypt.—Woman's Home Companion.

The Sword.

There is only one sword factory in the United States, a Massachusetts concern, and that one has ample capacity for supplying the domestic demand for swords. The saber lost its efficiency as a cavalry weapon as far back as the war of the rebellion, and the increased range of rifles has made the sword equally obsolete as an implement of actual combat. It is about as dangerous now as a bandmaster's baton and serves much the same purpose.—New York Tribune.

The Stimulus.

"Do you think that genius is moved to exert itself by inspiration?"

"Sometimes," answered the very serious young man, "but oftener by the expiration of the period for which rent has been paid."—Washington Star.

Eugene J. Hall, the poet and publisher, says that one dose of Foley's Honey and Tar restored his voice when hoarseness threatened to prevent his lecture at Central Music Hall, Chicago. Nothing else as good. J. J. Orr.

MY CAPTIVE.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER,

Author of "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Sun of Saratoga," Etc.

[Copyright, 1900, by Joseph A. Altsheler.]

I went back to the window and looked out once more. The besieging army was taking its comfort. The part which had stretched itself on the ground remained stretched, and the part which watched sagged more than ever toward the horizontal. It was a lazy army, that was evident, and I resolved that I would set it an example of superiority.

Having made these brave resolutions, I sat down on the stool and leaned my head once more against the wall, not because I was tired and sleepy, but merely that I might reserve my strength for a crisis, the most necessary thing in the world for a soldier, every man of experience knowing that an army fights better if it goes into battle well fed, well clothed and well rested. It was a good argument, that bore extension, and I closed my eyes that they, too, might have rest, for they felt weary and clogged. Then, do what I would or could, weariness and sleep took charge of me. Tired muscles rose in open and defiant rebellion against mind and will. The combat was short and fierce, but matter triumphed over mind, and in five minutes I was in the midst of a sleep that was heavenly with rest, unpeopled by bad dreams, with my head back against the wall and my breathing long and regular. Meanwhile the bed of coals on the hearth grew smaller and paler. The rim of fire narrowed. Coals turned from red to black and then to gray and crumbled into ashes. The darkness crept up to the very edge of the hearthstone and then invaded it. The girl was completely in the shadows, and the pale glimmer of the fire was but a faint light left in the room.

The sleeping man and the sleeping girl were tired, very tired, and they slept soundly. If they had dreams, they were pleasant ones, and no thought of danger entered into them. The men around the campfire had moved away to the other side of the world, and the little cabin was peaceful for them, inside and outside. Sleeping thus, they did not see the men rise from the campfire and approach the hut, now veiled in a darkness which made such a movement safe. They reached the cabin without alarm or a sign from the watcher who was not watching, and at last the leader tried the shutter of the window. He pried at it with his knife and moved it a little. Then he put his ear to the crack and could hear nothing within. Replacing his ear with his eye, he could see the feeble glimmer of the fire and nothing more. He was sure that those whom he wished to take were asleep, and he exulted, for a fierce anger mingled with his other desires to recapture both. He pried again at the window, and with greater leverage it yielded further, and wood scraped against wood. He stopped and listened again, but the inmates of the cabin never stirred.

Putting his ear to the wide crack that now intervened between the shutter and the wall, he listened again and heard the steady, regular breathing of some one inside and below. He knew it was the breathing of a sleeping man, too loud and strong for a woman, too even for one awake, and he reached up and pulled the shutter wide open on its rude leather hinges. Then he grasped the edge of the window with both hands and pulled himself up.

My sleep grew troubled at last and then turned into a nightmare. Some huge wild beast, after the fashion of beasts in nightmares, was sitting on my chest and blowing his breath in my face, while I had no power to move a muscle. I was cold to the marrow and waited for him to devour me, but instead he dwindled away and became misty. With one great effort I threw him off my chest and sprang to my feet. My head struck against somebody else's head as I sprang up, and that somebody else swore an oath that had the savor neither of a nightmare nor a dream, but of reality.

Cold air and moonlight rushed in at the window, but most of the passage was filled up by the shoulders and head of a large man whose face I could not see owing to the imperfect light. He held in his hand a pistol which he fired at me, but now the imperfect light was to my advantage and not his, for his bullet, avoiding me, buried itself with a chuck in the log walls, and the report confined in the small room roared like a cannon shot.

Moved more by impulse and instinct than by thought, I snatched out my own pistol and fired at the head in the window. The man uttered a deep sigh; the body dropped forward and swayed there; I heard the light drip, drip of something on the floor, and then the body fell inside the room.

The girl, suddenly awakened by the terrible sounds and half in a maze, cried out in fright and then began to ask in a high, trembling voice what had happened.

"The British have attacked us," I said. "One of them was in the shadow, and I threw him back. Stand out of the range of the window." I did not want her to see the thing lying on the floor under the window, and I shoved the table in front of it.

She obeyed, for I spoke the last sentence very sharply. The window was wide open, and expecting to see another face there I held my second pistol ready, but none appeared, and I had no doubt that they feared Crowder was dead.

Taking the risk, I reached out an arm, seized the shutter and slammed it shut, securing it as best I could with the leather strap and nail used as a fastening. Then, with my ear near the crevice, I listened, but could not hear our enemies. I feared at first to look out lest I should receive a bullet, but still hearing nothing I applied my eye and saw that the men had gone back to their fire. They were all there—four. I counted them and knew that none was missing. They were deliberating evidently over the fall of their leader and what next to do, and I took an immediate resolution.

"Light the candle," I said to the girl. "Hold it to the fire. There's enough heat left to start the wick to burning."

She did so and saw that something lay behind the table.

"What is that?" she cried.

"The dancer and singer of last night," I replied, seeing that I would have to tell. "The leader of those desperadoes outside came into our fort, but he came into his grave."

She retreated, shuddering, to the farthest corner of the room.

"Now, you do exactly as I say," I continued. "Remember that you are the rank and file of this army, and I am its commander."

"I will obey you," she said.

I quickly reloaded my pistol.

Then I shoved the table away again and, overcoming my repulsion, dragged the dead body to a sitting position. A chill struck into my marrow, but I dragged off the red British coat and, having thrown off my own, put it on. Then I gathered up the wallet of food and Old Put's bridle and took down the bar from the door.

"Come," I said; "we are going to leave this place while they are planning by the fire and their backs are turned to us."

It was a bold measure, involving many risks, but I believed that it would succeed if we kept our courage and presence of mind. For at least two or three minutes they would think I was Crowder, victorious, and that would be worth much. When I had taken down the bar, I stopped a moment.

"Keep by my side," I said. "Remember that we must become separated by no chance. Here, take this pistol! You can shoot, can't you?"

She said "Yes" and took the pistol. Then I opened the door, and we dashed out, running with quick and noiseless steps across the open toward the wood, which rose in a dim line ahead of us.

While the window opened toward the campfire of the besiegers the door did not, and we had gone perhaps 50 yards before they saw us. This I knew by the surprised shout that came to us, and looking back I saw them hesitating, as if in doubt about my identity, and at last running toward their horses. I was glad that they would pursue on horseback, and I had taken that probability into consideration when we made our dash from the house, for even at the distance I could see that the dim wood looked dense and a poor place for the use of horses.

"Courage, Julia!" I said, taking her hand. "In a minute or two we will be into the woods, and they mean safety."

I looked back a second time. The guerrillas had reached their horses, mounted them and turned their heads our way, but in doing it their time lost was our gain. Unless lamed by some unlucky pistol shot we would surely gain the wood. They fired once or twice, and I heard the thunder of their horses' hoofs, but I had little fear. I still held the girl's hand in mine, and she made no effort to draw it away. She was running with a firm, sure step, and, though her face was white and her eye excited, she seemed to retain both her courage and presence of mind.

The wood was not as far as I had calculated, and when our pursuers were many yards away we dashed into it at such headlong haste that I tripped over a vine and fell upon my nose, burying it in a pile of soft leaves, which saved it from harm. But I was up again, rejoicing at the accident, for in a wood interlaced with vines horses could make no progress.

"I hope you are not hurt?" asked Julia anxiously.

"Hurt? Not a bit of it!" I replied. "What a blessing these woods are! How dark it is in here, and what a blessing that is too!"

In fact, the wood was our good luck and our best luck at that, for even we on foot found it difficult to make our way through it. Afar we could hear the British cursing in profusion and variety as they strove to force their horses through the dense bush.

"Hold my hand," I said to Julia, "for otherwise I might lose you in all this darkness and density."

But instead of waiting for her to take my hand, which she might not have done, I took hers, and, bidding her again to step lightly, I led the way, curving among the trees and bushes like a brook winding around the hills in search of a level channel. My object was to leave our pursuers at a loss concerning our course, and we soon ceased to hear their swearing or the struggles of their horses. I dropped into a walk, and of course the girl did likewise.

"I think we are safe now," I said. "There is not one chance in a hundred to bring them across our path again. What a fine wood! What a glorious wood! There is no such wood as this in England. It grew here especially for our safety, Julia."

"It did grow up in time," she replied, "but now that you think us safe again you can call me Miss Howard and not Julia."

"That's true, and now that we are safe again I must ask you, Miss Howard, as an especial favor to me, to please quit holding my hand."

"I am not holding your hand, Mr. Marcel!" she replied indignantly. "It is you who are holding mine, but you shall not do so a moment longer."

She tried to jerk her hand away. I let her jerk three or four times, and then I added as an afterthought:

"It is very dark here, and there is still danger that we might become separated. I think I will let you hold it a little longer, but I shall endure it merely because it is a military necessity."

She gave her hand a most violent jerk, and it nearly slipped from me, but I renewed my grip in time.

"Simply a military necessity," I repeated, and, seeing that it was useless, she made no further effort to withdraw her hand. I could not see her face, the darkness being too great, and therefore had little opportunity to judge of her state of mind. We walked on in silence, winding here and there through the wood, with an occasional stop to listen, though we heard nothing but the common noises of a forest—the crackling rustle of dry leaves and twigs, the gentle swaying of some old tree as the wind rocked it and the soft swish of the bushes as they swung back into place after we had passed between.

CHAPTER VIII.
JULIA'S REVENGE.

We walked for nearly an hour and during the last three-quarters of it kept straight to the northwest, in which direction I thought Morgan, with his little army, lay, or rather marched. At last the bush began to grow thinner and the trees to stand farther apart. I inferred that we were approaching the end of the forest, and I was not sorry, as the traveling was hard, and I believed that we had lost our pursuers. Presently we came into the open, and I let the girl's hand drop.

"Which way are we going now?" she asked.

"Wait a moment," I said.

I put two fingers to my lips and blew between them a whistle, soft and long and penetrating.

"Why do you do that?" asked the girl in a fright, coming toward me. "You will bring them upon us again."

"Wait," I repeated, and I blew the whistle a second time. We stood motionless for two minutes, and then I heard a faint crush, crush, as of approaching footsteps.

"They are coming!" cried the girl, seizing my arm. "Let us run into the wood again."

"Wait," I said for the third time.

The footsteps approached rapidly, and a figure, gigantic and formidable in the gray light, appeared through the trees. The girl cried aloud in a panic of terror and gripped my arm.

"Don't be alarmed, Julia, dear," I said. "See who it is!"

Old Put walked up to me, gave his glad, familiar whinny and rubbed his nose on my disengaged arm. Then he started back, and his eyes flamed with wrath.

"Don't be angry, old comrade," I said. "It is true I wear a red coat, but it is only a disguise, a ruse, and I will get rid of it as soon as I can."

He wagged his head as a sign that my apology was sufficient and made no further protest. I slipped the bridle over his head, and the girl broke into a nervous laugh of relief.

"Did you think Old Put would desert a comrade?" I asked.

"Wait here just a moment," I continued. I led Old Put a little distance, and gathering up some dry leaves wiped the stains off his hoofs. Then I returned with him to her and told her to jump upon his back, but the horse shied away from her, showing aversion and anger.

"Never mind, Old Put," I said. "It is all right. She won't beat you again. She likes us both."

"It seems to me that you are rather inclusive in your statements," she said.

"Get up," I said, and, giving her a hand, I assisted her to jump upon the back of Old Put, who had received my explanation with perfect confidence and assumed a protecting air toward her.

"And now once more for Morgan," I said.

"Which, of course, means Tarleton in the end," she said. "And I want to say, Mr. Marcel, that when the rebel army is taken I shall not forget the service that you have done me at a great risk to yourself. My father has influence with Colonel Tarleton, and I shall ask him to secure your good treatment while in captivity."

She spoke with quite an English—that is to say, quite a patronizing—air.

"You are very kind," I said, "but Morgan has not been caught yet, has he, Old Put?"

Women think it their right to abuse a man and receive nothing but chivalry in return.

The old horse shook his head defiantly, and I felt encouraged. We had entered a good country for traveling and at last came into something that was meant evidently for a road, but it very much more resembled a gully washed out by the rains. It led in the right direction, and I followed it, despite my persuasion that we were now in territory practically occupied by the British and were much more likely to meet them in the road than in the fields or forest. But I was tired of such difficult traveling, and, being extremely anxious to rejoin Morgan, I chose the course which promised the best speed.

Old Put carried the girl, and I walked on before, holding his bridle in my hand. I sank into a kind of walking doze—that is, I slept on my feet and with my feet moving. I was but dimly conscious, but I knew that I could put my trust in Old Put and that he would warn me if she made any attempt to escape. Whether the girl was asleep or wide awake I knew not, for my brain was too tired and dull then to tell me; but, looking back once, she seemed to be awake. She had slept well in the hut, while only a short nap had fallen to me.

We were in the darkest hours, those that stretch out their length between midnight and dawn, and I walked on over a dim and shadowy world. Sometimes I was not conscious that my feet touched anything but air. This queer feeling that I was walking on nothing lasted for more than half an hour, and then my half sleep took another phase. I came back to earth, and the red clay of the road took on for awhile the color of blood. The trees by the roadside raced past, rows of phantoms, holding out withered arms and making gestures that I did not understand. Once the dead face of Crowder rose up out of the road and confronted me, but when I said, "You were a murderer and worse and compelled me to kill you," and walked boldly at him he melted away like so much smoke, and I laughed aloud at such a poor kind of a ghost that would run at the first fire.

"What on earth are you laughing at?" demanded the girl from the horse's back.

I awoke with a jerk and replied:

"At your gratitude."

But I was on the verge of sleep again in five minutes, and the trees and the hills and the bushes were playing new tricks with me. The bushes were especially impudent, nodding to me and then to each other and then saying aloud:

"Here he goes! Look at him—making a fool of himself and wasting his time over an English girl who hates him and all his countrymen!"

I picked up a stone, threw it at one excessively impudent bush and shouted at the top of my voice:

"It's a lie!"

"For heaven's sake, Mr. Marcel," cried the girl, "what's the matter? Have you a fever?"

"I was dreaming," I said confusedly, and I made no further explanation, for she asked no more, merely saying that she hoped it was no worse than that.

The trees and bushes did not cease to nod at me and waggle their heads at each other and make jeering remarks about me, but I paid no further attention to them, treating them with the lofty scorn of silence, which is supposed to be the most effective of all replies. The road led into hilly country, but I tramped on in my dream, becoming dimly conscious that it was growing light. Afar off there in the east, just where the sky touched the earth, was a bar of light shining like silver. As I looked it broadened and began to roll up like a great wave of molten silver. On the horizon the hills and trees rose out of the darkness.

Old Put turned his face to the daylight and whinnied approval. An answering whinny came as 20 cavalrymen galloped around a hill, opening in two lines and closing up again, with us in the center.

"Wake up! Wake up, man! Why, you'll walk into a river or over a cliff if you sleep on in this way," said one of the cavalrymen, leaning over and slapping me vigorously on the shoulder.

I awoke and looked up at his bewhiskered English face and his bestriped English coat and was filled with confusion and dismay.

"Why, he isn't awake even yet!" said the officer, with a laugh. "Are you from Cornwallis?"

His tone, though eager, was friendly, and the reason for his question flashed upon me. It was the red coat that I wore, Crowder's coat, which had served me one good turn already.

"Yes," I said, "my name's Hinkle, and I'm from Cornwallis with an important message for Tarleton. I was pursued last night by a gang of rebels, who shot my horse, but I escaped them in the wood. An hour ago I overtook Miss Howard here, who also has an important dispatch for Tarleton, and I am trying to pilot myself and her to him at the same time.

The officer raised his hat to Miss Howard and regarded her with open admiration.

"Your bravery and loyalty equal your beauty, Miss Howard," he said. "England can never suffer when we have such as you. Don't you remember me? I'm Lieutenant George Cuthbert, and I had the honor of an introduction to you at Lord Cornwallis' ball in Charleston some months ago."

The strength of wood increases with its density.

Too Much Club Life.

It would be hard to tell, which is worse, a dun or a crying baby. One of the latter on a crowded street car raised sheol. A poor, dispirited, sad faced man held it with its red face wabbling over his shoulder and its feet occasionally beating the air as it renewed its pathetic screams. The women glared at him. "No wonder it cries," said one. "See how that idiot is holding it." The old married man longed to give him a word or two about carrying a child on the public cars. The bachelor swore under his breath and said something about nuisances on street cars and forcing people to quit after paying their fares. Meanwhile the baby screamed louder than ever, and the poor father was wild. He saw the looks on the faces around him. He knew exactly what those folks were thinking. Finally he said, with a tremble in his voice, "Ladies and gentlemen, you must excuse this baby, but its mother"— Tears stole down his haggard face. "Oh, the poor little thing," interrupted the old maid in the corner sweetly. "Let me hold the little angel."

The old bachelor turned hastily aside and wiped a tear which had given his eye a surprise party, and the married man coughed and felt a strange lump in his throat. "It's mother," continued the baby holder, "is attending the business meetings of 16 of her clubs today."—Louisville Times.

Father Time's Old Clock.

"The transmitting clock at the Naval observatory, Washington, is the absolute monarch of American timekeepers," writes Evander McIver Sweet in The Ladies' Home Journal. "Every day in the year except Sunday by one pendulum stroke it speaks directly and instantaneously to every city and considerable town between the peaks of the Rockies and the pines of Maine, saying to them that on the seventy-fifth meridian it is now high noon to the fraction of a second. A duplicate mechanism stationed at the branch naval observatory on Mare Island performs a similar service for the people of the Pacific slope. And by this one clock at the national capital, together with its duplicate on the Pacific, is set nearly every timepiece in the United States and Cuba, most of those in Mexico and many on the border of Canada.

"A number of clocks—from 3 to 3,000—in nearly every city and large town are wired together into a local family and by means of a switch key at the telegraph office are put into direct contact with the parent clock at the national capital. So that the instant the electric touch is given from Washington every clock in the circuit, whether it be at Boston, Minneapolis or New Orleans, begins a new day in perfect accord with its mechanical deity."

Dry Goods Coopers.

"This is a strange place for a cooper shop," said a stranger in New York, pointing to a sign over a basement in the wholesale dry goods district.

"Yes; it would be a queer place," was the answer, "if the product was like that of nearly all cooper shops. But there was never a barrel made in the place, and probably not one of the 15 men who work there could head a barrel, to say nothing of making one. This cooperage does business only with big wholesale houses."

There are several similar shops in the district. They make a business of strapping cases of merchandise after they have been packed. The large concerns have the cases put in the street after they have been packed, and then the cooper is sent for to nail the wooden straps around them. He receives about 25 cents an hour for his labor and from 15 to 25 cents a pair for the straps. The shops are the storehouses for the hoop poles, and there the men split and shave the hickory saplings which finally become the case straps. There are some houses in the district where the porter does this work, but the large concerns turn it over to the coopers who never make a barrel.—New York Tribune.

Hotels and Trained Nurses.

Trained nurses are not welcome guests in New York hotels, and in fact in many they are expressly forbidden to appear in the dining rooms in their uniforms. The hotel keepers object to their presence in their working dresses because any indication of the existence of disease in a hotel is disadvantageous. Under these circumstances they are compelled to go through as much preliminary labor before they go to meals as if they had been invited under formal circumstances. Yet the wisdom of the rule on the part of the hotel proprietors is admitted, as in some of the large hotels up town occupied chiefly by families there are frequently 10 or 12 trained nurses employed. The sight of so many would not be reassuring to guests.—New York Sun.

Railroad Man's Prayer.

An old railroad man, having been converted, was asked to lead in prayer. The following was the response: "O Lord, now that I have flagged thee, lift up my feet from the rough road of life and plant them safely on the deck of the train of salvation. Let me use the safety lamp known as prudence, make all the couplings in the train with the strong link of thy love and let my hand lamp be the Bible, and, heavenly Father, keep all switches closed that lead off the sidings, especially those with a blind end. O Lord, if it be thy pleasure, have every semaphore block along the line show the white line of hope that I may make the run of life without stopping. And, Lord, give us the Ten Commandments for a schedule, and when I have finished the run on schedule time and pulled into the great dark station of death may thou, the Superintendent of the universe, say, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant; come and sign the pay roll and receive your check for eternal happiness.'"—Railroad Gazette.

Turkey Droves In Athens.

The turkey merchant is the most wonderful of street venders. He arrives with 200 or 300 birds, which he drives about town for a week or two, selling them one by one. He is armed with a long pole, with which he touches up lazy or quarrelsome birds. They gobble continuously, and he shouts above the din, "Gallous, gallapoula, gallopules!" ("Turkey cocks, little turkeys, little hen turkeys!") When one drove meets another face to face or at right angles, they pass through without confusion, and no bird changes masters.—Scribner's Magazine.

W. H. TINSON OBJECTS TO MORPHINE.

He Objected When the Doctors Wanted to Stupefy Him.

ROXBURY, Mass.—Mr. Tinson had a remarkably severe case of sciatic rheumatism, which laid him up entirely. He had five doctors, was in bed swathed in cotton batten and red medicinal flannel, and instead of getting better, he got worse. The doctors wanted to use morphine, which he would not have. A good friend came along, suggested Ath-lo-pho-ros, and in eight days he was able to go out, and in another five days, to go to his business. Two bottles of Ath-lo-phoros did it, and he has never had an attack since.

KISSES.

With little kisses I shut your eyes;
I would not have them seeing and wise,
For, could I choose, I would have you be
Blind ever, as now, when you look on me!

A wreath of kisses to crown your head,
That the whole world's crown should adorn instead,
To keep your thought of me ever kind,
As now, when your darling eyes are blind.

In each of your hands I shut a kiss.
Do you feel how soft and little it is?
So hold it gently that it may live,
Lest your hands ask more than my hands can give.

A kiss for an earring in each dear ear,
And now when I speak you can only hear
The heart of my heart's heart laugh and cry,
Not the foolish words it is stifled by.

A kiss on your mouth, and it bears no charm
To bring you to good, to keep you from harm;
It has no mission, yet let it be;
The rest were for you, but this is for me!
—Pall Mall Gazette.

UNCLE SAM'S SPOTTERS.

Especially the Man In Europe Who Looks Out For Smugglers.

"Uncle Sam's large and well organized secret service," says S. H. Adams in Ainslee's, "is made up mostly of men who come properly under the head of detectives with police powers, but it has its class of bona fide spotters, whose entire duty it is to ingratiate themselves with persons suspected of having designs to evade the custom house duties and to warn the baggage inspectors at this end of the impending swindle.

"In cleverness, address and adaptability the secret service spotter is easily at the head of his profession and even ranks with the trained experts of the European diplomatic corps. It is essential that he should be a man of the world, for he must associate with all kinds of people on equal terms. He has no fixed abode, but lives in various European capitals when he is not on shipboard, where he is much of the time. He must never let himself be in the slightest degree suspected.

"There is always a number of these agents in Paris, because of the great American trade there. They live at the fashionable hotels and live the life apparently of flaneurs and boulevardiers. In all lines of trade that concern dutiable goods they are experts, and no large purchase by an American in Paris is unknown to them. Their circle of acquaintance is enormous, but nobody knows them for what they are. In one way or another they contrive to make the acquaintance of any person whom they suspect and unostentatiously but unremittingly trail him.

"Many a time some man who has made a heavy purchase of diamonds or laces and so disposed them that he felt sure of being able to get them through the port undiscovered has been passed on the dock by a chance acquaintance of the voyage over who, unseen, presses a little note into the hand of the customs inspector. That note tells all that the wily smuggler would wish to keep secret, and his baggage is mercilessly ransacked until the hidden articles are brought to light. He has been followed over by the spotter. Men employed in this line get good pay—as high as $10 a day—but it costs them much to live in the manner in which they must maintain themselves."

Massage For Apoplexy.

The medical profession recognizes today as it has never done before the remarkable aid of massage. It has done marvelous things for paralysis, even for apoplexy, at which doctors once looked on helplessly. Apoplexy is caused by a clot of blood on the brain, and if that clot can be broken up, if an emptying can be effected of clogged veins, recovery is in sight. Constant massage of the forehead and skull will do it (this has been proved over and over again), while paralyzed limbs, by patient, constant kneading, can have new life rubbed into them.—Good Housekeeping.

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but when all other medicines failed, three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 58 pound." It's absolutely guaranteed to cure Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Bronchitis and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at C. A. Wright's drug store.

A loud "I won't" means "I will if I have to."

A wheelman's tool bag isn't complete without a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. Heals cuts, bruises, stings, sprains. Monarch over pain.

It is the man without much mind, who always has a mind to do something and never does it.

DRYING PREPARATIONS simply develop dry catarrh; they dry up the secretions which adhere to the membrane and decompose, causing a far more serious trouble than the ordinary form of catarrh. Avoid all drying inhalants and use that which cleanses, soothes and heals. Ely's Cream Balm is such a remedy and will cure catarrh or cold in the head easily and pleasantly. All druggists sell it at 50 cents or it will be mailed by Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N. Y.

She leaves a husband and two small children to mourn her death. The remains were laid at rest in the family lot at Raisin Valley cemetery.

Harry Randolph, of Adrian township, is minus eyebrows and lashes as the result of becoming too familiar with gunpowder. He and an elder brother made an inch and a quarter hole in a block of wood and filled it with powder, inserted a plug and touched it off. One charge failed to explode, so Harry took a cold chisel and dug out what he could. Then to make sure he had done a good job, he dropped a lighted match into the hole, with the above result. Like the boy who was kicked by a mule, he may never be as handsome as before, but is much wiser.—Adrian Times.

Several young men in Tecumseh who have been too free with gunpowder have met with the same result.

The Monroe Democrat contained a half tone and the life of Calvin W. Snell, whom the Monroe democrats selected as their nominee for county commissioner of schools. Mr. Snell was born in Painesville, O., in 1872. We clip the following from the Monroe Democrat:

Mr. Snell is a graduate of the Tecumseh high school and has spent several terms at the State Normal school at Ypsilanti, and everywhere he has taught he has met with the greatest success both as an educator and disciplinarian. He has always been actively interested in every movement to advance education in this county, and is an active worker in the county teachers' organization. He is acknowledged to be one of our best teachers and one who is eminently fitted to be at the head of the schools of the county. With these facts in mind the voters of the county should have no hesitancy about rolling up a rousing old fashioned majority for Mr. Snell on election day, especially if they have the best interests of our schools at heart.

Mrs. J. L. Trann left for her home at Peoria, Ill., yesterday after several weeks' visit here.

Miss Alma Chase, of Dexter, Mich., returned home Saturday after a few days' visit with relatives.

Rev. D. E. Williamson, pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Hillsdale, occupied the pulpit at the Presbyterian church Sunday and delivered two excellent discourses, which were thoroughly appreciated by large audiences. Rev. E. M. McMillin filled his pulpit at Hillsdale. There are now three divines in the Monroe presbytery, who were classmates while at college—Rev. W. F. Jones, of Tecumseh; Rev. Williamson, of Hillsdale, and Rev. McMillin, of this city, and it is safe to say there are no men more able in the presbytery.—Adrian Times.

STREET TALK.

HANS AND SCHNEIDER.

The following interesting conversation between Hans and his dog Schneider, or rather Hans side of it, was told me by a friend the other day and I thought, on account of the moral, it was worthy of printing.

Hans: "Now, Schneider, you vas a lucky dog. In de morning you get up und look arroundt und eat und then go to sleep, und when noon comes you get up und look aroundt und eat und go to sleep, and when night comes you get up und look aroundt und eat und go to sleep, and I have to work hard all day and get what you hav to eat und what I hav to eat, und get up the next day und get what you hav to eat und what I hav to eat and work hard all day. But then Schneider when you die I bury you in de groundt and that is all, but when I die I hav to go to H—ll yet."

* * *

The other Sunday evening when the Rev. Jones preached his "Burchard"-like ante-election sermon he made reference to James Elliott, the nominee for president on the People's ticket, as being a frequenter and even participant in belligerent tactics of game fowls

Now, two better natured men never walked the face of the earth than these same two, Jones and Elliott, and as soon as Jim discovered that he was elected, began to "set up" cigars to the boys, feeling grateful over his large majority and to his friends and foes alike. After supper he began to feel so grateful and large-hearted that he was moved to also treat the preacher and show that he felt no malice toward any one so he telephoned Mr. Jones as follows:

"Hello!"

"Hello!"

"Is this Preacher Jones?"

"Yes. What is it?"

"My name is Cock Fighting' Elliott. I have just found out that I am president of the council and desire to treat my friends. Will you smoke?"

"Mr. Elliott, I thank you very much, but never smoke."

"Very well, then, Preacher Jones, I will send you up a chicken."

CLUB NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. John Heesen entertain the Crokinole club this evening.

The regular meeting of the Wit and Wisdom club has been postponed until Monday evening, April 1, at Mr. and Mrs. John Orr.

The 63 Club was very nicely entertained last evening by Mrs. L. I. Bidwell. The last meeting of this season will be with Mrs. M. E Corey Monday evening, April 8.

The first meeting of the new 63 Club was held at Mrs. C. A. Wright's last evening and everyone was nicely entertained. The members are all delighted with the idea of the club and it will, no doubt, be a great success. The next meeting will be at Mrs. J. J. Freeman's Monday evening, April 1.

Tuesday evening, March 26, is the last meeting of the Research Circle and is known as "President's Night." The evening will be spent socially. Last Tuesday evening was election of officers with the following result:

President—Mrs. Tiffany.
Vice President—Mrs. Kellogg.
Recording Sec'y—Edith Gray.
Corresponding Sec'y—Mrs Shepard.
Treasurer—Miss Stevens.
Critic—Mrs. Freeman.

The last regular meeting of the Monday Club occurred yesterday. A paper was read by Mrs. Shull on "The Augustan Age of Literature" and by Miss Haight on "Lord Clive in India." The election of officers for next year resulted in the selection of:

President—Mrs. T. C. Harris.
Vice President—Mrs. Jennie Hall.
Secretary—Mrs. Cleo Hall.
Treasurer—Miss Loana Stacy.

The next meeting will be a social afternoon at the home of Mrs. Stacy. Program begins at 2 p. m.

RAILROAD NEWS.

General Freight and Passenger Agent T. M. C. Schindler, of the Cincinnati Northern, announces that effective March 17, the name of the station now known as Woodstock, Mich., located upon the Ohio division, thirteen two-tenths miles south of Jackson, Mich., will be changed to Cement City, Mich. The change is made in recognition of the Peninsular Portland cement works which are located at this point.—Toledo Blade.

As the morning freight was leaving Britton last Saturday morning on the Wabash road, the rails spread causing the train to run off the track. The Wabash trains ran over the D. & L. N. from Britton to South Adrian Saturday and Sunday.

The southbound Lake Shore train was an hour late Saturday morning. They had on two car loads of scenery with eight stage carpenters belonging to the Daniel's opera company.

As soon as the frost is all out of the ground, the C. N. people will begin to fill in the bridge up to the track. This was begun some time ago and they intend to finish it now.

Wm. Owen, engineer on the C. N., and son, of Marshall, spent Sunday with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Owen.

Miss Grace Alberts went to Cincinnati Saturday to make her home with her grand-parents for a time.

The freights on the D. & L. N. Sunday were all late owing to the wreck on the Wabash.

John Mackenmar and wife spent Sunday at Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. T. M. Downing was in Detroit Saturday.

Mrs. B. J. Wells.

Mary Elizabeth Owens was born in Clinton, Mich., May 23, 1837, and died in Franklin, Mich., Aug. 28, 1900, aged 63 years, 3 months and 5 days. The funeral service, which was largely attended, was held at the family residence August 31st and the remains were laid to rest in Riverside cemetery.

When about 18 years old the deceased became a member of the Clinton Congregational church, which her father and Deacon Wells helped to build in 1843, and continued in full membership with it up to the time of her death. She married Bridgeman J. Wells, April 16, 1856, and spent her married life on the farm in Franklin. She was an industrious woman, a devoted wife and mother, caring well for the interests of her home and always self sacrificing to the benefits of relatives and friends.

For several months previous to her death she was a great sufferer, most of the time being unable to lie down. But she bore her sufferings with Christian patience and fortitude, being sustained by the presence and grace of her divine Savior who has called her through a peaceful death, from the cares and toils of earth to her home in the skies. Her death was calm and peaceful. Verily, she died with a smile on her face.

The sermon by Rev. Ashby, pastor of the church at Clinton of which all the family had been members, was very able

LITERARY NOTES.

A study of "The Anthracite Coal Crisis" by Dr. Talcott Williams in the April Atlantic is made especially timely by the termination, on April 1, of the present adjustment of wages in the anthracite and bituminous mines, the consequences of which may be most significant.

* * *

Mr. W. A. Fraser, author of Mooswa and Others, has just written for early publication in The Saturday Evening Post a short, stirring serial, entitled "The Outcasts." The Outcasts are an old buffalo and a wolf-dog, and the greater part of the story is about their strange comradeship and their pilgrimage to the distant plains of deep grass of which the wolf-dog knew. The plan of the book is a unique conception and it is worked out on entertaining lines.

A Great Newspaper.

The Sunday edition of the St. Louis Republic is a marvel of modern newspaper enterprise. The organization of its news service is world-wide, complete in every department; in fact, superior to that of any other newspaper.

The magazine section is illustrated in daintily tinted colors and splendid halftone pictures. This section contains more high-class literary matter than any of the monthly magazines. The fashions illustrated in natural colors are especially valuable to the ladies.

The colored comic section is a genuine laugh maker. The funny cartoons are by the best artists. The humorous stories are high class, by authors of national reputation.

Sheet music, a high-class, popular song, is furnished free every Sunday in The Republic.

The price of Sunday Republic by mail one year is $2.00. For sale by all news dealers.

Reduced Rates California, Queen & Crescent.

Special reduced rates to California, Queen & Crescent Route. Great opportunity to visit the Pacific Coast. Quick schedules and excellent train service. Ask Queen & Crescent ticket agents or address W. C. Rinearson, G. P. A., Cincinnati, for particulars.

Strikes a Rich Friend.

"I was troubled for several years with chronic indigestion and nervous debility," writes F. J. Green, of Lancaster, N. H., "No remedy helped me until I began using Electric Bitters, which did me more good than all the medicines I ever used. They have also kept my wife in excellent health for years. She says Electric Bitters are just splendid for female troubles; that they are a grand tonic and invigorator for weak, run down women. No other medicine can take its place in our family." Try them. Only 50c. Satisfaction guaranteed by C. A. Wright.

An Apology and a Settlement.

When the theater crowd was at its thickest on Broadway on Saturday night, a well set up man of medium size, wearing a glossy silk hat, hurried along. In dodging through the throng the handle of the cane he carried caught the arm of one of two burly persons who were going in the same direction. He half turned as if to apologize, but before he could do so one of the pair smashed his silk hat with a heavy stick.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the man, blandly taking off his battered tile. "My rudeness was unintentional."

Putting back the damaged hat on his head, he dropped his cane and said, "Now I propose to settle with you for a blackguard."

Those on the spot saw a flash of fists. The big man went flat on his back from a clean smash on the jaw.

"If you want any more, I am ready to oblige you," said the other.

The other apparently didn't. The smaller man picked up his stick, took off his damaged silk hat, brushed it and continued on his way down Broadway. And the crowd of spectators, who had gathered as if by magic, broke up with the feeling that they had seen as neat a bit of work as it would ever be their good fortune to encounter.—New York Sun.

Much of Little.

The stranger in any city half a hundred years old, if he knew nothing of the city's history, would learn from many of the signs that the second and third generations had succeeded to the business of father and grandfather. It is especially true of New York. The New York Tribune mentions some peculiar signs and relates the following:

A Londoner who had strolled about the streets of the city with a New Yorker who called his attention to some of the signs of sons agreed that in this respect New York was very like London, but in neither city was there any such sign as he saw in one of the old English towns a few hours' run from the world's metropolis. The sign reads, "John Littlejohn's Sons & Little (Little Littlejohn, Doolittle Littlejohn & John Little).

According to the Londoner the first Littlejohn and Little were partners. The former gave his first son his partner's family name, and Little gave his boy his partner's Christian name. Littlejohn's second son was named for his mother's family, Doolittle. The three sons succeeded to their fathers' business; hence the sign is entirely correct, and the Londoner was right in saying that the successors had no intention of being "funny" when they had their sign written as it appears.

French Bakers.

Bakers in France are subject to restrictions and regulations undreamed of in England. In the fortified towns along the frontier they are bound by law to have a certain stock of flour always on hand in case of emergencies. The bakery not only has to be kept clean, but the baker has to deposit with the local authorities a certain sum of money as a surety for the proper conduct of his business.

The law also looks after his weights and measures, which circumstance places him in the same position as the British baker, but in addition the law regulates the price at which bread can be sold.

Napoleon III ordered on one occasion that a loaf about equal to our quartern should be sold for not more than sixpence, and this at a time when we were paying eightpence and ninepence.—London Tit-Bits.

IN OLDEN TIMES.

Many Things were Different Now-a Days the Public Profit by Experience.

When the striped pole or sign which now indicates a barber shop was employed to let the public know where cupping or blood-letting was professionally performed. close shaves were of daily occurrence, not the easy removal of the hirsute or hairy adornment of the head and face, but close shaves from entering eternity. More than one unfortunate entered the barber surgeon's doorway to leave it a corpse or so weak that weeks were required to get the victim of malpractice on his feet. Blood-letting was used for everything from a heartache to a corn, and a pain in the loins was invariably treated with two incisions, one on each side of the spine. Like plasters and liniments, these helped from the counter irritation they created, and we may presume that had Mr. Calvin Wilson, proprietor of the leading shaving parlor of Niles, Mich., lived in the time of George III of England, in place of taking the course he did a short time ago with his back, blood-letting would have been resorted to. Read how he treated his trouble:

Mr. Wilson says: "My occupation has very likely much to do with the cause of my backache from which I have suffered considerably for a number of years. Standing on one's feet some days 18 hours is hard on the best of backs, but when you have pain across the loins, with lameness and soreness, every time you move the muscles of the arm, long, long before your daily task is over you often wish you could go to sleep. I tried everything to better my condition but was unsuccessful until I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought to a man who has worked hard all his life and is now past the three score and ten is much easier to appreciate than to describe in words. Doan's Kidney Pills perform what they promise"

Discouraging the Book Agent.

"Got books?" snapped the diminutive guard at the threshold of the big office.

"Yes, young man; I have books," responded the woman with the portfolio. "Just step aside. I'm going in to see your employer."

"Afore yer goes," said the boy, still covering the sill, "I wants to tell yer dat de boss just upset his ink. He ain't in no lovin mood."

"Oh, he will listen to my demonstration."

"Maybe he will, but I wants to tell yer dat he just got a telephone call sayin dat burglars had carried off de walubles of his house."

"Still I"—

"Den de news just came dat his trotter run away an smashed up de trap an coachman."

"That is very bad, but"—

"Just afore yer come a young fellar rushes in an tells de boss dat his naphtha launch has been fired by tramps."

"I sympathize with him, and maybe"—

"De boss goes to look at his watch an finds de mainspring broken."

"Gracious! But"—

"Den comes de news dat S an Z stock has dropped 20 points. De boss finds dat mice has gnawed up his new insurance calendar. De glue upsets on a thousand stamps."

"Terrible! Yet"—

"But wait! Just as you comes up stairs de boss asks over de telephone whether it's a boy or girl. Somebody says twins and"—

But the book agent had vanished. The boss came out and patted the boy on the head.

"Patsy, you are a brick! Take the rest of the afternoon off. Here's fare to Lincoln park."—Chicago News.

Great Drawing to a Bobtail Pair.

"The most remarkable draw I ever saw made at poker was in a Chicago club one night," said a Chicago man. "There were five of us in a little social game, with a limit of $25 and all jack pots. A friend of mine whom I will call Jones was dealing. I was first under the guns and passed, as did also the two men sitting next. The fifth man—we will say his name was Brown—opened the pot for $5. Jones didn't have the shadow of a thing in his hands, but he raised Brown $10, intending to stand pat and bluff it out. Brown had three aces, and he came back at Jones with $10 better.

"Now, instead of laying down, as a wise man should in a case like that, Jones determined to see it through. He knew, of course, that it would be useless to try to bluff, so he drew three cards to a king and queen of spades. Brown had drawn two cards to his aces and had got a small pair. As a bait he led off the betting with $5. Jones hadn't looked at his hand until Brown bet, and when he picked up his cards he almost fell dead. He had drawn an ace, jack and ten of spades, making a royal flush. They raised each other back and forth until one or the other had all his money in, and when the hands were shown the game broke up right there."—Washington Post.

A Point at Issue.

Several of the lawyers had told their stories, some of which ridiculed the continued use of legal verbiage and the absurd lengths to which members of the profession sometimes go in taking advantage of technicalities.

"A rank outsider," announced the member of the profession who had been a good listener, "a client of mine, supplied the best instance of literal interpretation that ever came to my knowledge. He was executor under a will that, among other provisions, required the payment of an annuity to a venerable aunt of the testator. But proof of her being alive must be made before each payment, and this is the rock on which the executor struck.

"The old lady proved herself in the flesh, drew her money and went to California, where she spent two years without putting in her claim. On her return she went in person and demanded the double allowance due her.

"The conscientious executor got out the will, studied it, scratched his head and finally handed down his opinion:

"'Madam, you are alive now. There can be no reasonable question as to that, for I have the conclusive evidence of my own eyes. But I am possessed of no legal proof that you were alive a year ago. I am, as you know, within the restrictions of the will. I will pay the annuity for this year, but must insist upon satisfactory affidavits that you were not dead when the preceding annuity was passed.'

"It took me the better part of a day to convince him that he should settle in full."—Detroit Free Press.

Rheumatism.

Nobody knows all about it; and nothing, now known, will always cure it.

Doctors try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, when they think it is caused by imperfect digestion of food. You can do the same.

It may or may not be caused by the failure of stomach and bowels to do their work. If it is, you will cure it; if not, you will do no harm.

The way, to cure a disease is to stop its cause, and help the body get back to its habit of health.

When Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil does that, it cures; when it don't, it don't cure. It never does harm.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

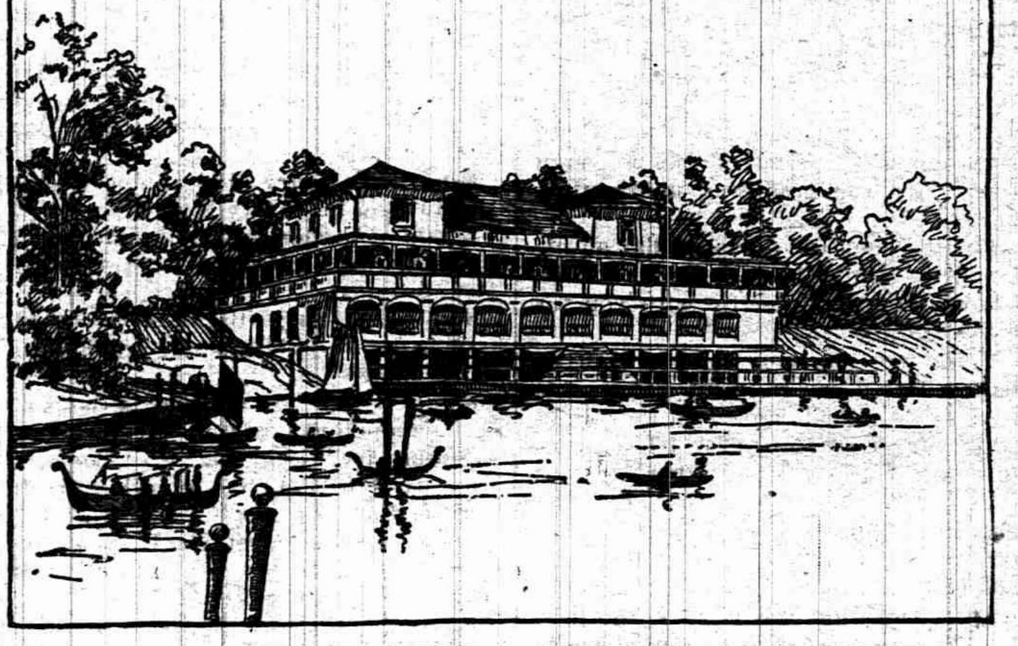
CYCLE TOUR CLUBS.

FORMED TO WHEEL TO THE PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Valuable Information For Those Who Contemplate a Trip to Buffalo and the Great Show Which Will Be There Next Summer.

The chief pleasure which a bicycle affords is to be found by touring in congenial company, over good roads, through an unfamiliar country abounding in fine scenery of interesting historical associations.

The central location of Buffalo brings it within easy touring distance of the principal cities of the Eastern and Middle states and the Dominion of Canada. Within a radius of 500 miles are the cities of Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Indianapolis, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago and Milwaukee and many other thriving and populous towns. Over one-half of the population of the United States and over two-thirds of the population of Canada reside within this radius. The reputation which Buffalo has for being the coolest city in the country in summer time, its many miles of smoothly paved and heavily shaded streets and avenues, the fine buildings, magnificent electrical effects, beautiful landscapes and the multitudinous attractions displayed by the exhibitors of the Pan-American Exposition will make Buffalo the cyclists' Mecca next summer. Cyclists living within this distance of 500 miles from Buffalo are not living up to their possibilities if they fail to visit the Pan-American Exposition.



CASINO AND BOATHOUSE—PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Valuable information on the most important subjects of human interest will be freely disseminated to all visitors. Knowledge of great interest and of unsurpassed value may be had for the price of admission. It will be a vast school of learning, where expensively-illustrated information may be had for the asking. Concentrated experience of a lifetime, from which all the froth and foam of experimental failure has been skimmed, will be freely offered to the public. It is easy to make a mistake, and life offers plenty of opportunity for regrets, but it will be easy to attend the Exposition and avoid this unfortunate consequence.

It will be impossible to visit the Exposition grounds even for a day without deriving both pleasure and profit. It will be impossible to conceive through a neighbor's description an adequate idea of the Exposition's wonderful beauty, its rare plants and flowers, its numerous patios, its elegant proportions, its odd scenes representing distant lands, its sparkling fountains and more than all its general comprehensive utility.

Cyclists who contemplate visiting the Exposition should begin making their preparations this winter in order to fully enjoy an enterprise of such importance. Histories of the different Pan-American countries should be read and descriptions of exhibits collected and studied in order to select those pertaining to subjects of the greatest interest to individuals. It will be impossible to see everything without staying all summer, but by systematically laying out an intelligent plan much may be accomplished in a given time.

These winter evenings may be profitably employed by forming a club with a view to carrying out this idea. This club should be planned to include the financial arrangements for a tour awheel to Buffalo, in which case it might be officered by a treasurer and secretary. The duty of the secretary would include all necessary correspondence in regard to information for the benefit of the club as well as arrangements for hotel and other accommodations while the party is en route and during its stay in Buffalo. If each club member should pay into the treasury a stated amount each week, a sufficient sum would soon be realized to meet the necessary expenses of the trip. The treasurer of the club should pay all bills while touring, while to another should be delegated the care of the baggage.

To make the tour thoroughly enjoyable the organizer of the club must before starting out carefully plan the routes to be followed, choose his companions for the trip and so arrange matters that he and his fellow tourists shall enjoy the maximum of pleasure without appreciable fatigue and at the smallest possible expense.

Bicycle touring cannot be enjoyed without the personal comfort of each member of the party being largely considered and the more experienced riders regulating their speed to the pace set by the novices. As soon as riding becomes hard labor one might just as well dig a trench or break stones on the roadside and call it sport. If this little maxim was borne in mind by old riders when out with those of less experience, we should see fewer weary and mud bespattered men and women toiling homeward late in the evenings and averring that holidays spent awheel make the so called pleasure more disagreeable than a day spent in the office or factory.

The strongest and most experienced rider in the party should bring up the rear to assist the more inexperienced in case of accident and to encourage the weak or tiring rider. A trip of eight or ten days will satisfy most riders, and if there is a spare day sandwiched in the middle on which rest is taken the enjoyment of the tour will gain zest. The object of a tour is not the mileage covered, but the amount seen and the enjoyment derived from it. Much will depend on the nature of the country and the condition of the roads. Fifty to 75 miles a day should be the maximum distance even over the very best roads, and if the tourists are to get the most satisfaction from their outing and mount every morning full of ardor for the day's ride they will content themselves with from 40 to 50 miles a day. Early starts in the morning are a feature rather of speculative than actual touring. People who have really tried one speak enthusiastically of the joys of a daybreak ride, but it is to be hoped that no tenderfoot will be beguiled by these siren voices into getting off without his breakfast. The advisability of a rest in the middle of the day of at least two hours is admitted by most if not all tourists.

The first essential toward a successful tour is to start in proper condition. The neglect of this consideration spoils more holidays than any other cause, making the work a toil instead of a pleasure and too often doing harm instead of good to the health of the rider. The intending tourist should practice steadily for at least a fortnight before the start, beginning at very short stages and increasing the work daily till he can do with ease the maximum distance which he proposes to cover. During the earlier stages of his training he will probably find himself at the close of the day very stiff and sore and at night feverish and unable to sleep. It is a good rule for the tourist to use nothing absolutely new. Each article should have been tested by experience and should have had full time to accommodate itself to the idiosyncrasies of the rider or vice versa. A new saddle in particular is a fertile source of discomfort. However perfect in itself, it is sure to feel more or less a "misfit" for the first few days, and the same may be said of almost every part of the riding outfit. Each garment worn should have had time to adapt itself to the figure of the rider and should have become as easy as the proverbial "old shoe" before the cyclist trusts himself to its tender mercies for a lengthened absence from home.

If not found desirable or convenient to make a bicycle tour to Buffalo, all cyclists are advised to take their wheels with them. Transportation by rail or water will be so cheap and efficient that a very small outlay in time and money will enable even those living at a distance to make the trip. From any section of the city the Pan-American Exposition can easily be reached by wheel over smooth asphalt pavements or parkway cycle paths, while the magnificent scenery of the Niagara frontier is also within easy cycling distance of Buffalo.

Arrangements will be made for the comfort and convenience of cyclists attending the Exposition.

Any additional or special information will be furnished on application to the Bureau of Publicity, Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, N. Y.

TREMENDOUS FORCE.

Power of the Electric Current Cabled From Niagara to Buffalo.

To look upon the cables of the transmission lines that extend all the way from Niagara Falls to Buffalo one fails to get any idea of the power of the force that is being transmitted by these conductors. The cables hang like any other cables; drawn taut, there is no swaying in the wind. They stretch from pole to pole for mile after mile, but throughout their entire length there is nothing that gives an intimation of the wonderful work they are doing. L. B. Stillwell, who has been prominently connected with the Niagara development, points out that the power that is so silently and invisibly transmitted along the six copper conductors, less than one inch in diameter, would easily break six steel cables of equal diameter moving at a rate of 10 miles an hour. Such is the wonderful force of the electric current from Niagara of which the Pan-American Exposition is to receive 5,000 horsepower.

A Sympathetic Memory.

In a western Massachusetts town lives a young woman who is blessed with both discrimination and tact.

The first of these admirable qualities she has displayed by her two marriages. Her first husband was a minister, a most delightful man. He died, and after a lapse of five or six years she was united to his only brother, who was a successful lawyer in New York.

On her library desk stands a picture of the first partner of her joys and sorrows, and one day a curious caller asked whom the photograph represented.

"That," said the hostess, with evident emotion, "is a picture of my husband's brother, who died eight years ago and who was very dear to us both."—Youth's Companion.

Generous.

"What's your fare?" asked old Flintskin of his cabby the other day and was met with the stereotyped reply:

"Well, sir, I will leave that to you."

"Thank you; you're very kind," said old F., buttoning up his pockets and walking off. "You're the first person who ever left me anything yet."—London Fun.

A Love Letter of Prince Bismarck.

"On my window sill, among all sorts of crocuses and hyacinths, stand two camellias which always inspire me with strange thoughts. One of them, slender and pretty, with its ornamental crown (top) and soft, pale—very pale—pink blossoms, but little foliage and only two buds, transports me to Reddetin, holds itself rather stiffly and lisps English. The other makes far less impression of beauty as you look at it, and its stalk betrays in its gnarled twisting lack of care in its pruning. From the midst of the foliage looks out a dead branch, but the crown is rich in leaves, and the foliage is greener than that of its neighbor. It gives promise of abundant blossoming in its eight buds, and its color is deep dark red and white in irregular gay variegation. Do you take the comparison amiss? It is a lame comparison, moreover, for I do not love camellias, because they are without odor, and you I love precisely on account of the fragrance of the flower of your spirit, which is white, dark red and black."

IN THE MATTER OF CRYING.

While Weeping Is Quite Natural, It May Be "Cured" In Children.

It comes natural to every woman to pity a child when it hurts itself. Be the misadventure big or little, the mother immediately takes the little one in her arms and in her most sympathetic, pitying tones tries to solace it. And of course the child concludes something terrible has happened to it and cries vigorously. A little baby if pitied can soon be brought to a weeping state when nothing whatever is the matter with it. Just call up your most tender, sympathetic tone; ask him that time honored question, "Did they boos the baby?" and the little lips will begin to quiver, the mouth to droop, and soon a wail breaks forth that is meant to indicate that "they" did.

Of course children will cry sometimes. Crying is an institution that cannot be done away with. Crying, more or less, is expected with the advent of the little stranger, but the more or less depends largely on the parents. A child can be laughed into a good humor. Instead of pitying him at the numerous little hurts he gets, those that are really of no importance, treat them as a good joke. Laugh at them, and the baby will quickly laugh with you. It doesn't take long to chase the tears away. Besides doing away with a lot of unnecessary crying it teaches him not to mind little hurts and develops a brave, manly little fellow. This does not apply to serious mishaps, but to those numerous little bumps which youngsters are continually getting and which a little pity quickly magnifies into something of importance in childish eyes.

Never giving a child anything he cries for is another excellent way to nip in the bud the crying habit. If it is proper for him to have, promise it to him when he stops crying. Reward his good behavior, not his bad. Of course if bad habits in this direction are formed, it is hard to correct them. But such discipline observed from the beginning will make crying an infrequent performance in the home where the youthful monarch reigns.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE TITLE REILLY TOOK.

He Made Himself as Big a Man as the Best of Them.

"When you mention the name of John Reilly, you touch a reminiscent chord in the hearts of hundreds of the older residents of Baltimore," remarked a well known gentleman.

"On one occasion Reilly had to journey to Philadelphia on business. It was in the time of the old stagecoaches, and he made his way leisurely along. Upon arriving there he registered at one of the leading hotels. That leads up to my story. At that time it was customary for men to add to their signatures such titles or evidences of dignity as they possessed. When Reilly looked over the hotel register, he saw something like this: 'John Jones, LL. D.; William Smith, A. M., A. B.; Samuel Johnson, D. D.' Seizing a pen, he inscribed the following: 'John Reilly, F. R. S.' Then he went about his business and spent a pleasant and profitable afternoon.

"Returning to the hotel at night, he was met by a committee of leading and learned citizens. They greeted him with great deference and expressed their gratification that such a distinguished man should be in their midst. He was urgently requested to deliver a lecture before some scientific body during his stay. You see, they judged from the mystic letters on the hotel register that he was a fellow of the Royal society.

"Reilly was a man of imposing personal appearance. He made himself very agreeable to the committee, but could not name a date for the lecture. When they left him, a friend asked the reason of the demonstration.

"'What do you mean by writing the letters F. R. S. after your name, any way?'

"'They mean "fried, raw and stewed," and I serve the best in Baltimore.'"—Baltimore Sun.

The Germ of an Invention.

The late General George B. McClellan, U. S. A., is credited with having made the statement many years ago that the sinking of clams into the sand along the ocean shore by closing their shells and ejecting the water from them in a thin stream first suggested to him the use of the water jet as an aid in sinking piles in sand. At any rate as long ago as 1852 a water jet was so used by General McClellan's advice in putting down piles for a wharf and warehouse. Water was forced through an ordinary rubber hose, with a piece of gas pipe on the end for a nozzle. This was placed close to the point of the pile on the bottom, the jet of water scouring the sand away from the pile and making a hole, in which the pile sank rapidly.—Cassier's Magazine.

Sensitive Tobacco Plants.

In Cuba the best tobacco comes from one strip of land only, the slopes of a certain river, and even there a north wind may ruin the crop. Tobacco is the most sensitive plant we know of. The smallest thing affects its flavor. Plant Virginia tobacco in Germany and the result is a better tobacco, but it is German tobacco, not Virginian. In north Borneo they produce the most delicate and silky leaves that ever were seen, but the tobacco lacks character and taste. Send Havana seeds to the Philippines, and you merely produce a superior Manila.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I had a running sore on my leg for seven years," writes Mrs. Jas. Forest of Chippewa Falls, Wis., and spent hundreds of dollars in trying to get it healed. Two boxes of Banner Salve entirely cured it." No other salve so healing. J. J. Orr.

(Benson's Plaster Is Pain's Master.)

For coughs and colds Benson's Porous Plasters are an incomparably better remedy than any other—external or internal. Their medicinal properties enter the skin and go straight to the seat of the disease.

They relieve and cure a "seated" cold without disturbing the system or upsetting the stomach. Cough mixtures often nauseate. Benson's Plasters are medicinal in the highest degree, and quickest to act.

Placed on the chest or back or on both at once in serious cases, the good effect is felt immediately. The congestion yields, the cough abates and the breathing improves.

Lung or bronchial affections or kidney disease, are cured with the least possible suffering and loss of time.

Benson's Plasters are immeasurably superior to Belladonna, Strengthening, Capsicum or any other combination in plaster form. They are also preferable to ointments, liniments and salves.

Benson's Plasters have received fifty-five highest awards over all competitors; and more than 5,000 physicians and druggists have declared them to be one of the few trustworthy household remedies. For sale by all druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

BRONCHITIS
We Know is Hard to Control.
Our Vinol is Making a Wonderful Record in Curing This Dangerous Disease.
CALL AND LET US TELL YOU ABOUT IT.

Here is a letter that has just come to our attention. It will interest people suffering from bronchial troubles. It is from Mr. Geo. W. Brown, of So. Hanover, N. H., and reads as follows:

"I have suffered with bronchial troubles for over a year; tried two doctors and have taken three or four kinds of medicine, none of which did me any good. At times I was so hoarse I could not speak. Then I heard of Vinol. After taking three bottles of it my voice has perfectly returned to me. I can see that in a short time I will be all right. When I began to take it I was very weak, but it has built me up and given me a good appetite."

This is what Vinol always does. This is the way Vinol accomplishes its mission of doing good.

Vinol, as we wish every one to know, owes its power of accomplishing the cures that it effects to the fact that it contains the most wonderful medicinal elements known to science for the cure of all wasting diseases, as well as being in itself a marvelous tonic. These medicinal properties exist and have heretofore been found only in cod-liver oil. Vinol contains these elements. For by a scientific process the necessary curative properties of the cod-liver oil have been separated from the fat and grease which formerly made cod-liver oil preparations so objectionable.

As long as Vinol does not contain any of the vile-smelling oil, and is prepared by combining the sought-after properties with a delicate table wine, it is a most delicious and palatable preparation.

We know of what we speak when we recommend Vinol, and because we do know that Vinol does all we claim for it, we unhesitatingly endorse it, and guarantee at any time to refund the money paid for the remedy if you are not satisfied it will do all we claim for it.

IT FAILED TO PASS

The Colby Elections Bill Again Killed in the Senate.

IT HAD PASSED THE HOUSE

Alcona County Was Eliminated From the Bill and the Chair Ruled the Bill Was Then the Same As One Previously Defeated.

Lansing, Mich., March 22.—Notwithstanding W. C. McMillan's telegram to Rep. Ames, expressing his opinion that a primary bill with a referendum clause attached would be "a good thing," the senate Thursday afternoon killed Rep. Colby's bill to abolish political party nominating conventions in Wayne and Alcona counties. The bill had a short time before been passed by the house.

Lieut.-Gov. Robinson, the presiding officer, after Alcona county had been stricken out, ruled that the bill was substantially the same as the Colby primary election bill for Wayne county alone, which was defeated earlier in the session. The senators, with the exception of Helme, stood by the chair's ruling.

In the house Rep. Colby's amended bill to abolish political conventions in Wayne and Alcona counties came up on the order of the third reading. It was passed without debate by a vote of 71 yeas to 7 nays.

In the senate the Colby primary election bill came up on messages from the house. Senator Holmes moved that the rules be suspended and the bill be placed on its immediate passage.

Senator Moore raised the point of order that the bill was substantially the same one that was considered by the senate and defeated earlier in the session, and President Robinson sustained the point.

Senator Helme, democrat, appealed from the decision of the chair. He said the former bill provided an absolutely new law for Wayne county, while this one merely provides that Wayne and Alcona may vote on adopting a law if they want it—an entirely different proposition, he thought.

But the chair stood by his ruling and was sustained by a vote of 27 to 1—Helme. Before this Senator Dougherty had moved to exempt Alcona county, and the motion was adopted.

The senate rule 29, under which the bill was given its quietus, reads:

"When a bill or joint resolution originating in either house shall have been lost in the senate, neither the same nor any other other like bill or joint resolution on the same subject and containing similar provisions, shall subsequently be considered by the senate during the same session."

Rep. Colby says the fight is not yet ended. He declares he will next introduce a bill or resolution conferring on the board of supervisors of the various counties authority to pass their own primary election laws. He also says he will push his general primary election bill.

Panic Averted.

Lansing, Mich., March 22.—One of the pupils in the high school discovered fire in a closet adjoining the assembly room Thursday morning. She had sufficient presence of mind to notify Principal Smith without alarming the students, and the latter quietly dismissed school for the day forthwith. Although the room is on the third floor of the building, all the scholars reached terra firma without accident. The flames were extinguished readily without the aid of the fire department, not having gained much headway. It is supposed that it was a case of mice and matches.

Oratorical Contest.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 22.—The annual contest of the oratorical association of the University of Michigan was won by Carroll S. Story. His oration was "The Minister Plenipotentiary." Bryant S. Cromer won second honor. The contest was close and orators unusually good. These two men will represent Michigan at the Northern Oratorical league contest, to be held at Iowa City, Ia. The contest was unique in that a woman and a colored gentleman took part. Gov. Bliss presided.

DANGER OF FLOODS.

Dam at Portland May Be Broken By Ice.

Portland, Mich., March 22.—The ice gorge, which has formed below the village in the Grand river, backed the water up Wednesday night, and the fire alarm was sounded to get the people out of bed and into places of safety. Along Water street several people were caught before they could escape. Mrs. Mary Marcy was taken out of a second story window by a boat crew. E. L. Watson, a Pere Marquette section foreman, was penned up in his house, but was also rescued by a boat crew. Every cellar on the west side of Kent street, the main business thoroughfare, was flooded. Great damage has been done to stocks. Blanchard & Son, furniture dealers, lost heavily on stock stored in the basement. Many animals, such as hogs and horses, were drowned. The dam, which supplies power to the water works and electric light plants, is under a terrific strain. A sudden break in the ice gorge would cause heavy damage.

The flood situation remains unchanged. The families who moved out from Water street are still unable to occupy their residences.

Anchor ice was running Thursday. It settles to the bottom of the river at the gorge and makes the dam complete. The council discussed the situation, some of the aldermen advocating the use of dynamite, but the great field to be covered makes this impracticable. It will be left for the swift current to wear away the gorge and bring the river above to its normal level.

Benton Harbor, Mich., March 22.—Rains and thawing snow have filled the Paw Paw river, and the entire valley from a quarter to a half mile in width near Coloma is covered to a depth of from two to five feet. A culvert of the Coloma & Paw Paw Lake railroad, north of the river bridge, was unable to carry the five feet of water that poured through at the rate of six miles an hour. The culvert has been washed out, and there is fear that the rail which still spans the chasm will be washed out at any moment.

Kalamazoo, Mich., March 22.—The indications of a flood in the low lands of this city are becoming greater. The people are forced to use boats and all sorts of water conveyances in order to move in any direction. The water, from all appearances, is about a foot higher than at dark Wednesday evening. Loose articles and small buildings are floating around in the swollen stream.

Back to Michigan.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 22.—Chas. A. Johnson, cashier of the Niles National bank, arrived in this city last night in charge of Deputy United States Marshal H. J. Howe of Cincinnati. They were met at the station by United States Marshal Wheeler and Deputy O'Donnell of this district and taken to the county jail. Johnson appeared haggard and worried and weighed only 114 pounds. He refused to discuss the bank affairs and stated that Marshal Howe of Cassapolis would represent him. He stated that L. Newman of Marion, Mich., had consented to sign his $10,000 bail bond. The deputy marshal brought with him $2,056.17, the amount Johnson had on deposit in Cincinnati, and will deposit it with the United States court.

Urges Early Adjournment.

Lansing, Mich., March 22.—Speaker Carton, in the house Thursday afternoon, called attention to the fact that there were 31 bills on the general order and urged that the members of the committee of the whole dispose of as many of the measures as possible. April 2 having been fixed for the final joint committee hearing on railroad tax bills, the speaker asked the house to act upon a large share of the other bills before then.

"The time when the whole state has fixed upon for final adjournment of this legislature is May 1, and we should try to bring this about," said Mr. Carton.

Body Found.

Chicago, March 22.—The body of May Comstock, of Benton Harbor, Mich., who, it is believed, committed suicide by jumping into the lake at Sixty-third street, was found Thursday afternoon buried in the sand on the beach near the Fifty-ninth street pier. A policeman who was patrolling the shore saw a piece of cloth in the sand about three feet from the water's edge. Closer inspection showed an elbow incased in the sleeve of a red shirt waist. A little digging brought the body of the dead girl to view. It has been ascertained that the cause of the girl's suicide was the fact that she had run into debt to the extent of $7 and dreaded to ask her father for the money.

Shot Himself.

Chicago, March 22.—Charles Linville, rent agent for President S. W. Rawson of the Union Trust & Savings bank shot himself in the head while sitting at his desk in the office of the bank Thursday, dying a few moments later. Linville at one time is said to have been in affluent circumstances. So far as is known, his accounts are correct and no reason is known for the suicide. Linville was 40 years old and married. At the coroner's inquest a verdict of suicide was returned. Mrs. Linville, the widow, claimed, however, that he had been murdered by men who were afraid that he would inform the bank officials of certain misdoings. After the inquest Mrs. Linville appealed to the police to assist her in securing warrants for the arrest of two men whose names the police are withholding. It was clearly proved at the inquest, however, that Linville killed himself. He thrust a revolver into his mouth, the skin inside the mouth being badly burned by the flash.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, March 22.—Thursday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve, in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $151,387,891; gold, $93,585,216.

Dickens' Supremacy.

"So this, then, is your husband's new library, Mrs. Muchrox? Ah, I see he has Dickens and Thackeray side by side. Which do you consider the greater of the two?"

"Oh, my, Dickens! Joshua paid $2.40 more for them Dickenses than he had to give for Thackeray's books right at the same shop."—Chicago Times-Herald.

BOTH WILL LEAVE

Russian and British Troops Will Withdraw From Tien Tsin.

GIVE DIPLOMATS A CHANCE

To Settle the Matter In Dispute—Railroad Work Will Be Suspended Until Matter Is Adjusted—Trouble Avoided for the Present.

Pekin, March 22.—Count von Waldersee, Gen. Barrow and Gen. Wogack have been in consultation, and Gen. Wogack has agreed to withdraw the Russian troops from the disputed ground at Tien Tsin provided the British also would withdraw. He insisted also upon a guarantee that work on the railway siding should not proceed until the matter had been diplomatically adjusted. This proposal and stipulation were satisfactory to Gen. Barrow and were accepted by him.

Consequently the British and Russian troops will be withdrawn at 5 o'clock this morning, thereby avoiding all trouble at present.

Orders have been issued, however, that no British officer shall leave, or even "sleep out" at night, or go to dinner without furnishing his address to the adjutant.

The marines will return to the ships. Admiral Seymour objects to any of the Australian naval brigad, who volunteered for service on the railway, remaining. The military authorities say he does not understand the situation, that his interference is uncalled for and that the Australian marines are just the men needed.

The Russians have ordered a regiment to proceed from Port Arthur to Tien Tsin.

The arrangements made by Gen. Bailloud, the French commander, are regarded as completely satisfactory, and all danger of a collision between the British and French is considered obviated.

Berlin, March 22.—"Negotiations are now being carried on between the St. Petersburg and London cabinets," said a high German official, "to adjust peaceably the Tien Tsin affair. There is no reason to indulge in serious fears. Perhaps also other mediating influences will be brought to bear to prevent the differences becoming acute; but even now it is certain that Great Britain and Russia will not quarrel seriously over a strip of land at Tien Tsin."

The German press continues to regard the case in a similar light. "It is noteworthy," says the Vossische Zeitung, "that all the alarming news on the subject comes from English sources, especially from those papers which have all along tried anti-German intrigues. However, the main thing is that both the Russian and British cabinets are dealing with the case with an honest intention to adjust it amicably."

The National Zeitung says: "Both the Russian and British governments and the military authorities are evidently peaceably inclined. Hence no fear need be felt."

The Lokal Anzeiger remarks: "Except in London, where a nervous feeling exists, everybody, including all the cabinets of the allied powers and the members of the diplomatic corps at Pekin will continue to remain cool. Now that the matter has been removed from the hands of the soldiers into those of the diplomats the trouble will soon be at an end."

The Kreuz Zeitung ridicules English fears regarding the matter, emphasizing the "anxious inquiries of the English papers as to the whereabouts of Count von Waldersee, who had hitherto enjoyed little popularity in the British press;" and the conservative organ then proceeds to say:

"The fact that Count von Weldersee left Tien Tsin an hour after his arrival was alone sufficient to show that the case was not as dangerous as it was painted."

The Freissinnige Zeitung expresses satisfaction that Count von Waldersee has kept Germany out of the quarrel.

The officer commanding the German troops in Pekin cables to the war office here that owing to the complaints of the inhabitants, a band of robbers has been dispersed by Capt. Preiss, with a squadron of cavalry, at a village 48 kilometers west of Pao-Ting-Fu. Seven of the robbers were killed and wounded; the others were imprisoned and handed over to the Chinese court for trial.

Major von Muelmann has started from Pao-Ting-Fu with three companies of infantry, a squadron of cavalry and a train of mountain artillery for a place to the eastward of Tao-Ma-Kuan. He is proceeding against a large band of robbers.

London, March 22.—"It is generally believed that Russia will procure a secret treaty with China," says the Pekin correspondent of the Daily Mail, "fully establishing her prior claim to the disputed concession at Tien Tsin. Unfortunately, this dispute is only an isolated instance of the friction of the interests between the two powers. The other instances have not obtained such prominence."

Heavy Snow Storm.

London, March 22.—The first day of spring was characterized by a gale and a heavy snow storm sweeping over the channel. A storm has been raging for three days over the North sea. Wintry weather is general through central Europe. Owing to the gale in the channel more than 30 steamers are anchored off South End. The vessels are so crowding the anchorage that several minor collisions have occurred.

A PARTIAL STATEMENT.

Police Report of the Recent Trouble With Students and Laborers.

St. Petersburg, March 22.—It is significant that though the police report on the recent riots, published as expressly stated, in order to correct false rumors concerning the riots, does not deny the most serious of the rumors circulated, which are to the effect that men and women were killed here and elsewhere. The report does not mention the subject of the students. It gives, however, the names of four who died here, including one woman. The report is not generally credited with being an impartial statement. It is claimed that the passage lating to the disturbance in the hurch is particularly distorted, manifestly, it is said, as to prejudice the asses against the students, the intelectual element and the factory workmen. The statements that students tered the church smoking cigarettes, at a student struck a priest, and other student caught the chief iest rudely by the arm, are discred ed by eye witnesses. The facts are, e trouble occurred entirely outside e church until the Cossacks pressed 0 persons into the church and ght them to the back wall. It is so denied that holy water was used dress wounds. The students sent a urch servant expressly for other wa r. It is learned now that the police ot only prepared for the event themlves but made previous arrangeents at one of the hospitals for the ticipated wounded. They also had rriages ready in neighboring court rds.

THE MATCH RACE.

Now The Abbott's Owner Is Willing, But Boralma's Is Not.

New York, March 22.—Fire Commissioner John J. Scannell announced Thursday afternoon that he had decided to agree to the condition stipulated by Thomas W. Lawson of Boston that the proposed race between the trotters, The Abbott and Boralma, should be for four heats in seven. Mr. Scannell made the following statement:

"A misunderstanding having arisen between Mr. Lawson and myself as to the terms and conditions of the proposed match for $25,000 a side, with the privilege of increasing the sum to 50,000, between The Abbott and Boalma, and being anxious to gratify the desire which the public seems to ave for a contest, I am willing to aive my objections to the proposion of Mr. Lawson, that the race hould be for four heats in seven. I o not believe in subjecting so valuble a horse to such a strain, but as I ave already conceded everything else ontended for by Mr. Lawson, I have ecided to make this last concession nd have deposited a certified check or $10,000 to bind the match. I am orry that any misunderstanding hould ever have arisen, and I am ure that the owner of Boralma will ppreciate my sincerity when he realzes that I have conceded everything hat he has asked for."

Boston, March 22.—Thos. W. Lawon said last night when asked if there as any possibility that a race might e arranged between Boralma and The bbott: "I will not reopen the matter. As I said in my statement of Wednesday evening, the incident is closed. When Mr. Scannell said he would race ny horse in the world for any number f heats from seven to twenty, I took im at his word. It was immaterial to e how many heats there were in the ace. I would have been willing to ace three in five heats if he had so tated at first, but when he said he ould race The Abbott four in seven accepted that offer. When he talked with me over the telephone this was erfectly understood. Then when my representative was ready to sign the greement objection was made to four heats in seven, and he was told that The Abbott would not be raced four heats in seven. Now I don't do business in that way. When I give my word I keep it, and when Mr. Scannell announced that he would not race The Abbott as he had agreed to then, as far as I was concerned, the race was off. Under no circumstances will I take up the matter again—no matter in what form it comes to me."

Confessed Cudahy Kidnaping.

Dallas, Tex., March 22.—Sheriff Johnson last night made this statement: "H. C. Henderson last evening confessed to me and County Attorney Summers that he is one of the Cudahy kidnapers. His confession was made voluntarily. He stated that he had squandered and used in fleeing from Omaha most of the money he got as his share in the kidnaping job before I arrested him in this city as a suspect early in February. County Attorney Summers asked Henderson why he d not admitted his identity earlier, nd he said: 'Heretofore when I have een in trouble I have had a man beween me and the court-house. But ow I see there is no chance for me to et out of 13 years' sentence on my onvictions here in Dallas for theft, nd I might as well own up to the maha job.'"

AN INSANE MOTHER

Murdered Her Six Children With an Axe and Club.

THEN CUTS HER OWN THROAT

Her Wounds Will Not Prove Fatal—She Locked the Doors and Then Proceeds With Her Bloody Deed—The Father Prostrated With Grief.

Coldbrook, Mass., March 22.—Mrs. Lizzie Naramore, while in a fit of insanity Thursday afternoon, killed her six children at her home, a farm house half a mile from this village, and then tried to take her own life. The children ranged from 10 years to 10 months, and their lives were taken by the mother with an ax and a club. She laid the blood-drenched bodies on the beds, two on one bed and the other four on a bed in another room, and then attempted to take her own life by cutting her throat with a razor. When discovered she was in the bed on which the bodies of four children were lying. Although she cut a deep gash in her throat and suffered the loss of much blood, it is believed she will recover.

Frank Naramore, the husband and father, left his home at the usual hour yesterday morning to go to his work at a sawmill, and at that time his wife did not attract his attention by acting strangely. It is supposed the crime was committed shortly after noon, the discovery being made by George Thrasher, an employe of a grocery store, who visited the Naramore house about 2:45 o'clock for the purpose of delivering groceries that had previously been ordered by Mrs. Naramore. He was unable to get in the house by the door and he looked in a window and noticed blood on the floor, while Mrs. Naramore was lying on a bed. He was surprised also in the absence of the children, whom he was accustomed to see playing in or about the house. He returned to this village and told of what he had seen.

A party was made up and a hasty visit was made to the Naramore house. An entrance was effected without delay and the mutilated bodies of the six children in two beds were found. Mrs. Naramore was alive, but was very weak from loss of blood. She was removed to the village hotel and at a late hour in the evening the attending physicians were confident that she would survive.

During the evening a number of neighbors of the family saw and talked with Mrs. Naramore, and to them she told how she killed her six children. At the time the party of villagers found Mrs. Naramore she was asked how she did the deed, and she said that she took the lives in four different rooms, and as fast as she killed one child the body was placed in a bed.

The children were three boys and three girls. Ethel, 10 years of age, the oldest, while the ages of Walter, Charlie, Chester, Bessie and Lena ranged from eight years to ten months. Mrs. Naramore told her most intimate friends that she first killed Ethel and then followed with the five others, each time taking the next eldest. Five were killed by being struck on the head with the back of an ax, while Lena was killed with a club. She says she fully expected the gash in her throat would cause her death and that when her husband returned at night he would find all of the bodies in the two beds. She appeared rational last evening and displayed signs of sorrow for the deeds she had committed, although she is unable to give any reason for killing the children.

When Mr. Naramore reached the house he was prostrated with grief by the loss of his family.

Each of the children had evidently received several blows, as their heads were terribly bruised and blood was scattered in all directions about the rooms. Mrs. Naramore had evidently made preparations for the deed, as the doors were all locked and barred with sticks of wood.

Taken Into Court.

Washington, March 22.—Formal notice has been received of the institution of legal proceedings in Venezuela to settle the asphalt controversy. The representatives of the Warner-Quinlan syndicate on Feb. 1 brought suit in the high court of Venezuela for the issuance of a summons against the New York and Bermudez company to secure possession of the La Felicidad concession. The high court has not been in full session up to the present time and so has not been able to act upon the petition, and it is not known here when a full bench will be had. The New York & Bermudez Co. is in possession of the asphalt lake.

Fight to a Finish.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., March 22.—Efforts to effect a settlement of the differences between the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern and its employes have signally failed, and it now looks as though there would be a fight to the finish. Vice-President Robert Williams received a committee representing the Cedar Rapids Federation of Labor and bodies of machinists Thursday. The conference lasted for two hours and resulted in a determination of both company and men to make no concessions, so far as the introduction of the piece work system is concerned.

Cause of Death.

Traverse City, Mich., March 22.—A coroner's inquest was held yesterday on the remains of Miss Ardie Potts, who died Wednesday night from the results of an alleged criminal operation. The jury found that death was due to such an operation. The father, who is said to be responsible for the condition of the girl, is still in jail and is unable to secure bail. The circumstances surrounding the case suggest a very serious situation for the father, as well as the physician who performed the operation.

AFTER INDECENT PICTURES.

Mrs. Nation Urges Women to Make Crusade Against Them.

Kansas City, March 22.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, the anti-saloon crusader, addressing an open meeting of the W. C. T. U. in this city Thursday, urged the members to begin a crusade against the indecent pictures that hang on the walls of saloons. In a spirited speech, she told them that they should not be mere "seat warmers," but active workers in the cause of morality and decency. "But, Mother Nation," complained a W. C. T. U. woman, "haven't we taken down those pictures again and again without succeeding in keeping them down? What are we to do:"

Instantly came the reply: "If you wash your face one day, does that remove the obligation for the next day?" "You must wash and wash and clean and clean. You must not rest, you must not tire."

While no action was taken several women spoke in defense of Mrs. Nation's efforts against saloons.

Earlier in the day Mrs. Nation had entered a down-town saloon and caused a nude picture to be removed from the wall.

"If I had my hatchet," she said, "I would go through the place."

A police officer escorted her out of the place, and upon her promise to do no smashing Mrs. Nation was released without being taken to the station. Later Mrs. Nation talked to a gathering of newsboys.

Topeka, Kan., March 22.—Mrs. Carrie Nation has signed a contract for six lectures to be given in Cincinnati. She will receive $100 for each of the lectures and all her expenses.

WINTER WHEAT CROPS.

Reports Show the Condition of the Growing Grain Favorable.

New York, March 22.—Dun's review on March 23 will say of the condition of the winter wheat crop:

"Reports from the branches and a large number of correspondents, in the winter wheat belt, show the condition of the growing grain generally favorable. In Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois the acreage is reduced owing to partial failure last year, and the mild winter in some sections has been unfavorable. Fears are expressed in some quarters that the ravage of the Hessian fly will be serious, especially if the present dry weather continues. In scattered sections of Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee the grain was winter-killed, and farmers are plowing it under. Dry weather during the fall months did much damage in Kentucky, and in Tennessee the changeable weather of the early winter and lack of rain causing considerable injury. In Illinois the wet weater is now helping grain, and it is hoped a continuation will enable the grain to outgrow the fly; in Michigan the acreage is less than last year, but as the grain wintered well this will not materially reduce the crop. The best reports come from the southwest. In Missouri the grain has wintered well and a large yield is expected. In Kansas, Oklahoma and the pan-handle and Texas there is a considerable increase and the condition of the grain was never better; wet weather has prevented damage by the fly. In other parts of Texas the acreage has been reduced, the grain wintered well but ravage by insects is feared."

Registered Mails for Europe.

Washington, March 22.—As soon as correspondence can be had with the various European governments, this government will send out on the mail-carrying steamers eight registered mails instead of one, as at present, these being made up separately at New York, Boston, Washington, Chicago, St. Louis and other cities centrally located and sent directly instead of through the New York office. The mails from Europe in turn, instead of being concentrated in New York, as now, will be forwarded in direct closed sacks to the European countries to cities mentioned.

Entitled to Land.

Washington, March 22.—Assistant Secretary Taylor has taken action in the case of two Englishmen who arrived in this country late in February under a contract to enter the employ of a Philadelphia lace establishment to make bobbinet lace. Objection was made to their admission on the ground that their coming was in violation of the alien contract labor law. Mr. Taylor finds that bobbinet lacemaking is a new industry in this country, and therefore the men are entitled to land under the law which admits laborers to be employed in a new industry.

Admiral Kempff's Flagship.

Washington, March 22.—The battleship Kentucky, which recently arrived at Cavite from the United States, has been assigned by the navy department to the flagship of Rear Admiral Kempff in place of the Newark, which has been ordered home to be repaired at the New York navy yard.

The Minister Won.

A minister was one day walking along a road, and, to his astonishment, he saw a crowd of boys sitting in front of a ring with a small dog in the center. When he came up to them, he put the following question: "What are you doing to the dog?"

One little boy said, "Whoever tells the biggest lie wins it."

"Oh," said the minister, "I am surprised at you little boys, for when I was like you I never told a lie."

There was silence for awhile until one of the boys shouted, "Hand him up the dog!"—London Leader.

MY CAPTIVE.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER,
Author of "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Sun of Saratoga," Etc.

[Copyright, 1900, by Joseph A. Altsheler.]

"Indeed I do," she [illegible] recognition, "and I hope [illegible] meet again soon under [illegible] peaceful circumstances, but now I must hasten on, for my message will not wait, and so must this kind soldier, who has been such an assistance and protection to me. Can you direct us by the best road to Tarleton?"

"Keep straight on the way you are going," said the officer, "and if you hurry you ought to overtake Tarleton before noon. Have no fear of the rebels, for Tarleton is driving them all ahead of him, except one small party to the south of here, for which we are looking. I'd give you an escort into Tarleton's camp, but I need all my troopers for the task I have in hand."

"I thank you for your courtesy and information, Lieutenant Cuthbert," she replied, "and I hope that we will meet again soon in Charleston when all these rebels are taken."

"And that will not be long, Miss Howard," he said, with a gallant bow.

He gave the word to his troopers, and they galloped on.

During this ordeal the behavior of Old Put was something wonderful to see. Though he hated a redcoat as a cat hates a snake, he seemed to understand that he had a part to act and that he must act it well. All his true character disappeared. He was a shambling, drooping horse, with his head down and ready to submit to anything, just an ordinary, oppressed British horse of the lower classes, not a proud spirited American horse, conscious of the Declaration of Independence and the truth that all men and horses are born free and equal.

But when the last of the British troops had disappeared around the hill and the gallop of their horses had sunk into a mere echo Old Put resumed his former and true character—his figure expanded, he held up his head once more. He was the true patriot, equal to all. I was glad to see the change, for that was the character in which I liked him best

We went on for a long time in silence, barring a request from the girl that I ride and let her walk in my place. I declined abruptly, saying I was a cavalryman, with such few opportunities for walking that I intended to enjoy one when I had it.

The sun, following the new light in the east, had appeared above the hills. The far crests and forests flamed with red gold, and we trod silently on in the shining light of the morning. "Why did you not take your opportunity," I asked at length, "and return to your own people? Why did you not tell them back there who and what I was?"

She remained silent, and I looked back at her.

"Julia," I said, and she did not seem to notice that I had called her by her first name again despite her command, "why did you not tell them who I was and let them take me a prisoner?"

"I have called you a rebel, with a noose around your neck, and it is true. The noose is always there, and it was pressing very close then. For you to have been taken a prisoner then meant your death. I could have taken the chance of returning to my own people then only by hanging you."

"How? I do not understand you."

"Look at the red coat you wear. 'A spy!' says Tarleton, who knows no mercy. 'Hang him at once!' and you are hanged."

I had forgotten the coat, which, having served me well twice, might serve me very ill the third time.

"I must get rid of this coat soon," I said. Then I added as an afterthought: "But what is it to you were I hanged? It would be only one more wicked rebel meeting the fate that he deserves. Why should you put yourself to trouble for me?"

I looked back over my shoulder, though I may not have had the appearance of looking. I saw a flush as of the morning that was around us overspread her face, and she looked afar over my head, her eyes shining with something I had not seen there before. I asked her no more, but the morning continued to grow into a splendor and radiance passing all previous knowledge of mine.

The sun crept up, and the light reached all the earth, west as well as the east. We were still in the red clay road, winding among lone hills and deserted fields and patches of primitive forests. We came to a brook of cool, clear water, babbling over the stones.

"Here we rest," I said, "and eat breakfast. Jump down, Julia."

She sprang down, and all three drank at the brook—Julia, Old Put and I. Then we ate the remains of our provisions, while the horse found some tender stems of grass by the brookside.

"I think we had better leave the road now," I said, "for this is the enemy's country, and I do not want to meet any more of Tarleton's men."

It was my purpose to make a circuit around Tarleton and join Morgan, and she made no objection, but suggested that she walk with me.

"I am tired of riding," she said, "and it will be good for the horse too."

I threw the bridle reins over Old Put's head, told him to follow us, and we started on our great curve around Tarleton. Being a Charleston man, I knew very little of that part of the country, but in my campaigning with Greene and Morgan I had obtained some idea of the lay of the land, and I knew the general course I ought to follow. Besides, I felt very good, and I was full of enthusiasm. But little of the country had been cultivated, and as the forest was not dense there was nothing to stay our progress. We marched steadily on, and what impressed us most was the desolation of the land. But thinly peopled in the first place, everybody here, as in the country through which we had traveled the day previous, had fled before the advance of the armies. We passed two abandoned cabins in the scanty fields, but saw no other sign of human habitation. Yet it did not sadden me. The sunshine was beautiful, and the old world was fresh and young.

"In a few years, Julia," I said, "when the last of Tarleton's raiders is sent across the sea or to his final home and we win our freedom, all this will be peaceful and populated."

She said nothing—nothing about the valor of the English and the speedy destruction of the rebels—but looked abroad over the country with kindling eyes. It was fair to see, even in winter, with its rolling hills and sloping valleys and streams of sparkling water, a fit place for a noble race of freemen to grow. But just then it was the most unhappy part of all our continent. Neither man nor woman could expect mercy where Tarleton's raiders came, and all the books will tell you, and tell you rightly, that the war was more ferocious in the south than in the north and most ferocious of all on the soil of South Carolina. Where partisan bands ravage and fight and the people of the soil themselves are set and imbittered against each other then war is seen at its worst.

CHAPTER IX.

SEEN IN A DREAM.

We were young and vigorous. The girl was tall, straight, almost as strong as I, and mile after mile dropped behind us. The air had the crisp, fresh coolness of a South Carolina winter, like a northern day in autumn. The sun, climbing steadily toward the heavens, shone in full splendor and in an atmosphere as pure as that over the sea. We could see far to the right and to the left and before us, but we saw neither men nor horses, just the rolling hills and valleys and the straggling forests.

"So much the better," I said to Julia, "for the lonelier the country is the less obstacle there will be to our flight. Morgan is retreating toward the Broad river, and as we surely have passed around Tarleton by this time we ought to overtake him by night. I hope he will have plenty to eat, for I think that you and I will miss our dinner."

"Do you know," said she, "I begin to hope that Tarleton will not overtake Morgan at all? It would be an awful scene, and perhaps some of the rebels are good men after all."

"Perhaps."

"Couldn't the war be ended in some way without more years of fighting—by some sort of compromise? Suppose each side should give up a little."

"We might make the proposition, you and I, to congress and the king."

"Don't jest. I'm in earnest."

"Then I'm afraid there's no chance for a compromise, and there hasn't been for four or five years. Either we go free or we do not. You English like to boast of your courage and tenacity, and we make the same boast of ourselves. It has to be fought out to the end, win or lose."

"I am sorry."

She spoke truthfully, for she looked her sadness, but the wind soon blew it away, bringing back the sparkle to her eyes and the rose flush to her cheeks. We stopped about noontime to rest, and Old Put made use of the opportunity to hunt for green grass, stopping at times to look benevolently at us and to indicate that his state of mind was content. We were both hungry, but we had nothing better to do than to watch Old Put nibble for his dinner, which he did very industriously until I called to him and told him it was time to start.

Julia again refused to mount the horse, and we strolled on together. I felt safe now, and, coming to a cabin whose owner had been bold enough to remain and guard his own, I offered to trade him the fine British coat I wore for any coat of his own, however old, provided it would hold together on my shoulders. He produced the coat and made the trade, by which he was a great gainer, and asked me no questions, differing therein from the country people of the northern regions through which I had campaigned so long. Moreover, he looked very curiously at the tall girl with me.

"You are American," he said to me just before we started.

"Yes."

"The lady looks English."

"She is English."

"It is very strange."

"You are right. It is strange."

Such were my thoughts as we walked away. The man who seemed to live there alone, half hunter, half farmer, stood in his cabin door and watched us until we passed out of sight.

I prevailed upon the girl to ride for awhile, but after an hour on horseback she dismounted again, saying that she preferred to walk. About the middle of the afternoon we met a farmer who confirmed my belief that Morgan had passed on toward the Broad river, though he knew nothing of Tarleton. An hour later as we were passing through thick woods some one cried out to us to halt. I almost sprang up in my astonishment, and the girl uttered a little cry of fright, for neither of us supposed any one to be near, having seen nothing and heard nothing, and Old Put, I suppose, was tired or dreaming.

"Stop," I said to Julia. "It may be friends."

Two men on horseback came from a position among the dense trees. They were dressed in rough homespun gray and looked like Americans, the two facts together inducing the belief that they were militia scouts of Morgan's.

"An American and his lady," said the foremost to me. "You are a soldier, are you not?"

"Yes," I replied.

"And on the way to Morgan, too, I take it. Keep straight to the northwest, and you will overtake him. We are good patriots too."

"Thank you," I said. "Morgan seems to keep a good watch. I hope that we will overtake him before nightfall."

He had ridden very close to me.

"I don't think it, my fine fellow," he said. "We will take good care of both you and the lady, for we are Tarleton's scouts, not Morgan's."

I saw then that the appearance and manner of the men had deceived me, but no thought of surrender to them entered my mind. I snatched at my pistol. The man, who was as wary as a panther, saw the movement, and, drawing his own weapon, we fired almost at the same time. I saw him reel in his saddle, but not fall, and I was conscious of a thrill of pain in my head, followed by a heavy, crushing sensation, as if I had been struck by a hammer. I staggered, falling to the ground upon my hands and knees. Consciousness left me entirely for a few minutes and then came back dimly, just enough for me to dream and to create events for myself.

In this dream I saw a girl with tawny gold hair and blue eyes raise a pistol and fire at the second man, who had drawn a cavalry saber. The man, shouting with pain, dropped his saber, clapped his other hand to his shoulder and galloped after his comrade, whose horse, frightened by the shots, was running away with him. Both disappeared in the wood, and the girl, who stood for a minute or two watching, the empty pistol in her hand, seemed to feel sure that they would not come back, for she rushed to the wounded man on the ground and raised his head in her arms.

I watched her with a curious interest, this blond girl who had been so bitter of speech and yet so much the master of herself. The man had risen to his knees once, but had fallen back from weakness. His eyes closed almost, his face became very white, and there was blood on his hair. She raised his head and kissed his face, once, twice and more, and begged him not to die. "Live! Live for yourself and for me, Philip, for I love you, my hero!" she said, and a great bay horse stood looking and listening. Then she flew to a little brook she saw flowing through the wood, and bringing water in her cap poured it upon the man's face, while the horse nodded approval. Then she washed the blood out of his hair and bound up the wound with something white. "No, Put, I will never leave him," she said. "I will never leave him, for he has saved me from death and worse, and I love him—I tell you I love him!" whereupon the great horse nodded his approval with extreme vigor.

I came to myself, and I was sorry that the dream was over. It had been pleasant, very pleasant, and I was willing to dream on. I had a headache, but when I put my hand to the spot which ached I knew that the wound was not serious; that it was nothing but a trifle. A bullet, clipping under the skin, had glanced along my skull and passed on, inflicting a slight concussion, like a heavy blow from a man's fist, but that was all. I had seen 20 men who had suffered similar wounds in battle and were as good as ever the next day.

"You are not going to die, are you, Mr. Marcel?" tearfully asked the most modest and demure of blond English maidens, standing before me.

"My intentions are the precise opposite," I replied. "I have so much to live for."

It is curious how rapidly the feelings develop under the stress of great hardships and danger. The day and a half that I had been with her were equal to a year and a half of ordinary time.

"Would you bring me a little of that cool water to drink in your cap?" I asked. "I see that the cap is wet already, and it won't hurt it."

She brought the water, and I drank. It was as cold as ice and as refreshing as nectar as it ran down my throat. I have seen men lying on the battlefield begging for water as if it were the one great gift of heaven to man.

I felt twice the man that I was a minute before. The girl was strangely quiet, even shy, and more than ever I felt as if it were my chief duty to protect her.

"No, Julia," I said; "this rebel against the king means to live. So far from dying, I haven't had anything more than a knockdown which has left a sore spot on my head and a little ache inside it, but I can travel as well as ever. Here, Old Put is waiting for you. Get up and ride."

But she declined with indignation.

"I will not do that," she said. "You may be a rebel—in fact, I know you are—but you shall not walk while you are wounded. You must ride."

As I was still a little dizzy I yielded at last, though I did not like to do it, and rode for a couple of hours. Then, feeling as strong as ever, I dismounted and made Julia take her turn on horseback. But at the end of an hour she, too, dismounted, and we walked on together, as before, not talking much, but happy. The sun was again retreating before the night, and the western skies were aflame. The light fell full upon the girl's face, and her beauty, splendid and glowing before, was tender and spiritual now.

"We shall be in Morgan's camp soon, Julia," I said, "and I will have to resign my prisoner."

"I shall consider myself your prisoner until I am retaken by the English," she said.

I did not reply, but I was willing to accept my responsibilities.

Old Put, who was walking slowly behind us after his custom, raised his head and neighed. It was not a whinny, but a loud, sonorous neigh that could be heard afar. It was full of meaning too. And a quarter of a mile ahead of us on one of the open ridges I saw the cause—a troop of a dozen horsemen riding toward us at a half gallop. Old Put neighed again, long, loud and promptly.

"Ought we not to escape into the wood?" exclaimed Julia in alarm. "There is time yet. Those troopers may be English."

She did not seem to notice the strangeness of a suggestion from her that she hide from the English, but I was confident.

"They are not English," I said. "They are Americans. Old Put knows his friends. Trust him."

In truth, the horse uttered his loud and joyous neigh a third time, and I had not the slightest apprehension, for it was impossible to deceive Old Put when he was wide awake.

The horsemen saw us and quickened their pace to a gallop. As they approached I could recognize the Continental buff and blue, and, telling Julia that it was all right, we walked gravely on to meet them. Old Put, his demonstrations of joy made, followed after with equal sobriety.

They were dashing riders, those men, and their curiosity must have been aroused by the sight of the girl, for they came on at the long, swinging gallop of the good cavalryman and quickly inclosed us.

"Good evening, colonel," I said to the leader, saluting. "I am happy to see you again and to join your command."

It was Colonel William Washington, the distant cousin of our great commander in chief, one of the finest cavalry commanders of our time, a fine, open faced man of about 30.

"Why, Marcel—Phil Marcel!" he cried in surprise. "Is it you?"

"Yes, it is I, colonel."

"And the lady?"

"The lady is my prisoner, colonel, an English spy!"

"Did she give you that wound on your head?"

"I said a lady, colonel."

Every hat came off, and there was admiration as well as respect in the bow that each trooper made.

"The lady carried the news of our most important movements," I said, "and I was compelled to hold her a prisoner."

"You have done well, Mr. Marcel," said my colonel.

I thought so too. Perhaps I had done better than I thought.

"Now that I have brought the prisoner in," I said, "I will have to resign her into your hands, colonel."

"It will be but for a brief space, for the camp of Morgan is only three miles back. There are some American women there who will take care of her."

"But I wish to remind you of one thing, colonel."

"What is that?"

"A lady cannot be shot or hanged as a spy, even though she be a spy."

He laughed the deep, hearty laugh that I like to hear from a man.

"Have no fear," he said. "We are Americans."

Then he laughed again that deep, resonant laugh which I like.

"I will send two men back with you and the prisoner, but I am on a scout to find Tarleton and ascertain when he is likely to attack us."

"Do we mean to make a stand?" I asked.

For the third time he laughed.

"Why, boy," he said, "you don't expect Morgan, who was with Arnold, the hero of Saratoga, to run away, do you? He only wanted a little time to drill his men and get his grip on them, and now he's ready to welcome Tarleton to the fray."

"Then you will have Tarleton by morning," I said, and I explained all that I had heard, or learned otherwise in my flight with the prisoner, to which he listened with an interest that indicated its importance and made me feel mine.

KEPT TALLY ON FIBS.

THE ASTONISHING RESULT OF ONLY ONE DAY OF COUNTING.

An Investigator's Discovery of What an Enormous Bouquet of the Flowers of Fable Adorns the Daily Speech of the Average Mortal.

"Do you know that the average American is a hopeless and incorrigible and unmitigated liar?" said an amateur cynic of Baronne street. "I don't mean he lies viciously, but suave mendacity glides off the end of his tongue as easily as molasses flows from a spigot on a warm day in summer. He does it unconsciously, habitually, automatically—just as his lungs expand and his heart palpitates and his hair grows, without any special attention from the rest of his system. He does it because he can't help it. The thing has become a second nature.

"I had all this brought home to me," continued the amateur cynic, "by a very simple little experiment which I tried on myself and a few others no longer ago than yesterday morning. Did you ever see a pocket counting machine? Well, it's a little device shaped like a watch. Whenever you press the stem the needle on the dial jumps a point, and it registers in that way up to several thousand on the principle of a cyclometer. They are used by anybody making long counts and are very handy, because they never forget where they leave off.

"But, to come to the point, something happened to remind me of our national vice of untruthfulness as I was getting up yesterday, and I determined to 'keep tab' on myself and ascertain, if possible, how many actual, out and out lies I put into circulation in the course of the day. I chanced to have one of the little counting machines I have just mentioned, so I slipped it into my pocket and started out.

"The first lie I told was right at the door. Smithson was passing and stopped to shake hands. 'Hello, old man!' said I. 'Delighted to see you,' when as a matter of fact I was deuced sorry to see him, because I owe him ten. I gave the counter a squeeze and hurried on, but before I got to the office I had jogged it nine times.

"What did I jog it for, did you ask? Oh, trivialities, mere trivialities, but at the same time point blank lies, every one of 'em. Whenever I opened my mouth out dropped some confounded hyperbole. I told Jones the joke he insisted in springing on me was the 'best I ever heard' and then made a double tally in assuring his wife she was looking remarkably well when she was looking exactly like a scarecrow. I told another friend I never laughed so much in my life as I had at something or other, I don't remember now what, and still another that I hadn't slept a wink for three nights when I had neuralgia lately—all lies, bald lies, in spite of their harmlessness.

"When I reached the office and looked at the dial, I was horrified. 'Good heavens!' I said to myself. 'It seems to be physically impossible for me to speak the plain truth in the paltriest matters. I'll just remain perfectly quiet for half an hour and keep check on Boggs.'

"Boggs is our head bookkeeper and a pillar in one of the suburban churches," continued the amateur cynic. "He wears rubber overshoes in wet weather, cultivates sandy side whiskers, carries a gingham umbrella, belongs to a building and loan association and has all the other marks of severe respectability. I had supposed him to be the quintessence of cast iron veracity, but when I sat down in cold blood to put him on record I was astounded at the blase fashion with which he frivoled with the truth. I pushed the button on him 15 times in 27 minutes; then he got into a whispered conversation with a caller, and I lost the thread of his remarks. But I am certain if I had been in earshot the counter would have had hard work keeping up with the procession.

"That relieved my mind somewhat, and later on, when I made a quiet test of several of the other fellows in the office, I came to the conclusion that I was no worse than the average, but the average was pretty tough. As far as my investigations went, the invoice clerk held the record. He is a guileless sort of chap, with modest manners and a freckled nose, and I never supposed he had any imagination concealed in his peg topped cranium, but he forced me to push the indicator up exactly 22 times in 15 minutes. During the last part of the stretch, however, he was trying to trade off a secondhand bicycle, and that naturally swelled the returns.

"Of course I soon realized that the idea of keeping count on my own mendacity was entirely impractical and abandoned the effort, but the other data has furnished me with abundant food for thought. My brother-in-law, by the way, insists that we would make a great mistake in trying to weed these flowers of fable out of our daily speech. He says we lie continually and systematically because everybody else lies, and a man who would start out to tell the plain, cold, raw, rectangular truth about everything in life would be little better than an anarchist. He would upset all established standards of value and make it necessary almost to recast the language. Besides, nobody would believe him. But my brother-in-law is a doctor," added the amateur cynic thoughtfully, "and maybe that makes a difference."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Question of Ethics.

"Be truthful," said the teacher.

"Always?" asked the boy.

"Always," answered the teacher.

"Never tell a lie?"

"Never."

"Not even a white lie?"

"Not even a white lie."

"Huh!" ejaculated the lad scornfully. "It's a mighty good thing for you you ain't a boy with my dad for a father."

"Why?" asked the teacher.

"Because," replied the boy, "if you was my dad's little boy an you'd heard what he said about Aunt Eliza comin to visit us with her children an Aunt Eliza had asked you if you weren't all glad to see her an you'd told the truth, like I did, you'd think there was a place where your trousers was mighty thin after dad got through with you."

He went back to his desk, and as he sat down with great care there was an expression on his face that showed the great lesson of truth had been, at least in a measure, lost on him. And in his indignation and innocence he did not appreciate the humor associated with the fact that his teacher did not belong to that division of the human race that wears trousers.—Chicago Post.

Curious Picture Frames.

In many churches of Provence and Italy, especially those near the sea, ex voto paintings placed on the walls in accordance with vows made by pilgrims in moments of danger are often remarkable for their frames. Among the curiosities may be enumerated laths formed of splinters from ships that have been wrecked; also frames made of pieces of heavy cables, occasionally painted bright hues, but sometimes left in their primitive gray color and splashed with tar. Nailed to the laths surrounding a painting representing sailors fighting with fierce savages may be seen African or Polynesian spears and darts or swords made of hard wood, evidently mementos of terrific struggles. Sailors or landsmen who have made vows during times of peril at sea and who have no trophies to display will surround their paintings with broad bands of wood heavily incrusted with shells and seaweed, not infrequently of rare and extremely beautiful kinds.—London People's Friend.

A Reasonable Inquiry.

"Have you heard from 'Old Boomerang' since she went home?" asked Mr. Tucker, putting his feet on the table.

"I want you to stop calling mamma 'Old Boomerang,'" said Mrs. Tucker. "What makes you call her that?"

"Why, I was just wondering when she was coming back, that's all," answered Mr. Tucker. "You needn't get sore about it."—Indianapolis Sun.

Juvenile Logic.

Norman's mamma was something of a stickler for propriety, and she was not a little annoyed that it seemed impossible to make the boy give his uncle's name the customary handle. One day after the little fellow had met with a severer reproof than usual for this shortcoming of his he said:

"I mean to be good, mamma, but I don't see why I should say Uncle Harry. I don't say Uncle Papa, do I?"—New York Mail and Express.

More In Sorrow Than Anger.

"What did you hit him with?"

Messrs. Jno J. Spencer and H. L. Brentnall, of Saginaw, were in Tecumseh last Tuesday seeing about the purchase of Temple, McClure & Co.'s planning mill and lumber business. The HERALD does not know if anything come of the conference or indeed if Temple, McClure & Co. desire to sell. This concern has always enjoyed a good trade and we see no reason for them desiring to discontine the business. Still Tecumseh is a good point, which is, no doubt, the reason of the investigation of the Saginaw men.

RAILROAD NEWS.

General Superintendent McKelvey, of the Ohio Southern Railway, who has just returned from the east, admitted today that there probably will be a consolidation of the Ohio Southern and the Detroit & Lima Northern within 60 days. According to Mr. Kelvey, the Clover Leaf is not in the deal.—Toledo Blade.

If the Lima Northern and Ohio Southern should be consolidated, this would make a through line from the Ohio river to Detroit and would in many ways help Tecumseh. The Ohio Southern railroad shops are much too small for the work of that road and with the additional trains and freight on the Lima Northern and the help it will be necessary for this road to give to the Ohio Southern double force, will have to be run in the shops at Tecumseh.

A freight train was derailed on the D. & L. N. at South Adrian Wednesday afternoon. The wreck was cleared up, however, by ten o'clock p. m. but it delayed both the north and southbound passengers.

Late "New" Items from The Tecumseh News.

Easter comes one week from next Sunday.

The kids playing marbles is another harbinger of spring.

Several wearers of the green were seen on the streets Sunday.

The Easter bonnet will soon be here in all its glory.

A heavy snow storm is prevailing today and the thermometer indicates a cold wave.

Thirteen Years.

Thirteen years ago today James Montague started in the novelty store business in his present location. For last four years he has been manager of the business and today the store is filled with the best assortment of stock, so full that there is scarcely room for another article. Hope Mr. Montague will continue to succeed for three times thirteen years more.

A New Man.

Joseph V. Moross is the name of the new watchmaker who came to work for Adamson Bros. yesterday. Mr. Moross was watch inspector for the Wabash R. R. for five years and comes to Tecumseh finely recommended. Adamson Bros have been located in Tecumseh 33 years and it took the firm some time to find a man suitable to trust with their repair work.

Last Meeting.

The last meeting of the present township board will be held at the clerk's office on Tuesday evening, March 26, 1901, at which time all accounts against the township will receive attention. It is the wish of this board to so wind up its affairs that there will be no accounts held over. Kindly send your accounts to either the superviser or clerk.
ALFRED JAMES, Twp. Clerk.

THE SCHOOLS.

Tests have been the order of the day this week.

The classes in botany are studying stem growth this week.

Extracts from the Federalist are being studied by the literature class.

There are 17 aspirants for diplomas this year. Hope they'll all get there.

Vacation comes next week and most of the teachers are looking forward to a week at home.

The Misses Mary and Agnes Eaton and Winnie Wilson called on the East Branch teachers Monday.

The chemistry class is working on the inorganic part twice a week with experiments the other three days.

Among the most faithful of our attendants in the H. S. is "Pug Pope." He is always on hand bright and early.

In Miss Hartbeck's classes German II have taken a final in Wilhelm Tell and are doing a little prose work before beginning Minna VanBarnhelm.

The seniors are divided on the question of commencement exercises: Some want a speaker and others are willing to take part in the exercises. The school board will decide the question.

More shelf room is needed in the library and that room will be closed from Monday till Thursday inclusive next week when a general overhauling will be done. Isn't there a Carnagie in Tecumseh who would like to build for himself a monument by erecting a library building—nothing would be more acceptable to the village.

THE CHURCHES.

Subjects for Sunday, Mar. 24, at Baptist church: Morning, "Unsearchable Riches," evening, "Possibilities of Blessing or Hurt."

At the Presbyterian church next Sunday the paster will speak in the morning on the theme "Apprehended that I may Apprehend." The evening subject will be "Christ before Pilate—Pilate before Christ."

Stops the Cough and works off the Cold

Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets cure a cold in one day. No cure, no pay. Price 25 cents.

Advertised Letters

Remaining uncalled for at the postoffice at Tecumseh, Mich., March 19, 1901:

Miss Stella McDougal J Mudica

All calling for above letters please say "advertised."

LITERARY NOTES.

A vivid light will be thrown on the actual moral status of the police in New York City by Josiah Flynt's article to appear in McClure's for April, until the title "York, a Dishonest City." The present agitation of this subject attaches particular interest to the contribution, while the manner in which the famous author has gained his materials—by close association with the criminals themselves—will make his conclusions of extraordinary value.

* * *

It is said that the powers of either man or woman are developed five-fold by working with a life-companion who is in entire harmony. The ideal wife as a rule has it in her power to make the ideal husband. What constitutes the ideal wife is discussed in an extremely able article by Lavinia Hart in the April Cosmopolitan.

Working 24 Hours a Day.

There's no rest for those tireless little workers—Dr. King's New Life Pills. Millions are always busy, curing Torpid Liver, Jaundice, Billiousness, Fever and Ague. They banish Sick Headache drive out Malaria. Never gripe or weaken. Small, taste nice, work wonders. Try them. 25c at C. A. Wright's.

A Great Newspaper.

The Sunday edition of the St Louis Republic is a marvel of modern newspaper enterprise. The organization of its news service is world-wide, complete in every department; in fact, superior to that of any other newspaper.

The magazine section is illustrated in daintily tinted colors and splendid halftone pictures. This section contains more high-class literary matter than any of the monthly magazines. The fashions illustrated in natural colors are especially valuable to the ladies.

The colored comic section is a genuine laugh maker. The funny cartoons are by the best artists. The humorous stories are high class, by authors of national reputation.

Sheet music, a high-class, popular song, is furnished free every Sunday in The Republic.

The price of Sunday Republic by mail one year is $2 00. For sale by all news dealers.

"The Rounders" Coming to Adrian March 28.

Thos. Q. Seabrooke, America's greatest comic opera comedian, is at head of the original company, which will give the first production in Adrian of Geo. W. Lederer's latest and greatest New York Casino success, "The Rounders," by Harry B. Smith, which was produced at the home theatre early last spring, where it ran for over five months. Mr. Seabrooke achieved a great success in the part of Maginnis Pasha, which he originated. This company appears at the Croswell Thursday, March 28, and is announced by Manager Hardy to be one of the very best in his long list of good things offered this season.

THE DRUMHEAD BUSINESS.

A Huge Long Island Industry Which Prospers by War.

Few people know that more than half the banjo and drum heads sold in the United States are made on Long Island. Near the railroad station at Cold Spring is a little red building surrounded by frames, in which skins are stretched for drying, while near by is an artificial pond, with wooden sides and bottom, filled with a chemical mixture. It is an unpretentious establishment, but in our two wars and in the peace between it has fathered a great deal of noise. The business was established in 1860, and success was almost immediate. Competition was strong after the rush of war orders was over, but the business has advanced in importance until now there are but three factories in this country whose opposition can be felt. Two of these are in Brooklyn and the other at High View, N. Y.

New York markets furnish the salted raw skins from which the drumheads are made. The hair is removed from the skins by a chemical bath in the artificial pond, and the skins are then stretched on the racks and dried. A thorough scraping removes any particles of fat or flesh that may have adhered to the dried skin, which is then the thickness of parchment. The skins are thoroughly bleached in the drying process and are then ready for cutting into heads. During the Spanish-American war the factory was fairly swamped with orders for drumheads, 500 dozen heads often being ordered at one time. The principal demand was for the "tenor" drum, on which a loud accompaniment to the fife or bass instrument can be produced.

Kangaroo skins make the costliest drumheads. When dressed, they are showy, but beyond their appearance and name they are of no greater value than heads made from calfskin. Sheepskin is used for cheap toy drums.—New York Post.

QUAINT COLONIAL NAMES.

How the Offspring of Our First Colonists Were Christened.

It is an interesting study to trace the underlying reason for many of the curious names which are given to the offspring of the first colonists. Parents searched for names of deep significance—for names appropriate to conditions, for those of profound influence presumably on the child's life.

The Rev. Richard Buck, one of the early parsons in Virginia, in days of deep depression, named his first child Mara. This text indicates the reason for his choice: "Call me Mara, for the Almighty has dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full, and the Lord has brought me home empty." His second child was christened Gershom — for Moses' wife "bare him a son and called his name Gershom, for he said I have been in a strange land."

Many names have a pathos and sadness which can be felt down through the centuries. Dame Dinely, widow of a doctor, or barber surgeon, who had died in the snow while striving to visit a distant patient, named her poor babe Fathergone.

The children of Roger Clapp were named Experience, Waitstill, Preserved, Hopestill, Wait, Thanks, Decide, Unite and Supply. Madam Austin, an early settler of old Narragansett, had 15 children. Their names were Parvis, Picus, Piersus, Prisemus, Polybius, Lois, Lettice, Avis, Anstice, Eunice, Mary, John, Elizabeth, Ruth, Freelove. All lived to be threescore and ten, one to be 102 years old. Edward Bendall's children were named Truegrace, Reform, Hoped For, More Mercy and Restore. Richard Gridley's offspring were Return, Believe and Tremble.—"Child Life In Colonial Days."

A Coffee Barometer.

A cup of hot coffee is an unfailing barometer if you allow a lump of sugar to drop to the bottom of the cup and watch the air bubbles arise without disturbing the coffee. If the bubbles collect in the middle, the weather will be fine; if they adhere to the cup, forming a ring, it will either rain or snow, and if the bubbles separate without assuming any fixed position changeable weather may be expected.—Chicago Times-Herald.

IN OLDEN TIMES.

Many Things were Different Now-a Days the Public Profit by Experience.

When the striped pole or sign which now indicates a barber shop was employed to let the public know where cupping or blood-letting was professionally performed, close shaves were of daily occurrence, not the easy removal of the hirsute or hairy adornment of the head and face, but close shaves from entering eternity. More than one unfortunate entered the barber surgeon's doorway to leave it a corpse or so weak that weeks were required to get the victim of malpractice on his feet. Blood-letting was used for everything from a heartache to a corn, and a pain in the loins was invariably treated with two incisions, one on each side of the spine. Like plasters and liniments, these helped from the counter irritation they created, and we may presume that had Mr. Calvin Wilson, proprietor of the leading shaving parlor of Niles, Mich., lived in the time of George III of England, in place of taking the course he did a short time ago with his back, blood-letting would have been resorted to. Read how, he treated his trouble:

Mr. Wilson says: "My occupation has very likely much to do with the cause of my backache from which I have suffered considerably for a number of years. Standing on one's feet some days 18 hours is hard on the best of backs, but when you have pain across the loins, with lameness and soreness, every time you move the muscles of the arm, long, long before your daily task is over you often wish you could go to sleep. I tried everything to better my condition but was unsuccessful until I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought to a man who has worked hard all his life and is now past the three score and ten is much easier to appreciate than to describe in words. Doan's Kidney Pills perform what they promise"

FACES.

In the eye that lights to meet us and the face that smiles to greet us
Are the shadows of the future and the impress of the past.
And the cheek that in its dawning flushed as rosy as the morning
Shows the outline of its beauty as it fades away at last.

And the little children's faces mid their dimples are the traces
Of the maiden's glowing beauty and of manhood's brow of care,
And the prophecy of gladness and the shadow of the sadness
To the thoughtful eye that gazeth are they lurking ever there.

But the faces that are nearest and the faces that are dearest
Are the true, the tender faces that our trust and loving win;
Then, when comes to them the shading, when the roses shall be fading,
Like the vase with light illumined shall we see the soul within.

MARRIED HANNER HIMSELF.

The Wedding Came About Through a Deal Over a Mortgage.

"Never heerd how I got the best of ole Simmons, did you?" queried the farmer from the upper part of the state, who is visiting his son. "You knowed what a skinflint he was? Worst I ever see or read about.

"Well, you been floppin round a good bit 'bout ole widderers gittin married ag'in, so I'll tell you how it was. Simmons held a mortgage on that south forty. He beat me outen the money on a sharp dicker, and I been ready ter put the scalpin knife enter him ever sence, but I calkerlated thet I'd have ter settle or give him the land. While I was savin up ter clear off the mor'gage I got a intermashing frum Si Duke that ole Simmons was payin 'tention ter Hanner Watsing. Si gi'me the hint and same time tole me he was lettin on ter be Hanner's stiddy jest so as ter devil Simmons.

"When I went ter see the ole skinflint 'bout givin me a leetle more time on the mor'gage, he kinder giggles round and looks like he'd been stealin sheep and ast me what the talk was 'bout Si and Hanner. Now, I ain't no college perfesser, but I see right off what way the wind was blowin, and I spun a yarn 'bout it bein common report as how Hanner and Si was goin ter hitch.

"I thought ole Simmons would have a spell, but I braced him up, all the time a-tellin him thet Si and Hanner would be a good match. Well, the upshoot was thet he said ef I'd git Si ter move to Indianey and stay there I could have the mor'gage cleared without payin a cent. Si was blamed glad ter go for $50, and it cleared me 'bout $1,500. But ole Simmons was so tarnel mean in talkin 'bout it thet he got my mad up, and I sailed in and married Hanner myself. That's the way you got yer new mother-in-law, and ef you ever hear of me bein knocked over you investergate ole Simmons."—Detroit Free Press.

A Fine Old Government Clock.

It is a fine old clock which stands in the senate lobby fronting the main entrance to the senate chamber. For almost a century it has been ticking away, night and day, and now it is as good as ever.

The old clock is about eight feet high, and its frame is solid mahogany. Its face is about a foot and a half in diameter, and the name of Thomas Voight, Philadelphia, shows by whom and where it was made. It used to stand in the old senate chamber, now the supreme court room, where Webster and Clay and Benton and all the famous men of the past debated great questions. If the clock could only talk, it could tell many tales of dramatic interest.

Upon the mahogany case is carved a large shield, with stars to represent the states. When the clock was built, there were only 17 states in the Union.—Washington Post.

Lopped It Off.

Towne—Has he sent you a check for your services?

Browne—Yes, but it isn't for the amount I expected, although I sent him a bill.

Towne—Your writing's bad. Maybe he didn't decipher the amount.

Browne—I'm afraid he did de-cipher it. I wrote $100 very plainly, and he sent $10.—Philadelphia Press.

The Truth Forced Home.

"I'm afraid," she sighed, "that I'm getting old."

"Why?" he asked.

"When I go to the grocery now, the clerks don't nearly break their necks trying to beat one another in getting my orders."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Rheumatism.

Nobody knows all about it; and nothing, now known, will always cure it.

Doctors try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, when they think it is caused by imperfect digestion of food. You can do the same.

It may or may not be caused by the failure of stomach and bowels to do their work. If it is, you will cure it; if not, you will do no harm.

The way, to cure a disease is to stop its cause, and help the body get back to its habit of health.

When Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil does that, it cures; when it don't, it don't cure. It never does harm.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

MATCHES AND MONEY

UNROMANTIC COURTSHIPS ARE THE RULE IN GERMANY.

There the Women Are Obliged to Have Some Financial Resources When They Marry—The Cost of Acquiring a Military Husband.

In Bavaria every girl is expected to get married. Ask a Bavarian, and he will tell you that it is impossible for a portionless maiden to find a husband. If a girl has no money for a dowry, therefore, she sets herself at work to save one.

Marriage in Germany is nearly entirely a matter of business. The father of the girl announces the sum which is to go with her, while the papa of the prospective husband holds out for more. That is the first stage of the negotiations. Little by little each yields to the other. Finally, often after months of delay, the contract is drawn up with minute specifications by a notary, and then the lovemaking may begin. The courtship is very circumscribed and is probably not altogether satisfactory, for the German maiden is a romantic creature, and the opportunities she has for getting acquainted with her husband before marriage are very meager.

The parental supervision is so inbred in the nation that even the government takes a hand in it with its servants. A German army officer is a splendid creature to the eye, but his pay is very small, ranging from a matter of $5 a week for a lieutenant to $50 a week for a full fledged general. In order to prevent the possibility of seediness in appearance or style of living the government forbids an officer to marry unless he deposits a certain sum—it is $20,000 for a lieutenant and becomes gradually less for each higher grade—with the authorities, the income of which is doled out to him semiannually. This is in reality putting a price on the man, because the greater number of German officers are very poor and can get the money required only from their brides.

The money which a wife brings to her husband, unless there is an express notarial stipulation to the contrary, becomes absolutely the husband's property. Woman in the eye of the law has practically no rights except such as her husband may allow her. He treats her very often as merely a piece of live stock. If the woman rebels, which she does very rarely, he displays a very short temper and an aptness for wielding a poker or a walking stick in a use for which they were never meant.

In a German newspaper one may always find a column devoted to matrimonial announcements. There is no romance in these advertisements. The man tells how much money he has and how much he wants. The woman names her dowry to the very pfennig. Very often the man has no money at all and expresses his desire to marry into a business, but the woman knows that it is useless to advertise at all unless she has some money, if it amounts only to $100 or so, which may be regarded as the lowest sum worthy of consideration as a mitgift.

On the other hand, it is the woman's privilege to name the calling which she prefers the man should follow. She usually chooses an official clerk or porter, a policeman or a car conductor, all of whom have tenure of office and an old age pension. She has more of an eye to stability than to ambition.

It is in the so called higher classes of society that one finds the baldest and most businesslike matrimonial transactions. There are few young men of this class who have either money or any prospect of making any otherwise than by a wealthy marriage. When they inherit fortunes, it is the fashion to dissipate them, and when they don't inherit it is against the prejudices of their education and training to seek employment or to engage in any kind of business.

Therefore most of them enter the army while waiting for a rich bride. Daughters of rich brewers and merchants are acceptable to these gentlemen, but their great and persistent dream is to capture an American heiress. They confess the matter frankly to any one and every one who will listen.

Traveling American heiresses are not so plentiful in Germany as in France and Italy; still, they are to be found. It would seem, however, that notwithstanding the fact that German titles are at least a little more valuable than those of the Latin countries they do not possess the same glamour in feminine eyes, because the German title captures the American bag of gold comparatively rarely. Perhaps it is because the Teutonic wooing is more arrogant and supercilious than insinuating.

Of all countries Germany is perhaps that in which romanticism flourishes most. It is instinct in its traditions, in its history and its literature. Yet in the affairs of daily life and pre-eminently in its matrimonial affairs militarism rises to the plane of worship.—New York Sun.

A Blind Sale.

An exchange tells of a novel plan adopted by an English hostess to secure funds for a charity in which she was interested. She gave a dance, introducing in the cotillon an auction figure. In this the favors were for sale. A table was spread with them, from which selections were made. After the choice the purchaser found the price affixed on the reverse side. This might be a penny or a pound, the limit of cost, and was set without any regard to the apparent value of the article to which it was attached. The most trifling article perhaps had the topmost mark, and vice versa, making choice so far as price was concerned pure chance.

A Decisive Step.

His chum came in and found him slipping a lock of hair into an envelope, not furtively or surreptitiously, but just placing it under cover in a calm, businesslike way.

"Hello!" says the visitor. "What's up?"

"Nothing," he answered. "I'm only sending back Miss Hamilton-Highlow's hair, that's all."

"Engagement off again?"

"Yes."

"How many times does this make?"

"Five. It's final this time, though, one way or the other."

"Does she say so?"

"Oh, she always says it's final. I'm deciding things just now. It's off forever or cards out soon!"

"How do you do it?"

"Little scheme of my own. You know the color of her hair, don't you? Warm brown, with a little raw umber in it. Well, this sample of hair I'm doing up is red—good, regular, standard red. I tell you we're going to get down to genuine emotion this time. She'll know whether she loves me or not, and if she does she'll walk me in by the ear."—London Mail.

Marvelous Chicken Legs.

The mechanism of the leg and foot of a chicken or other bird that roosts on a limb is a marvel of design. It often seems strange that a bird will sit on a roost and sleep all night without falling off, but the explanation is perfectly simple. The tendon of the leg of a bird that roosts is so arranged that when the leg is bent at the knee the claws are bound to contract and thus hold with a sort of death grip the limb around which they are placed. Put a chicken's feet on your wrist and then make the bird sit down, and you will have a practical illustration on your skin that you will remember for some time. By this singular arrangement, seen only in such birds as roost, they will rest comfortably and never think of holding on, for it is impossible for them to let go till they stand up.—Presbyterian.

Fogg—It isn't such a difficult thing to read character by the handwriting. I believe I can do it myself.

Bass—Well, try your skill on that letter I received a short time ago. What do you say to that?

Fogg—In the first place, the writer is a very unwomanly woman.

Bass—How do you come to that conclusion?

Fogg—None of the words are underscored.—Boston Transcript.

A Masculine Lady's Maid.

A Bostonian while exploring the files of a paper printed in his town a century ago came across this rather startling advertisement: "S Rogers informs those ladies who wish to be dressed by him, either on assembly or ball days, to give him notice the previous day. Ladies who engage to and don't dress must pay him half price."

WE WANT EVERY ONE TO KNOW ABOUT IT.

READ WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY. COME AND SEE US.

We don't want any one in this city to drag themselves through life in pain and misery for the want of enough strength to feel well and happy.

If you feel listless, without ambition and run down, it is a bad sign.

You are running grave chances. You are in a condition to be attacked by most any disease.

This feeling of debility is a symptom that your system is generally demoralized. You should take a tonic.

You should take Vinol, which we know and will guarantee will restore your strength.

Following is one case where it did this. Mrs. T. H. Boyle, of 56 Chestnut St., West Newton, Mass., says:

"Last spring I used one bottle of Vinol. At that time I was all run down and sick. I find that it did me lots of good, and by its use my strength came back to me."

Vinol is a delicious preparation, containing the active curative principles that are found in cod-liver oil, dissolved in a delicate table wine.

Vinol acts directly on the stomach, aiding digestion and at the same time creating a healthy appetite. It gives strength and vigor to every organ of the body.

We endorse Vinol, and guarantee its action, and will gladly refund to any one who is not satisfied the money which they paid for it.

FARMERS GET A SCARE

Thought Gov. Bliss Would Veto Oleomargarine Measure, but He Didn't.

APPROPRIATION FALLS SHORT

Pan-American Commission Asks for $5,000 More with Which to Furnish Michigan Building.

Lansing, Mich., March 25.—The prediction made in my last letter that last week would be an important one so far as the advancement of railroad and so-called equal tax bills was concerned, failed of realization owing to the inability of some of the attorneys for the interested corporations to be present. It was especially desired that Henry Russell of the Michigan Central participate in the discussion of the tax bills, and because of his absence in the south, in accordance with the orders of his physician the hearing was postponed until April 2. Mr. Russell will have returned at that time, and the matter will certainly be proceeded with. While the legislators are disposed to give every one who has anything to say on this subject a chance to be heard, the fact of the matter appears to be that no great deal of time will be occupied in discussing the bills on the floor of the two houses. There is little doubt that a majority of both the senators and representatives have fully made up their minds as to the course they will pursue in this connection, and they will make rather short work of the entire matter when once it gets before them. There is every reason for believing that a law taxing the property of railroads and other corporations on an ad valorem basis will be enacted. Gov. Bliss is credited with saying that should the legislature adjourn without enacting such a law, a special session will be promptly convened. There is little danger of the governor being called upon to make this promise good, however.

Governor Signs Butter Bill.

A number of farmer legislators were given a severe scare late in the week by the persistent rumor that Gov. Bliss had fully made up his mind to veto the bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine to resemble butter, on the ground that it is class legislation. The rumor proved to be wholly unfounded, the governor never at any time having any intention to interpose a veto. The newly enacted law is practically a verbatim copy of laws that have been held constitutional by the supreme courts of other states, and there is little doubt that it will stand the test of the Michigan courts.

The legislative farmers' club have indulged in another "killing" bee within the past few days, having in solemn conclave set the seal of their disapproval on a number of bills which provide for increased expenditures in one way and another. None of these bills have yet come up for action, but the farmers are prepared to hit them "where Lucy wore her beads" when they make their appearance on the calendar. The doomed bills provide for the creation of the office of state fire marshal, which, by the way, would be an excellent investment in more ways than one; require that all cows which supply milk sold in the cities and villages of the state be tested for tuberculosis, and set aside certain tracts of state tax lands for forestry purposes The statesmen from the rural districts have not yet wearied with well doing, as they believe their action to be by any means, but have the old ax whetted for the decapitation of other bills carrying appropriations.

Appropriation Not Sufficient.

The Pan-American commission has already discovered that the appropriation of $40,000 recently made will not be sufficient for the Michigan exhibit, and the commissioners have formally decided to ask for an additional $5,000 with which to furnish the Michigan building. It will be recalled that the regular appropriation bill stipulated that $10,000 of the $40,000 appropriated shall be used for constructing a building.

The work of extending the usefulness of the state library, which was entered on four years ago, is going steadily forward, and the present legislature has already taken another step in this direction by providing for the registration of study clubs with the state librarian. Under the law as it previously stood books could be had from the state library only where organizations were formed for procuring a traveling library. Now clubs which register with the state librarian can secure books at any time upon making application therefor. This will be a great help to members of clubs who are pursuing certain lines of study and who desire authorities for consultation.

Liquor Bills Cause Disturbance.

Two liquor bills have kicked up quite a disturbance in the senate during the past few days. One of these prohibits the locating of a saloon within 500 feet of a church or school house. This bill was favorably reported by the committee on religious and benevolent institutions when it was vigorously jumped upon by members of the Detroit delegation, one of whom declared that if it became a law it would wipe out three-fourths of the saloons in his district and deprive the taxpayers of thousands of dollars in taxes annually. A truce was finally arranged whereby the bill went back to the committee, which promised to give its opponents a hearing before making another report. The other bill was also favorably reported and came up on the general order for consideration. It was a decidedly innocent appearing measure, designed ostensibly for the purpose of providing an assistant secretary for the state board of pharmacy. It proved to be a wolf in sheep's clothing, as it were, and gave rise to the charge of bad faith against its sponsors. The reason for this was that in addition to providing for the assistant secretary, it provided for the classifying of wines, cordials, etc., as drugs, thereby prohibiting their sale by druggists except on a physician's prescription. It also prohibited the displaying of intoxicating liquors in show windows. Several senators threw fits when they discovered all there was to the bill, and the result was that the measure was referred for further consideration.

New State Normal School Bill.

The joint committees on education have prepared a substitute for the Kelly and Lugers' bills, providing for the establishment of an additional state normal school in western Michigan. The substitute provides for the location of the "western state normal school" and makes an appropriation of $45,000, of which $25,000 is for the erection of suitable buildings, $10,000 for the equipment of such building, and $10,000 for the salaries of instructors. It is provided that the school shall be located by the state board of education. The people of the place where the institution is located are expected to donate a site, as only $1 is appropriated for this purpose. Muskegon, Grand Rapids and Holland will bid for this plum if the bill ever gets past the farmer legislators and becomes a law.

The farmers, by the way, have reaffirmed their purpose to cut the annual tax-levy for the support of the university from one-fourth to one-sixth of a mill on the equalized value of the property of the state, and this promises to precipitate one of the hottest fights of the session.

It is probable that the residents of the rural districts will be given an opportunity to experiment with the high schools. The senate committee on education has favorably reported a bill permitting the establishment of this class of educational institutions and there is a strong sentiment in favor of its passage.

Another measure in which the farmers of the state are particularly interested is the Randall bill, which requires operators of threshing engines to place planks across bridges and culverts before crossing such structures, the object being to prevent accidents and the wrecking of bridges. This bill has passed the house and gone to the senate.

Two Income Tax Bills.

Two income tax bills have made their appearance during the past week. That of Senator Moore, which has been favorably reported by the senate committee on taxation, provides a tax on all incomes in excess of $1,000, the rate ranging from one-fourth of 1 per cent, on incomes of from $1,000 to $2,500, to 1 per cent, on all in excess of $5,000. Representative Rich has drafted an ad valorem income tax bill which provides for the taxation of "so much of the income from a profession, trade or employment as exceeds the sum of $700 per year, and which has accrued to any person during the year ending on the first day of May of the year in which the tax is assessed, but no income shall be taxed which is derived from property subject to taxation."

Representative Lowrey, who believes that the present method of taxing mortgages is unjust, resulting in double taxation, has prepared the following amendment, which has been favorably reported by the house committee on taxation: "Any real estate mortgage, deed of trust, land contract or obligation by which a debt is secured, when land within this state is pledged for the payment and discharge thereof, except mortgages, deeds of trust or other obligations pledging for the payment thereof the real property of such companies and quasi-public corporations as may otherwise be required by law to pay a specific tax to the state in lieu of all other taxes, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the land so pledged."

Both Houses Pass Rodgers' Bill.

The Rodgers' bill prohibiting the docking of horses' tails and also making it unlawful to import docked horses into the state, has been passed by both houses and is before the governor for his signature.

The indications are that Michigan will get in line with her sister states and erect a handsome monument in memory of her soldiers who participated in the battle of Chickamauga. The senate has passed a bill appropriating $30,000 for such purpose, and the house members appear to be favorable to the measure.

Game Bill To Be Pushed.

The Handy game bill will be pushed to an early passage. Hunters throughout the state will be pleased to learn that the bill provides for an open season in both the upper and lower peninsula on game birds beginning Oct. 1 and ending Nov. 30, thus extending the present season twenty days. The sale of venison is prohibited absolutely, as is spring shooting, and the number of dear a hunter may legally kill in a season is reduced from five to three.

The people of the state are to be congratulated on the fact that the scheme to make a political machine of the state board of health is not likely to succeed. For the past ten years I have had occasion to make daily visits to all of the state departments, and I have no hesitation in saying that, in my judgment, the state board of health constitutes the best investment that the state of Michigan has today. The people get more value received for the money they put into this work than they do from any other line of state activity, and the results have not been due to any other consideration than genuine merit on the part of those who have been in charge of the department. From every possible point of view it would be far better to abolish the board altogether and give no thought to the health of the people of the state than to inoculate the department with partisan politics.

JAPAN NOT AFRAID

And is Considering the Question of Fighting Russia.

WAR PROBABLE AT SOME TIME

Japan Not Afraid of the Result—Russia Has No Right in Manchuria—No Other Power As Much Interested As Japan.

London, March 26.—The Chinese minister, Sir Chih Chen Lo Feng Luh, called at the foreign office to-day and urged the British government to bring pressure to bear in order to prevent Russia from securing the necessary signatures of the Manchuria agreement. The foreign office is still in the dark as to whether the agreement will be signed or allowed to lapse when the time expires, March 26. The officials of the Japanese legation are inclined to believe Russia will succeed in getting the necessary signatures.

The situation is still more complicated owing to the fact, ascertained by a representative of the Associated Press Monday, that there are two secret treaties, one of which is to be signed at St. Petersburg, dealing with Russia's military control of Manchuria, and another, to be signed at Pekin, dealing with her civil powers.

The Chinese appeals for support have failed to produce any direct remonstrances from Great Britain, or apparently from any other power to St. Petersburg, for Russia persistently adhered to her contention that the secret agreements concern no one except herself in China. On this ground Great Britain's request for copies of the agreement was abruptly declined.

It is explained at the foreign office here that it would be a dangerous and useless breach of diplomatic procedure to endeavor to enter upon expostulations with Russia, which would only be based upon information supplied by the Chinese.

In other words, the copies of secret treaties and alleged modifications of them recently given to the powers by the Chinese are worthless documents, and will remain such until Russia herself chooses to communicate the text of the actual treaties and modifications.

In the absence of the Japanese minister in London, Maron Hayashi, Mr. Matsui, first secretary of the Japanese legation, who was interviewed by a representative of the Associated Press, made a comprehensive statement of the issues involved. He said: "Russia's insistence, China's helplessness and the probable victory of Russian diplomacy to-day will bring us to the brink of a dangerous situation in which none of the powers is so deeply concerned as Japan. Even if the secret treaties have been modified, as is alleged, the changes are so trifling as to make the document thoroughly objectionable to Japan.

"Assuming that China signs the treaties, I suppose Great Britain, Germany and the United States will protest to Russia. But that is about as far as they will go and about as much as they will get. With Japan it is a matter of fighting.

"The question is whether we are to fight Russia now or to fight her later on. She has no right to Manchuria, and if she secures Manchuria she will be on the way to securing Korea.

"Our government, I believe, are seriously considering the crisis. Their eyes are wide open and they will not be driven to precipitate action by the jingoists of Japan, who are openly clamoring for immediate war. Yet, if they see that war is unavoidable they will not hesitate to strike. Japan has no reason to be afraid as to the result. Many reasons occur to the average Japanese mind in favor of forcing at the present moment a struggle which must come eventually. The chief reason against so doing is the fact that Japan is just beginning a new industrial era, which would be temporarily killed should we endeavor by force of arms to prevent Russian encroachments.

"If we follow the lead of other powers and do not threaten hostilities, we realize that we must sit down tamely and see any other nation step in to make agreements similar to those which China seems on the verge of signing with Russia. This would mean the partition of the Chinese empire and the end of the 'open door.' If we opposed it, we naturally think we would have the moral support of the United States, which has been the champion of these principles, and also of Great Britain and Germany."

Causes Uneasiness.

Cape Town, March 26.—The threatening attitude of the Malays respecting the bubonic plague regulations causes the local authorities much uneasiness. Two Malays died of the disease Monday and three fresh Malay cases were officially reported. In addition to these there are six fresh European cases. A soldier in the Queen's regiment has been isolated under suspicion. Two Kaffirs succumbed to the plague yesterday.

Severe Wind Storm.

Crawfordsville, Ind., March 26.—A severe wind storm, amounting almost to a tornado, and accompanied with electrical disturbances, swept over East Fountain and West Montgomery counties at an early hour Monday. The loss amounts to thousands of dollars. One farmer's barn was blown down, killing 20 cattle. No lives were lost.

SEVERE WIND STORM.

Vicksburg Struck By One, Which Did Much Damage.

Vicksburg, Mich., March 26.—A terrible wind storm raged through this section Mondoy noon, blowing roofs off of buildings, tearing down trees, fences, telegraph and telephone poles. At Lemon park, Indian lake, several cottages were badly damaged by falling trees. Near Pavilion the house of Jacob Snyder, on the old Cooley farm, was blown down and wrecked, several of the inmates miraculously escaping with slight injuries, one girl having a broken collar bone.

At N. Tripp's home, in Pavilion, the house was blown down. It rolled over several times, took fire and burned several rods from where it had stood. The kitchen stove set fire to the building. Mrs. Tripp was found with a barrel of rubbish upon her and the stove upon that. She is badly injured and will probably die.

Several other occupants were cut about the head, but none seriously injured.

The end of the country school house west of town was blown in. Wind mills, mint stills and other structures of a similar nature were damaged. In some places a heavy hail accompanied the storm.

The Verdict.

Cass City, Mich., March 26.—As a doubt existed in the minds of neighbors as to the cause and source of the death of Mrs. Nathan Townsend and her two children, a boy and girl, aged 8 and 10, the coroner, Dr. Morris of Gagetown, was summoned. He subpoenaed a jury of six men. Nathan Townsend and M. M. Wickware were sworn and testified to the circumstances surrounding the case. The jurors gave their verdict that death was caused by the use of laudanum, and the children were killed by the woman with the same drug. Mrs. Townsend became despondent because of the sale of the farm and their belongings. She thought her husband would spend the money in drink.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, March 26.—Michigan pensions were granted Monday as follows: Ellsworth W. Taylor, St. Charles, $12. Increase—Chester R. Smith, Grass Lake, $10; Levi Stukey, Seneca, $8; Daniel Gibson, Saginaw, $10; David Bauer, soldiers' home, Kent, $8; John E. Densmore, Pompeii, $12. Widows—Eliza J. Sheldon, Quincy, $20; Josephine Warriner, Bay City, $8; Sarah E. Rouse, Saginaw, $8.

Renewed Rebel Activity.

Kingston, Jamaica, March 26.—The British mail steamer Para, from Colon, brings reports of renewed activity on the part of the rebels in the vicinity of Panama. The hands of the government are full in their efforts to keep the rebels out of the city. Excessive war taxes are being levied, and last week a party of businessmen protested against those high rates. They were thereupon arrested and charged with being rebel sympathizers. Two of the prisoners managed to leave the country by steamer, but the others were kept in prison until they had paid the heavy fines imposed upon them. Passengers by the steamer Para say that the revolution shows no signs of ending in the near future. Business is carried on in Colon and Panama with the greatest difficulty and the enormous prices of food stuffs is causing general dissatisfaction. The liberals are expecting large reinforcements from the Costa Rican sympathizers.

Medals From the French.

Washington, March 26.—Through M. De Lansen, the minister of marine of the French republic, the navy department has just received two beautiful silver medals and diplomas awarded to P. Ausseress and Patrick Mullen, sailors on the U. S. S. battleship Kentucky, in recognition of courage and devotion exhibited by them on Nov. 11 in the port of Algiers, in rescuing four French sailors whose boat had capsized. The two Kentucky sailors leaped overboard from the ship and held up the men in the water until help arrived, and they were taken aboard. A question having arisen whether the medals could be accepted in the absence of an act of congress, it was decided they could, inasmuch as the men were not officers.

Made a Big Haul.

Columbus, O., March 26.—A telephone message from Somerset, Perry county, received at the police station at 2 a. m., stated that six masked men had blown the safe in the local bank and secured $15,000 in money and a large amount of bonds. The robbers escaped.

Dangerously Ill.

Denver, Col., March 26.—Mrs. Cook, wife of Gen. Geo. W. Cook, left for New York yesterday in answer to a telegram announcing that her husband is dangerously ill of catarrh of the stomach in that city. Gen. Cook is prominent in Grand Army circles and is a pioneer of Colorado.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, March 26.—Monday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $152,858,077; gold $95,231,047.

In the Trust.

Milwaukee, March 26.—F. A. Walsh tinware and tin machinery manufacturers, have sold their big plant in this city to the American Tin Can Co. Transfers of the property were made Monday. The price paid is not made public.

THE DATE IS FIXED

Senate Adopted a Resolution to Adjourn May 4.

WORK TO CEASE APRIL 25

The Friends of Equal Taxation Think An Ad Valorem Bill Should Be Disposed of Before Adjournment Is Decided On.

Lansing, Mich., March 26.—With practically all important proposed general legislation yet to be considered and acted upon, the senate last evening passed Senator Atwood's concurrent resolution for the legislature to do no work after April 25, one month hence, and fixing May 4 as the day for final adjournment.

Shortly after the senate met Senator Atwood moved to take his concurrent resolution from the table. The motion was adopted. Then Atwood moved the adoption of his resolution. On a viva voce vote, the senate seemed to be about equally divided, but no member said a word for or against the resolution.

President Pro Tem. Loomis, who was in the chair, hesitated, and then said: "it seems to have passed."

Then he hesitated again and looked around at the senators, who still remained singularly silent. Then he said: "It is passed."

Shortly afterward Senator Atwood said, "We'll pass a fair ad valorem tax bill before April 25."

Some of the friends of the "equal taxation" movement in the house look with suspicion on the senate's action. Such men as Rep. Goodrich of Hillsdale say that it looks to him like a plan to prevent definite action on ad valorem tax bills and have the legislature dilly dally along in the consideration of these measures until it shall become too late to pass any bill of the sort.

"Let us dispose of the tax bills before we decide when we shall finally adjourn," said Mr. Goodrich.

Others look upon the senate's action as a move calculated to help the republicans at the approaching spring election. An early adjournment would cut down the usual expenses of the legislature, which are estimated at about $900 a day.

It is argued that the people expect the legislature to pass an ad valorem tax bill and that the republican party in the state platform adopted last summer at the Grand Rapids convention, having promised legislation of this sort, the legislature should pass a bill to tax the property of railroad, telephone and express companies, and even of mining companies, according to the ad valorem system. Some of the senators say that while they personally believe the proposed legislation would be a step backward, they fear that the republican party in this state would be placed in a dangerous predicament at the general fall election in 1902 if the legislature failed to pass an ad valorem tax bill. Personally, these senators contend that the specific tax system is better than the ad valorem in every way; far more economically executed, capable of easy adjustment to changed conditions from time to time, and producing better results in the way of revenue for the state.

Members of the tax commission say Gov. Bliss has promised to do all he can to have the legislature pass a fair and satisfactory ad valorem tax measure.

Unknown Man Killed.

Wayne, Mich., March 26.—Passenger train No. 14, east bound on the Michigan Central, struck and killed a young man, probably a tramp, here Monday night. He was walking on the east-bound track and on account of a freight train which was passing about the same time, did not hear the passenger train's approach from behind. No means of identification were found with the exception of a scar on his chin. Undertaker Morton took charge of the body.

Grows Worse.

Washington, March 26.—The report of National Bank Examiner Joseph Selden on the condition of the First National bank of Niles, Mich., has been received by Comptroller Dawes. It shows that the shortage caused by the defalcation of Cashier Charles A. Johnson is about $190,000. The comptroller refuses at present to make further details public. He has ordered an assessment of 100 per cent on the stockholders of the defunct bank.

Lansing Lost Its Suit.

Lansing, Mich., March 26.—Some months ago Mrs. Leota Mead recovered a judgment of $4,000 from the city for injuries received from a fall on a defective walk. The city paid the judgment and undertook to recoup against the Detroit, Lansing & Northern Railway company, adjacent to whose property the walk in question lay. Monday Judge Wiest decided the latter case against the city, which will appeal to the supreme court.

Important Naval Changes.

Washington, March 26.—Two important naval changes were announced at the navy department Monday. Capt. F. W. Dickins has been assigned to the command of the cruiser Brooklyn, on the Asiatic station, relieving Capt. J. M. Thomas, transferred to the command of the Oregon.

RETURNED FROM CUBA.

Gen. Miles Believes the Platt Amendment Will Be Accepted.

Washington, March 26.—Lieut.-Gen. Miles and his party has returned to Washington from a short tour of inspection in Cuba. He told Secretary Root that in his opinion the Cubans would accept the Platt amendment. Gen. Miles was particularly impressed with the fine condition of the batteries in the forts around Havana.

On Thursday last, by special request, Gen. Miles attended a session of the Cuban convention and addressed the delegates at some length, saying in part:

"I have no reason to doubt that the attitude of our government toward the people of other countries who have been struggling for liberty will continue to be maintained and that the hope of Washington, who believed that the United States had framed a constitution so liberal and so just that, if administered with wisdom and integrity, it would in time be commended to the peoples of other countries then strangers to it, still animates to-day the great heart of the American people towards the infant republic of Cuba.

"I trust that you will have patience in the consideration of the important subjects now before you, and that you will be directed in a course that may promote the best interests of yourselves and your posterity. We all know that the strongest bond and guaranty that you can give to the people and give the government of the United States is the gratitude that you have manifested in the past, and earnest and lasting friendship towards the government of the United States in the future."

DELAREY ROUTED.

His Rear Guard Driven In and Convoy Captured.

London, March 26.—The war office has received the following dispatch from Lord Kitchener:

"Pretoria, March 26.—Babington's force, including Shekelton's column, attacked Delarey, 1500 strong, southwest of Ventersdorp, and, having defeated him, followed him up rapidly with the result that the Boer rear guard was driven in and their convoy including the guns, captured at Vaalbank.

"Our troops displayed great gallantry and dash. They captured two 15-pounder guns, one pompon, six Maxims, 320 rounds of big ammunition, 15,000 rounds of small ammunition, 160 rifles, 53 wagons and 24 carts, besides taking 140 prisoners.

"Our losses were slight. Many Boers were killed or wounded."

Cape Town, March 26.—It is said the Boers lost very heavily in attacking the garrison at Lichtenburg last week. Upwards of 70 burghers are reported to have been shot at one spot among the wire entanglements.

Challenge Received.

Cambridge, Eng., March 26.—The Cambridge University Athletic club has received the challenge of Harvard and Yale for a regular set of track games between Oxford and Cambridge and Harvard and Yale, to be held in New York during the early part of next July. The Rev. Jos. H. Gray, treasurer of the Cambridge University Athletic club, reiterates that there will be every disposition to arrange a meeting, but it is difficult for the Cambridge men to go in July. The club will probably suggest another date, preferably September.

Trip to the Pacific.

Washington, March 26.—Gen. Grosvenor of Ohio has practically completed the arrangements for the trip of the Ohio congressional delegation to San Francisco on the occasion of the launching of the battleship Ohio. The only point still in doubt is whether the return trip from Duluth to Cleveland shall be by boat or by rail. It is understood that one, and possibly two, special trains will convey Gov. Nash and the other Ohioans to the launching.

Cannot Visit Detroit.

Washington, March 26.—Senator McMillan, who is in Florida, through his private secretary, has invited the president to attend the bicentennial celebration of the founding of Detroit July 24 and 25. The president said he would be unable to accept the invitation. When the president goes to Massachusetts this summer he will be for several days the guest of Senator McMillan at the latter's summer place.

MY CAPTIVE.

By JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER,

Author of "A Soldier of Manhattan," "The Sun of Saratoga," Etc.

[Copyright, 1900, by Joseph A. Altsheler.]

"Good! Good, Marcel!" he exclaimed more than once. "This is precisely what we wanted to know. And so Mr. Tarleton is hot on our heels and will attack in the morning? Well, Philip Marcel, I think you will see tomorrow as pretty a little battle as was ever fought on this continent, and neither Colonel Tarleton nor I nor any other can tell yet what the result will be."

Julia was standing by me, and her old spirit suddenly flamed up

"I can," she said, "and I only hope that instead of falling in the battle you will be taken a prisoner, for tomorrow night your army will not exist."

"Miss Howard," said Colonel Washington, bowing—I had given her name—"we have more admiration for the ladies than confidence in their military predictions."

CHAPTER X.

IN MORGAN'S CAMP

Then we proceeded to the encampment, and Colonel Washington himself went with us, his plans being changed by my news. My head was buzzing with excitement. We were going to fight Tarleton at last, though with all the odds against us, numbers, discipline and arms, while Tarleton himself had won his reputation as the ablest and most successful cavalry commander in the British service. We might again experience the disgrace and disaster of Camden, but Morgan was no Gates, and perhaps, on the other hand, we might equal the exploit of the wild borderers at King's Mountain, though it was a little too much to hope for that. But still we would fight, and to a young man it always seems better to fight than to run

"Old comrade," I said to my horse, "we fight the enemy tomorrow!"

He nodded joyously and then looked gravely at the bandage around my head.

"It is nothing," I said "I will take it off tonight My head is well"

He nodded again, as if all his troubles were over

The wife of Captain Dunn of the South Carolina militia was in the camp, a lady whom I knew, my distant kinswoman, and Julia was given into her charge

"Take good care of her, Cousin Anna," I said. "Remember that she is my prisoner"

"Your prisoner, is she?" she replied enigmatically "But remember, Philip, that the captor often becomes the captive.

"Cousin Anna," I said indignantly "I hope you are not going to preach our defeat by Tarleton on the very eve of battle It will have a discouraging effect

"I said nothing about the battle Go and attend to your work, Philip I will take care of the girl

To Julia I said

"We fight tomorrow, and I may not see you again."

Then I bent down and kissed her lips.

She replied very simply and earnestly:

"May you live through it, Philip!"

Cousin Anna's back was turned, and she did not see or hear

I turned away and began to examine the camp and this field, destined to be the scene of a memorable battle which was itself the opening of one of the greatest, most skillful and successful campaigns ever conducted on the soil of our continent.

We were on a long slope, consisting of several hills rising above each other like the seats of an amphitheater, though at a much greater elevation, as the slope was so slight that it offered no impediment to the gallop of a horse. The men were gathering up old rails, which they were using for the campfires, and I noticed many old tracks of the feet of animals. To my question one of the men said:

"We are going to fight where the cows pastured. Don't you know that this army is camped on the cow pens of a very worthy man named Hannah? And these rails are the last that are left of his pens."

Behind us flowed the wide, deep and unfordable Broad river, retreat thus being cut off in case of defeat. I asked the meaning of this strange military maneuver which meant either victory or destruction, and again the explanation was ready:

"More than half of our men are militia, and you can never tell whether militia will run like rabbits or fight like devils. All early signs fail, and General Morgan says it's cheaper to have the river behind us and make 'em fight than to station regulars in the rear to shoot down the cowards."

Presently I saw General Morgan himself passing among the men and preparing for the expected attack in the morning. This was one of our real heroes, a fighter and leader and no politician, a man whom the great Washington esteemed and loved to reward. I had seen him at Saratoga and elsewhere, and his figure as well as his name always drew attention. Over six feet high and built in proportion, with a weight of 200 pounds, and a large, fine, open face, he was a type of the true American, the best of all men in mind and body.

There was plenty of provender in the camp, and I gave Old Put the first solid meal that had come to him in several days. I wanted him to be in good trim for the morrow, for he and I were to take our proper place with Washington's cavalry, to which we belonged, only a handful of men, but able and true and capable of doing great things in the nick of time. There had been some question about the bandage on my head, which I wore as a precaution against taking cold in the scalp wound, but I showed that it was only a trifle, and Colonel Washington rightfully remarked that such a slight wound would only increase a man's efficiency on the battlefield. Then he presented me with a fine saber, which I needed badly, and told me to lie down on the ground and go to sleep, but I could not sleep just then, and with the freedom of our colonial armies I roamed about the encampment.

The campfires flared up in the cold January darkness. The men sat around them, talking and playing cards with old greasy cards or singing the songs of the hills and the woods. Some of the soldiers were asleep on their blankets or the bare ground, for we were always a ragged and unhoused army at the best, and only a few of the officers had tents.

A sharp breeze came from across the river, and the flames bent to it, their light flickering over wild, brown faces that knew only the open air, wind, rain, hail or whatever came. Most of them still carried their curved and carved powderhorns and their bullet pouches, inseparable companions, over their shoulders, and their long, slender barreled rifles, so unlike the British muskets, lay at their sides.

Smoke rose from the fires and blew in the faces of the men, deepening the brown and giving them another shade of the Indian. A curse mingled now and then with the singing and the talk of the card players, and from the borders of the camp came the stamp of the horses and an occasional neigh. In the darkness, half lighted by the reeling fires, the camp became a camp of wild men, whose faces the wavering light molded into whatever grotesque images it chose

We were but a little army, only 900 strong, but many of us had come great distances and from places wide apart An arc of 1,000 miles would scarce cover all our homes There were the militia, South Carolinians and Georgians, raw troops, whom one can never trust; then the little remnant of the brigade that De Kalb had led on the fatal day of Camden, splendid soldiers whose line the whole British army could not break, the survivors now eager to avenge the disgrace their brethren suffered on that day, then the stanch Virginia troops, that we knew would never fail, and near them our two or three score of cavalry men under Washington—a little army, I say again, but led by such leaders as Morgan, Washington, Howard and Pickens! Down the slopes the sentinels were on watch, but there was no fear of a surprise, for the scouts were just bringing in word that Tarleton could not come before daylight, and then, owing to the slope and the open ground, his approach would be seen for a great distance

The new men talked the most, some about the coming battle, eagerly, volubly, others about things the farthest from it, but in the same eager, voluble, unreal tone The veterans were silent mostly, and already with the calm and hardihood of long usage were seeking the rest and sleep which they knew they would need A tall, thin man, with a wild face, whom I took to be one of the preachers at the great revival meetings so common on the border, rose in the midst of the camp and began to speak Some listened, and some went on with the talking and card playing. I could hear the rustle of the pasteboard as the cards were shuffled. He was a fighting preacher, for he exhorted them to strike with all their strength in the coming battle and if they must die to die like Christian heroes. He prayed to God for the success of our arms, then stepped down from the stump on which he had stood and disappeared from my sight. He fought in the front line of the South Carolina militia the next day

I sought my own place in our troop and lay down upon one half of my blanket, with the other half above me. Old Put gnawed at some fodder beside me.

"Wake me up in the morning when you see the first red gleam of the British coats, old comrade," I said, and, knowing that he would do it, I closed my eyes

But sleep would not come just yet, and I opened my eyes again to see that the fires were sinking and the darkness was coming down nearer to the earth. Half the men were asleep already; the others were quiet, seeking sleep, and the steady breathing of near 1,000 men in a close space made a strange, whistling noise like that of the wind. A flaring blaze would throw a streak of light across a sleeping soldier, showing only a head or a leg or an arm, as if the man had been disjointed. I would hear the faint rattle of a sentry's firelock and the heavy hoof of a horse as he crowded his comrades for room. An officer in dingy uniform would stalk across the field to see that all was right, and over us all the wind moaned and the darkness gathered close up to the edge of the dying fires. Weakness overpowered my excited brain and nerves, and I slept.

CHAPTER XI.

THE BATTLE.

I was awakened in the morning by the shoving of Old Put's cold nose, which said as plain as speech, "Rise, my master, and prepare for the enemy." Most of the other men were up, and the camp cooks had breakfast ready, bread, meat and coffee. I threw off my blanket and began to eat with the others.

It was the misty region between night and day, but the scouts had come in, telling us that the British would soon be at hand, and by the time the breakfast had been dispatched the rim of the sun appeared in the east, and the day was coming. Then the general formed the line of battle, and each of us took his appointed place.

On the first rise of the slope stood the South Carolina and Georgia militia, the raw troops, in a line about a sixth of a mile long, under the command of the iron nerved Pickens. They were expected to give way before the charge of the enemy, but Pickens was ordered to hold them in line until they could deliver at least two volleys with the precision in firing which all these farmer boys possessed Then they were to retire behind the veteran regulars, under Howard, who were on the second slope 150 yards in their rear An equal distance behind the second rise sat we cavalrymen on our horses, commanded to pull on our reins and wait the moment upon which the fate of the battle should turn.

Thus stood our little army, awaiting the rush of the battle which, as I have said, was to be one of the most important and decisive of our war. I stroked Old Put's neck and bade him be cool, but he was as calm as I and needed no such encouragement. The man on my left, Dick Patterson, a Marylander, suddenly whispered:

"Don't you hear that faint rumbling noise, Phil? That's the hoof beats of cavalry."

"Silence there!" called the colonel.

No one spoke again; but, bending my ear forward, I could hear the far drum of the horses' hoofs, and I knew that the English army was coming. Old Put raised his head and snuffed the air. A red gleam appeared upon the horizon and broadened rapidly A thrill and a deep murmur ran the length and breadth of our army.

"Oh, if those militiamen will only stand until the general bids them retire!" groaned the colonel.

That he believed they would not I knew, since it is a hard thing for new men to stand the rush of a seasoned army superior in numbers and equipment.

The sun was just swinging clear of the earth and betokened a brilliant morning, yet it was cold with the raw damp that often creeps into a South Carolina winter, and I for one wished that the men could see a little more of the day and loosen their muscles a little better before they fought

The whole British army now appeared in the plain, cavalry, infantry and fieldpieces in a great red square. I could plainly see the officers giving their orders, and I knew that the attack would come in a few minutes.

"Eleven hundred of them and no raw troops," said Colonel Washington. "We know that exactly from our scouts I think our cavalry will have something to do today

One officer, in the gayest of uniforms, I took to be the barbarian Tarleton, the British leader whom we hated most of all, for, with all his soldierly qualities, he was a barbarian, as most of his brother British officers themselves say

I wanted to see the faces of those farmer boys down there on the slope who were to receive the first and fiercest rush of the enemy and to check it. I knew that many of them were white to the eyes, but their backs were toward me, and I could not see

"They don't appear to move," whispered Patterson "Their line looks as firm as if it were made of iron."

"Like untempered iron, I guess," I replied "break like glass at the first shot.

A bugle sounded in the front of the British lines, and its notes, loud and mellow, came to us, but from our ranks rose only the heavy breathing and the shuffling of men and horses.

The trumpet call was followed by a cheer from more than a thousand throats, and then the British rushed upon us. The brass fieldpieces on their flanks opened with the thunder that betokens the artillery, and mingled with their roar were the rattle of the small arms, the throb of the drums and the clamorous hoof beats of their numerous cavalry.

The face of their red line blazed with fire, their red uniforms glowing through it like a bloody gleam, while the polished bayonets flashed in front.

"They are firing too soon and coming too fast," said Colonel Washington. "By God, look at those militiamen! They are standing like the Massachusetts farmers at Bunker Hill."

It was so. The raw line of plowboys never wavered. It bent nowhere and was still as straight and strong as an iron bar. The plowboys knelt down, and, as the British cheer rose and the red line flaming in front swept nearer, up went the long barreled border rifles. I fancied that I could hear Pickens' command to fire, but I did not, and then all the rifles along a line a sixth of a mile long were fired so close together that the discharge was like the explosion of the greatest cannon in all the world.

The smoke rose in a thick black cloud, which a moment later floated a dozen feet above the earth and revealed the British squares, shattered and stopped, the ground in front of them red with the fallen, the officers shouting and reforming their lines, while our own plow lads, still as steady as the hills, were reloading their rifles with swift and steady hands.

We cavalrymen raised a great shout of approval, which the regulars on the rise in front of us took up and repeated. A second volley was all that we had asked from the militiamen, and it was sure now. Even as our cheer was echoing it was delivered with all the coolness and deadly precision of the first. Again the British line reeled and stopped, but they were veterans, led by the fiery Tarleton, and they came on a third time, only to meet the third of those deadly volleys, which swept down their front lines and blocked the way with their own dead and dying.

"The battle is won already," shouted Colonel Washington, "and it's the farmer boys of South Carolina and Georgia who have won it!"

Never did veteran troops show more gallantry and tenacity than those same farmer boys on that day. Two volleys were all that were asked of them, yet not merely once or twice, but many times, they poured in their deadly volleys at close range, again and again hurling back the British veterans, who doubled them in number and were supported by artillery and many cavalry, while we old soldiers in the two lines behind stood silent, not a gun or a saber raised, and watched their valor.

They retired at last, not broken, but in perfect order and at the command of Pickens, that we who stood behind them might have the chance to do our part of the day's work.

The smoke hung low in clouds and half hid either army, British and American. A brilliant sun above pierced through it in places and gleamed on clumps of men, some fallen, some still fighting. Shrieks and groans strove for a place with the curses and shouts.

Again rose the British cheer from the throats of all those who stood, for, the militiamen retiring before them, they thought it was a battle won, and they charged with fresh courage and vigor, pouring forward in a red avalanche. But the regulars, the steady old Continentals, who now confronted them, received them with another volley, and more infantrymen fell down in the withered grass, more riderless horses galloped away.

The battle had rolled a step nearer to us, but we cavalrymen, who formed the third line, were still silent and sat with tight reins, while directly in front of us rose a huge bank of flame and smoke in which friend and enemy struggled and fought. Even Old Put, with his iron nerves, fretted and pulled on the reins.

The long line of the British overlapped the Continentals, whom they outnumbered three to one, and the general, whose gigantic figure I could see through the haze of smoke, ordered them to retreat lest they should be flanked.

Again the British cheer boomed out when they saw the regulars giving ground, for now they were sure that victory was theirs, though more hardly won than they had thought. But the retreat of the regulars was only a feint and to give time for the militiamen behind them to come again into action General Morgan galloped toward us, waving his sword to Washington, and every one of us knew that our moment had come.

"Forward!" was the single command of our leader, and the reins and the sabers swung free as we swept in a semicircle around the line of our friends and then at the enemy At the same moment the regulars, ceasing to yield, charged the astonished foe and poured in a volley at close range, while the militiamen threw themselves in a solid mass upon the British flank.

We of the cavalry were but 80 strong, with 50 more mounted volunteers behind us under Major McCall, but we were a compact body of strong horses and strong horsemen, with shortened rifles and flashing sabers, and we were driven straight at the heart of the enemy like the cold edge of a chisel.

We slashed into the British, already reeling from the shock of the Continentals and the militiamen, and they crumpled up before us like dry paper before a fire. Our rifles were emptied, and the sabers were doing the silent but more deadly work. Amid all the wild din of the shouting and the musketry and the blur of the smoke and the flame I knew little that I was doing except hack, hack, and I was glad of it. I could hear steel gritting on bone, and the smell of leather and smoke and blood arose, but the smoke was still in my eyes, and I could only see enough to strike and keep on striking We horsemen, 130 strong, were still a solid, compact body, a long gleaming line like a sword blade thrust through the marrow of the enemy. We had cut our way directly to the heart of the English army, and their broken squares were falling asunder as our line of steel lashed and tore. The red army reeled about over the slopes like a man who has lost power over his limbs. I struck at a trooper on my left, but he disappeared, and a second trooper on my right raised his saber to cut me down.

I had no time to fend off the blow, and in one swift instant I expected to take my place with the fallen, but a long muscular brown neck shot out, two rows of powerful white teeth inclosed the man's sword arm, and he screamed aloud in pain and fright.

"Do you surrender?" I cried.

"Yes, yes, for God's sake, take him off!" he shouted. "I can fight a man, but not a man and a wild devil of a horse at the same time!"

"Let him go," I said to Old Put, and, the horse unclasping his teeth, the man gave up his sword.

The smoke was lifting and clearing away somewhat, and the fire of the rifles had declined from a steady crackle to jets and spurts. A dozen of the militiamen had seized one of the brass fieldpieces of the British, and Howard's Continentals already held the other. Everywhere cries of "I surrender, I surrender! Quarter, quarter!" arose from the British horse and foot, who were throwing down their arms to receive from us that quarter which we willingly gave, but which the bloody Tarleton had so often denied to our men

I could scarce believe what I saw. The whole British army seemed to be killed, wounded or taken. The muskets and bayonets, the swords and pistols, rattled as they threw them upon the ground. Whole companies surrendered bodily An officer, his gay uniform splashed with mud and blood, dashed past me, lashing his horse at every jump. It was Tarleton himself, and behind him came Washington pursuing with all his vigor and lunging at the fleeing English leader with a bayonet fastened at a rifle's end. He returned after awhile without Tarleton, but there was blood on his bayonet. Tarleton, though wounded in the shoulder, escaped through the superior speed of his horse, to be taken with Cornwallis and the others at Yorktown

The general raised his sword and cried to us to stop firing and striking, for the field was won and the battle was over, and he spoke truly Far away showed the red backs of some of the English fleeing at the full speed of their horses, but they were only a few, and almost their entire army lay upon the field, dead and wounded, or stood there our prisoners. The defeat that so many of us feared had proved to be the most brilliant little victory in our history, a masterpiece of tactics and valor, the decisive beginning of the great campaign which won us back the southern colonies, one of the costliest of all her battles to England. I have told you how it was won, just as the histories, both English and American, tell it to you. All honor and glory to the gallant plowboys of South Carolina and Georgia who received the first shock of the British army and broke it so bravely! Of the 1,100 British veterans who attacked us only 200 escaped from the field, and we took all their cannon, baggage, ammunition and small arms, even of those who escaped, for they threw them away in their flight. The killed, wounded and taken just equaled the numbers of our entire army, and we had only 12 men dead.

CHAPTER XII.

LOOKING AHEAD.

I returned toward the Broad river, where, under the lee of a little hill, a tent had held six or seven friendly women. Julia came out, her face still pale, for she had heard all the crash and tumult of the battle

"It is over, Julia," I said—I had hid my bloody sword—"and the British army no longer exists."

"And the victory is yours! Yesterday I thought it impossible."

"Your countrymen make the same mistake over and over again, but they pay the price."

We walked toward the field, and we met some men bringing in a gray haired prisoner, a tall, fine looking officer. Julia, crying aloud in her joy, ran forward and embraced him. He returned the embrace again and again with the greatest tenderness.

"Father," said Julia, "we are now prisoners together."

I watched them for a few minutes, and then I stepped forward and said:

"Good morning, Major Howard."

He stared at me in the icy way of the Englishman who has been addressed by a stranger

"I do not know you, sir," he said.

"My name is Philip Marcel, and I am your future son-in-law."

He was now unable to speak.

"It is true, sir," I said. "Ask your daughter."

He looked at her She smiled and reddened

Old Put was standing by, and he nodded his head in approval. He had liked her from the first

"Your daughter is to be my wife," I continued, with emphasis, "and you are to live with us and like us."

These were resounding boasts for a young soldier to make, but they all came true after Yorktown.

The Flight of Time.

A masked man confronted me with a pistol in a lonely spot on the dark road

"Cough up your chronometer," he demanded gruffly.

I fumbled for my 18 carat timepiece, thinking that my last hour was at hand. When I dared to look up, he had vanished with his plunder.

Even then, such is the incongruity of the human mind, though rejoiced that my time had not yet come, I regretted in my heart that it had gone.—New York Sun.

A Symbol of Wisdom.

Serpent-worship was one of the earliest and most universal religions of the world. The character and attributes of the reptile—its stealthiness and malevolence, its venomous power and mysterious gift of charming, possessed by no other creature—invested it with a powerful facination for a primative people, and it is probable that divine honors were first paid it as a means of propitiating so formidable an enemy. But its most wonderful attribute was its self-renovating power. When old and infirm, deaf, blind and incapable of defending itself, it would suddenly cast off its worn-out covering and emerge in rainbow colors and all the vigor of renewed life and youth. Thus it came to be regarded as the symbol of supernatural wisdom, healing and never-ending life.—April "New" Lippincott.

Funny fellow is that editor Hawkins, of the Tecumseh News. Speaking of the charter election he says: "The village election on Monday proved the most exciting event of the kind ever witnessed in Tecumseh and the result was in doubt until the figures on the voting machine were canvassed." Just how funny he is, is best understood by the election returns which show that the entire republican ticket was defeated by majorities all the way from 54 to 118. If anyone can see where there was any "doubt" about the result, he must have "a beye like a beagle."—Adrian Press.

A. O. U. W.

EDITOR HERALD:

Notwithstanding the adverse criticism from the editor of the Tecumseh News, the Ancient Order of United Workmen has gained a strong foothold in this community. A large charter list has been secured and the organization will soon be complete with some of the best men of the village at the head. The A. O. U. W. is strictly an American society, issues policies for one and two thousand dollars and has paid more money to the families of its deceased members in Michigan than all other societies combined. No occupations barred. No hazardous or extra hazardous risks, the same price to all at the same age. Cost to become a member is $1.50 and one assessment according to age. This is the working man's friend. Investigate.

The Red Cat Inn.

The management of the opera house have engaged Mark E. Swan's latest three act farce "The Red Cat Inn," which makes its first appearance in this city Thursday, Mar. 28. This piece comes strongly recommended for its fun-making propensities and is said to be one of the funniest farces on the stage this season. Its all about the ludicrous adventures of two eloping couples, who got into the Red Cat Inn, a country hotel near Boston. It is interpreted by a clever company of players, including Mr. Swan, the author.

LITERARY NOTES.

"Bees in Royal Bonnets" is a seasonable paper by Folix L. Oswald, M. D., in the April New Lippincott. Some German bees that trouble the Kaiser are dealt with unsparingly.

* * *

Scribner's Magazine for April, in addition to articles of travel, adventure and art, by Walter A. Wyckoff, John Fox, Edwin Lord Weeks and others, contains six short stories, three by new writers and three by writers whose work is familiar in this magazine. On its art side this number is also rich and varied.

* * *

The most notable article in Modern Culture for April is "The Friendship of Carlyle and Emerson" by Johnson Brigham, Librarian of the Iowa State Library and one of the brainy men of the Trans-Mississippi region. No more scholarly paper has been printed in a recent magazine.

* * *

"The Indian Territory—its Status, Development and Future" is the subject of an instructive article in the April Review of Reviews, contributed by Col Richard J. Hinton The work of the Dawes Commission, for the allotment of lands to the Indians in severalty, is fully described, and the results analyzed and tabulated.

CLUB NOTES.

The regular meeting of the Wit and Wisdom Club will be held Monday evening, April 1st, at the home of Mr. and Mrs John Orr. Subject, "Industries of Michigan."

The Crokinole Club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Richter last evening. It was a surprise to Mrs Richter, the occasion being her birthday.

MONDAY CLUB RECEPTION.

The Monday Club closed their years' work on English history with an Indian Day at the home of Mrs. Geo. N. Stacy on Monday afternoon. The study of the history of England in the seventeenth century was so closely connected with early American history that a day with the aborigineés of this continent seemed especially appropriate.

Mrs. L. P. Tribou, Mrs. B. J. Garlinghouse and Mrs. Low as a committee to collect and arrange a display of Indian relics succeeded in bringing to light a fine collection of curiosities, bead work and Indian pictures, which were the objects of much interest. Mrs. M. A. Zimmerman and Miss Bertha Smeltzer were dressed in Indian costume and received the guests at the door and distributed souvenir programs decorated with the head of an Indian chief in water colors.

Each member was allowed to bring a guest and the parlors were well filled when the president announced the program, the first number of which was the reading of "Hiawatha's Wooing" by Mrs. Cleo Hall. Miss Gertrude Hialey followed with a paper on "Recent Excavations in Michigan." Mrs. Downing told an old Indian legend entertainingly and without manuscript. Mrs. Howland gave an essay in story form on Pocahontas and Rev. Louisa Haight closed the exercises with a paper on Tecumseh Chief.

A guessing contest of Indian names was then introduced and Miss Viola Shull and Mrs. C. A. Wright having guessed the highest and an equal number of names drew cuts for the prize of a handsome Indian calendar, which fell to Mrs. Wright. Mrs. Eugene Harris and Mrs. Alberts had the refreshments in charge and served the company with cake and ices.

The club are indebted to Mrs. Corey for a very profitable and pleasant year with English history. Several new names have been added to the membership list and the club at the close of this year seems in an increased state of prosperity.

PUZZLED THE JEWELER.

He Wanted a Second Hand Watch and Finally Got It.

He was evidently a foreigner, and he walked into one of the big jewelry houses on F street and asked for a watch. He would be pleased to examine some "second hand watches," he said to the clerk who advanced to meet him.

"This isn't a pawnshop," observed the clerk haughtily.

"No?" observed the man inquiringly. "But you have watches?" And he pointed to the great showcase full of handsome watches.

"Certainly," replied the clerk. "Finest stock of watches in the city. How much do you want to pay for a watch?"

"How mooch?" asked the stranger. "Mooch as he is worth, so that he suits me. I have said that I desire a second hand watch—a good one that shall keep the time."

"See here, sir; you are off your base. We don't keep secondhand goods. You will have to hunt elsewhere for second-hand watches."

The stranger's eyes opened wide. "But you have him there, and there and there," he said as he began to gesticulate. "I have said s-e-c-o-n-d h-a-n-d watches," spelling it as though to make it plainer, "and they are here, everywhere, yet you say you have them not. I do not comprehend you."

"Well, I do you," replied the clerk sheepishly as he quickly got behind the counter. "Just a little mix up. No harm done, I hope. Certainly we have watches with second hands. All our watches have second hands. We handle no others." And the stranger got his second hand watch, for which he laid down a $50 bill.—Washington Star.

Speculation and Theft.

Some statistician, in emulation of Lombroso perhaps, has been figuring out the habitual employment of convicts. He concludes that more men and women whose employers are the national, state or municipal governments fall into evil ways and come to untoward ends than those who work for private individuals or corporations. A very large proportion of the men and women who have been handlers of public moneys seem to yield to the constant temptation and begin to peculate, and some cynic avers that peculation is the corollary of speculation. As a matter of fact, most of the big and little thieves who confess how they were led to take money that did not belong to them declare that speculations of one sort or another brought them eventually behind the bars.—New York Herald.

In this village on Wednesday, March 13, 1901, died of consumption, Miss Amanda Schoettie, aged 20 years. The funeral will be held at Emanuel's church Sunday at 10:30 o'clock, Rev. Alber, of Jackson, and Irion, of Freedom, officiating.—Manchester Enterprise.

Trenton has the youngest salaried editor in the state. Miss Charlotte Bassett is the society editor of the Trenton Times, and also does local work. She is 14, has successfully passed the 7th grade examinations, and will enter the high school next fall.—Adrian Press.

Alva Warren died at his home in Palmyra Wednesday night of pneumonia. He was the only son of Seymour Warren and highly respected. He was 24 years of age and will be greatly missed. The funeral was held Sunday at 10:30 from the residence. Burial to be at Palmyra.

A little girl of our town who goes to Sunday school each Sunday is very fond of singing, "Let a Little Sunshine in" a chorus in which all the little tots join. Her mother understood what she meant but was nevertheless very much amused when upon inquiring last Sunday if the little girl sang her favorite piece, she replied, "No, mamma, but we did sing 'Wringing in the Sheets'"—Brooklyn Ex.

Dr. Nix was called to Tipton Tuesday by Dr. Rice to counsel over Mrs. M. M. Rose formerly of Hudson, who is dangerously sick at her home in that place. Dr. Nix gave hopes of the lady's recovering. The docter was also called to Seneca Monday in the case of Jesse Tuttle, a prominent farmer, who is very low from the effects of a cancer. There are no hopes of Mr. Tuttle's recovery.—Hudson Gazette.

An exchange says that in a neighboring town a minister is trying to stop his congregation twisting around to see who comes in by announcing the name of everyone who enter the church after service has begun, and what they have on. It sounds odd to hear him in glowing remarks about heaven stop and say "Here comes Mrs Smith, and she is wearing the same cloak and hat she wore all last winter," but it may cure his congregation of a very bad habit.

John Hartz, of Detroit, was in the city Thursday night. He was a member of the Sixth Michigan cavalry and served three years He was taken prisoner three times in one day and finally landed at Andersonville, Ga., remaining nearly ten months. He was never sick during his incarceration and was turned over to the government in April 1865. He was on the steamer Sultana when it blew up some nine miles above Memphis. He left for Tecumseh this morning.—Adrian Times

A lady in Kalamazoo decided to scare her husband, who was quite a hard drinker, so he would reform. To do this she procured the costume of a devil worn at a masquerade. The next time the erring spouse came home feeling happy she quickly donned the costume. As he opened the door she stepped forward and said in sepulchral tones: "Come in with me—I am the devil." The result rather startled her: "Zat so? Shake, old boy. I'm your brother-in-law. I married your sister."—Ex.

While Grant Fellows, the Hudson attorney, was making an eloquent plea before a jury Thursday afternoon, 'Squire Sheldon, the counsel on the other side of the case, inadvertently leaned back too far in his chair with the result that it went over backward, causing the heels of the dignified advocate to fan the air industriously for a few moments When he gained his equilibrium he started to apologize to the court for his accident. Fellows, without hesitating, cut him short by saying: "Sorry, 'Squire, I didn't mean to hypnotize you!"

At 9 o'clock this morning fire was discovered in the large barn on the farm belonging to Alfred Edwards in district No. 8, Adrian township and about two miles from his residence farm. The fire developed in the upper part of the barn but its origin is not known. Mr. Edwards, who was in the city, was notified by telephone. The barn was a large one and built last summer. Four horses were burned, also a large stock of farm implements. There were 200 sheep in the basement, which were gotten out. Mr. Edwards estimates his loss at $2,500. Insurance on building, windmill, etc., $600, and on contents $500. It was insured in the Patrons' Insurance company.—Adrian Times.

It was in the Presbyterian Sunday school at Coldwater. The lesson was the triumphal entry into Jerusalem and Superintendent Clark was seeking to draw out the ideas of the little ones as to what a parade was. Who had seen one? Up went a hand. It belonged to Henry George Hoch, a little four year old son of our former townsman, Hon. L. W. Hoch, and when called upon to answer he stated that there were lots of people coming down the street last fall and a great big man at the head swung his arms and called, "Hurrah for Bryan." Needless to remark Henry George scored his point and incidentally brought down the house. We predict that little Mr. Hoch will be an observer and student of affairs.—Adrian Telegram.

A LONG FELT WANT.

It is Supplied in This Vicinity At Last.

It is hard to always be pleasant.

Good natured people are often irritable.

If you knew the reason you would not be surprised.

Ever have Itching Piles?

Not sick enough to go to bed or not well enough to be content.

Nothing will annoy you so.

The constant itching sensation.

Hard to bear, harder to get relief.

Keeps you awake nights.

Spoils your temper—nearly drives you crazy.

Isn't relief and cure a long felt want?

It is to be had for everyone in Doan's Ointment.

Doan's Ointment never fails to cure Itching Piles, Eczema, or any itching of the skin.

Here is proof of it at the testimony of an Ann Arbor citizen:

Mr. C. C. Church, of 520 South 7th street, Ann Arbor, now retired from the active duties of life, says: "I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Ointment. To anyone requiring a healing and soothing preparation it will prove invaluable. I suffered for years from itching hemorrhoids and though I tried everything I could hear of and used remedies prescribed by scores of friends I was unable to obtain permanent relief until my attention was called to Doan's Ointment. I was somewhat surprised after the second application to notice what a different effect it had from anything I had hitherto used. Encouraged I used it strictly according to directions and in a surprisingly short length of time when you take into account the number of years I was afflicted, the irritation ceased and the inflammation was allayed. When Doan's Ointment cured me it will cure others."

MICE QUICK TO LEARN.

So Says a Maine Man Who Finds Them Interesting Pets.

Out on Forest avenue is a mouse fancier whose residence, lest he lose caste with his neighbors, is withheld. In a pen he has half a dozen or so ordinary field mice.

"They are the most sociable pets I ever had," he remarked, "and any one of them will rise to attention as he hears my step approach the pen. I have had these young ones about six months. They don't live long when cooped up, and they will come freely to my hand to eat or drink. Some of them are so tame that they will climb to my shoulder and display not the slightest alarm at being touched. They haven't acquired so much faith in all humanity, however, and have refused to trust any one else so far.

"While mice eat a great deal for an animal so small when food is abundant, they can exist for a surprising long time with next to nothing. Any one whose house has been invested with mice and who had passed weary weeks when everything that possibly could serve as food was carefully under lock and key, finally calling to service an active ferret, will appreciate this fact. He is a mighty aggressive and tireless forager after food, not hesitating at walls or similar obstructions, through which he patiently gnaws a path. As a test of persistence in this line I hung a basket of food from the ceiling by a rope and after a week's fast placed a mouse at a hole in the ceiling above the basket. He descended some eight feet or more on a slender cord and safely reached his haven, later climbing up again.

"All of my mice I have taken from nests about the premises and notice that they invariably seek shelter below or behind something, never in so exposed a locality as almost any other animal would select. For a nest paper, cloth or any soft material seems to satisfy, and the exceeding fineness with which it is chopped suggests some mighty artistic work with their teeth."—Portland Express.

A VERY PARTICULAR BIRD.

If the Bathing Dish Didn't Suit Him, He Went Unwashed.

"Birds have as much character as human beings," said a specialist on birds. "Some are the most arrant little aristocrats, while others are regular little plebeians. I had a little fellow some time ago who, despite all my efforts, would not bathe. Each morning when, with his white porcelain tub in my hand, I approached his cage, he would resolve himself into the sulkiest, dreariest little ball of feathers you can possibly imagine. I coaxed and pleaded; I even bribed. Bathe he would not. So consistent was he in his determination not to bathe that I named him Tramp. One morning I broke the tub, and in its place I took a shallow blue and white dish of Japanese ware. Tramp eyed me for a moment with all his old hostility, and then as he caught sight of the pretty dish he flew down from his perch with chirps of joy and darted into the water before I could take my hand from the cage.

"I had found the way to his heart, and his morning bath now became a daily source of joy to both of us. But ont fatal morning I broke the blue and white dish. In an apologetic manner I brought to Tramp once more the regulation white bath dish, hoping that his cleanly habits were by this time so ingrained that he would overlook the prosaic appearance of his tub. Not so. An angry flutter of wings, a threatening little beak, a perfect tempest of shrill cheeps and twitterings and then sulky silence on the topmost perch.

"So it went on till I secured another blue and white dish and then peace and harmony and morning baths again."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

How the Car Got There.

The other day at Twenty-sixth street an inspector "hopped" on the front platform of a Madison avenue electric car bound down town. He said to the motorman:

"Where the dickens is this car goin'?"

"Why, to the Brooklyn bridge, of course."

"Get off and look at yer signs."

The motorman did so and discovered that the sign on the front hood of the car read, "One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street," the sign on the right side of the roof read, "Second avenue," and the sign on the rear hood, "Astor place." The conductor and motorman between them having adjusted the signs, the inspector permitted the car to proceed.—Electrical Review.

Pity and Beauty

The most beautiful thing in the world is the baby, all dimples and joy. The most pitiful thing is that same baby, thin and in pain. And the mother does not know that a little fat makes all the difference.

Dimples and joy have gone, and left hollows and fear; the fat, that was comfort and color and curve—all but pity and love—is gone.

The little one gets no fat from her food. There is something wrong; it is either her food or food-mill. She has had no fat for weeks; is living on what she had stored in that plump little body of hers; and that is gone. She is starving for fat; it is death, be quick!

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the fat she can take; it will save her.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other. If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

THE BURGLAR'S BIBLE.

He Said That He Would Get It Back Again, and He Did.

Senator John C. Spooner of Wisconsin when a young man was attorney for two men charged with stealing.

There had been taken from the men a well worn Bible and a small drawer. On the fly leaf of the Bible was the inscription, "To My Darling Boy, From Mother."

The trial was held the next day, and the future senator made a brilliant speech to the jury. He exhibited the Bible and pointed to the inscription, and without leaving their seats the jury returned a verdict of "Not guilty."

After the trial the young men gave the lawyer $50.

"Boys," said Mr. Spooner as they were about to separate, "I am curious to know why you carry that Bible and the empty drawer." Then the senator listened with astonishment to the history of his clients.

"We are professional safe blowers and have been for five years. This Bible has a double cover and opens like this" (here the self confessed criminal pressed a hidden spring in the thick cover and disclosed a hollow in which there lay two steel files and a small saw), "and this old drawer has a secret bottom, where we keep our tools."

The future senator confiscated the Bible and the drawer.

One of the thieves shouted angrily, "We'll get those things back yet, you mark my words!"

Several years passed, and then the incident was brought back to Mr. Spooner's recollection in the following manner: One evening he and his family attended an entertainment, and no one was left at the house. When they returned at a late hour, they found that the house had been entered by burglars and ransacked, but that nothing apparently was missing. The next day's mail brought a letter which read:

Dear Sir—Please excuse the way we came in last night, but the door was locked. We never did think you treated us square by swiping our outfit, and so we came back after it and found you were not at home. We always keep our word. Yours truly, JACK AND JIM.

THE BARGAIN CRAZE.

Men, It Is Alleged, Are as Much Infected as the Women.

"This perennial joke about the love of women for bargains wearies me," said a bright business woman the other day. "With most presumptuous superiority men charge our sex with an extravagant zeal for bargains, but I see enough of business men to assure me that they are just as eager as women are to get an article at a few cents less than the usual price.

"Mr. A—— is generally extravagant in his personal expenditures, but he is keen after bargains. The other day he came into our office wearing an air of great satisfaction, and his jubilation had no other foundation than the discovery of a street stand where 'seconds' in lead pencils were sold at 2 cents each.

"'If you know a good pencil when you see it,' he explained, 'you can rummage in the pile and pick out 5 and 10 cent pencils at 2 cents each or three for 5.

"'And that reminds me of another bargain. You know the 10 cent cigars I smoke? Well, there is a little shop down near the ferry where you can get them four for a quarter. I just heard of the place and ran down there at lunchtime and filled my pockets. Great bargain.'

"And would you believe it, that man, whose transactions run into the millions, went on telling my employer of bargains in clothes, stationery, etc., and Mr. B—— stopped in the midst of his estimates on a big contract to note addresses and to tell Mr. A—— of bargains he had discovered in neckwear and shoes and household supplies.

"Yet women are said to monopolize the bargain hunting disease."—New York Press.

Cost of a London Fog.

A London fog is an expensive visitation. A day of it, counting the day at eight hours, is estimated to cost anything from £50,000 to £100,000 in hard cash. No small proportion of this goes to the gas and electric light companies, which have to supply about a third more power than usual. But there are also the railways. Fog signaling is expensive. At Clapham Junction alone £50 has been spent by a single railway company during a day's fog in extra pay to the plate layers. When the red light cannot be seen at a distance of a hundred yards, the plate layers become fog signalers, and for this they are paid a shilling a day in addition to their regular wages and fourpence per hour overtime, providing the overtime does not run into a second shilling.—London Chronicle.

Allowed Plenty of Time.

Speaking of the late William Travers leads me to remark that, so far as I am personally aware, only one of the classic stuttering stories about him is actually true. I had the honor and happiness to reside at Newport for a year or so once, and at the time Mr. Travers was a summer resident there. He certainly stuttered a good deal, but he did not go around habitually discharging staccato witticisms at the world, as you might suppose he did from all the stories you hear. But the one story that I know about is this one:

Travers was at a garden party one afternoon when a young lady said to him, "What time is it, please, Mr. Travers?"

Travers took out his watch, wabbled his mouth awhile, blinked and finally said, "It'll be s-s-s-s-six o'c-c-c-clock by the time I can say it!"

It really lacked five minutes of 6 when he began.—Boston Transcript.

A POKER FAIRY TALE

QUEER CLIMAX OF THE WIND UP JACK POT OF THE GAME.

Manxy Displayed Wonderful Powers of Perception and Analysis, Won the Pool and Saved His Opponent the Amount of the Last Raise.

"Manxy was one of the best poker players I ever saw. He was a good winner and a good loser. He played his cards all the time for everything they were worth and then some more, and he played a game that was simply insoluble."

The board of trade man leaned back in his chair and smiled reminiscently.

"Manxy not only had Hoyle down so that he could recite the poker rules backward and say 'sir' after each word, but he rose to the higher science of the game. He made a careful study of every man around the board, and he never played a card but what he darted a keen, sweeping glance at every player and drew his conclusions as to what they were about to do. If a player had any little tricks or habits that asserted themselves in spite of efforts to repress them, Manxy knew them by heart.

"I will never forget the night he took Carter into camp. Carter was a good, cool, nervy player too. He was an old player and possessed splendid judgment. One night we had been playing several hours, and as it was getting toward daylight we agreed to have one more round of jack pots and then go home. We had our round of jack pots, three of which Carter won, and then decided on one last consolation jack pot, with no limit but the roof and $5 to come in. Carter raised the come in to $20, and everybody dropped out except Manxy and one other player. Manxy called for three cards, showing that he had only one pair or nothing at all; the other man took two cards, indicating that he must have threes of a kind, or else he wouldn't have paid $20 for the privilege of playing any longer, and Carter stood pat.

"That looked bad. Carter had never been known to stand pat on anything but something that was worth while. He must have had something pretty good to raise the come in to $20, and his standing pat argued that he either had fours or else a straight or a flush. He had betrayed a nervous start when he first picked up his hand, and it argued that he had seen something awfully good. Now, Manxy had seen the start that Carter gave and knew his style of play well enough to argue that Carter had seen something even better than a straight or a flush, and that was a straight flush, something that comes once in a great long while in a poker game. In fact, Manxy came to the conclusion that Carter had a straight flush, and the fact of the matter was that a straight flush in spades, king high, was just exactly what Carter had seen in his five cards when he picked them up.

"Manxy deliberated a long time before he came in with his $20, but he was out $75 or $100 on the game, and as it was the last pot he determined to stand a good bit of money in the hopes of making a recoup. He drew to a pair of tens and caught one more. Manxy started the betting with a $10 bill. The other man dropped out, and Carter saw the $10 and raised $25. That looked as though Manxy's surmise about the straight flush which he thought Carter was holding was good. He deliberated for some time. Then he said:

"'Carter, I think and everybody around here thinks you've got something better than fours. I was playing you for that. But now I'll tell you, Carter, what I'm going to do. I've noticed that your eyesight is bad and that tobacco smoke when it is right in front of your face always interferes for a moment or two with your vision. Just as you picked up your cards I noticed that you puffed a great cloud of smoke out of your mouth and that the cloud of smoke was in your eyes when you looked at your cards. Now, I believe that you think you have a straight flush, but I don't believe that you read your cards correctly. I am going to do something that may seem to be awfully bad poker, considering the hand I have, but I am going to play you for your poor eyesight. I see your bet of $25 and raise it $25 more on the ground that your eyes deceived you. You'd better study your cards before you see my raise.'

"We all waited in breathless silence for a moment, then Carter quietly threw his cards face upward on the table.

"'You're right,' he said quietly. 'I thought I had a spade straight flush, king high, in my hand. What I thought was a nine of spades was a nine of clubs. I lose.'"—Chicago Tribune.

Dangerous Economy.

A paragraph about an economical merchant in Broadway saving the backs of old envelopes for scratch paper reminds an old friend of this story: A New York dealer, who left about $2,000,000, for a long time kept up the practice of tearing off the fly sheets of the numerous foolscap letters he received and sticking them on a spindle for scribbling purposes. Envelopes were not yet in use. A lawsuit arose, and the merchant thought he had won his case when defendant's letter, duly signed, was produced. Counsel for defendant examined the letter and, turning it over to look for the superscription, found that it was missing. He immediately saw his advantage and said: "This letter is incomplete, your honor. A sheet is missing. I claim that there might have been a postscript on the other sheet which would entirely change the character of the order." The court so ruled, and defendant won the suit. The practice of utilizing fly sheets in that merchant's office was at once discontinued.—New York Press.

Why Roads Are Crooked In China.

The Chinese road is private property, a strip taken from somebody's land. This is done much against the will of the owner, since he not only loses the use of it, but also still has to pay taxes on it.

One consequence is that it is wide enough for only one vehicle, and carts can pass one another only by trespassing on the cultivated land. To prevent this the farmers dig deep ditches by the roadside. As the surface wears away and the dust blows off it gradually grows lower, and after awhile it becomes a drain for the surrounding fields. A current forms in the rainy season, which still further hollows it out, and thus has arisen the proverb that a road a thousand years old becomes a river.

Those whose lands are used for roads naturally prefer to have the roads run along the edge of their farms instead of cutting across them, and this accounts for the fact that Chinese roads are often so crooked that one may have to go a considerable distance to reach a place that is in reality but a few miles away. This always interests the stranger.—Church Eclectic.

The Conductor's Ready Answer.

The Metropolitan Street Railway company has in its employ a philosopher in the person of a Broadway conductor. It was late in the evening, and his car on its up town trip had reached the vicinity of the city hall. As it passed one of the taller office buildings a stout woman, clutching him by the arm, exclaimed:

"Oh, conductor, how many stories high is that building?"

"'Leven," laconically replied the conductor, without so much as an upward glance. The woman sank back with a sigh of satisfaction.

Just then a small man with a large traveling bag rushed in almost out of breath.

"I say, conductor," he gasped, "what time can I get to the Grand Central depot?"

"'Leven," was the quiet reply.

"That's good," commented the small man, evidently relieved.

At this juncture another man climbed aboard that wanted to know about what time the car would reach the Gilsey House.

"'Leven," again replied the conductor, with a weary look.

When questioned as to the uniformity of his answers, he replied:

"Yes. You see, if you hesitate about answering 'em, they git worried, but if you have an answer ready they're satisfied. Now, about this time of night, I always say ''Leven.' It's a good, handy number, easy to say. Other times I use other numbers. I allus have a lot of stock numbers on hand. It saves time and trouble."—New York Sun.

An Epitaph.

In the churchyard of Leigh, near Bolton, will be found a tombstone bearing the following amazing sentence: "A virtuous woman is 5s. to her husband." The explanation seems to be that space prevented "a crown" being cut in full, and the stonemason argued that a crown equals 5s.—Notes and Queries.

Took It Seriously.

The late Professor Hinsdale was singularly devoid of all sense of humor, and as for slang—well, he knew far more about the deadest of dead languages than he did concerning these saucy innovations on his native tongue.

There was a certain piece of legislation which was of considerable interest to the local school officials. It had been introduced into the legislature and was there hanging fire.

One day Professor Hinsdale, then school superintendent, said to Mr. Tom Whitehead, secretary of the board of education: "Mr. Secretary, what is the outlook for that special school bill now in the hands of the state legislators? Do you believe it will be adopted soon?"

The secretary shook his head in a manner that was meant to be thoroughly discouraging and said, with a strong emphasis:

"It will be a cold day when that bill is passed."

The superintendent nodded and passed on.

A day or two later somebody came into his office and asked him about the prospects of the same bill.

"Well," he replied in his heavy way, "I have no personal means of knowing the status of the measure, but I have been assured emphatically by Secretary Whitehead, who may be considered an expert in securing knowledge of this character, that the bill will not pass until next winter."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Public Gallows a Century Ago.

Even if the bicycle had been invented a hundred years ago touring could hardly have become very popular—at all events, for solitary cyclists. The old guidebooks were by no means cheerful reading. A run from London to East Grinstead, a distance of five or six and twenty miles, would have taken the wheelman past three gibbets, and it was just as likely as not that from one or the other of them a body would be swinging in the wind.

Up till the beginning of the nineteenth century the gallows was almost as frequent a landmark as finger posts or public houses have become now. The traveler approaching York is directed by the guidebooks to "turn round by the gallows and three windmills," and the road out of Durham is "between the gallows and Crokehill." Going out of Wells you "cross the brook and pass by the gallows."

Any number of such directions can be gleaned from the old books for the guidance of travelers a hundred years ago, and as these interesting objects were put up and the dead bodies of malefactors left upon them for the special edification of footpads and highwaymen there was a suggestiveness about them that must have given a special piquancy to cycle touring if it had been in vogue at that time.—London News.

Strikes a Rich Friend.

"I was troubled for several years with chronic indigestion and nervous debility," writes F. J. Green, of Lancaster, N. H., "No remedy helped me until I began using Electric Bitters, which did me more good than all the medicines I ever used. They have also kept my wife in excellent health for years. She says Electric Bitters are just splendid for female troubles; that they are a grand tonic and invigorator for weak, run down women. No other medicine can take its place in our family." Try them. Only 50c. Satisfaction guaranteed by C. A. Wright.

The sweetest joys are often preceded by the deepest sorrows.

CHRONIC NASAL CATARRH poisons every breath that is drawn into the lungs. There is procurable from any druggist the remedy for the cure of this trouble. THE RIGHT THING TO PUT ON.

(Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master.)

From the natural impulse to "put something on" a painful spot all applications for the relief of pain have arisen.

The most successful have ever been poultices or plasters, and the best of these is Benson's Porous Plaster.

No other has anything like the same power as a curative agent; it is highly and scientifically medicated, and its standard is advanced year by year.

Use Benson's Plaster for coughs, colds, chest diseases, rheumatism, grip, neuralgia, kidney trouble, lame back, and other ailments that make Winter a season of suffering and danger. It relieves and cures quicker than any other remedy.

Do not accept Capsicum, Strengthening or Belladonna plasters in place of Benson's, as they possess none of its curative power. Insist on having the genuine.

The people of every civilized land have testified for years to the superlative merit of Benson's Plasters; and 5,000 physicians and druggists of this country have declared them worthy of public confidence.

In official comparisons with others, Benson's Plasters have been honored with fifty-five highest awards.

For sale by all druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on the receipt of 25c. each. Accept no imitation or substitute.

PUNY CHILDREN

TOO MANY OF THEM DIE.

Their Little Bodies Unable to Stand the Ordeal of Development.

WE THINK EVERY MOTHER IN THIS TOWN SHOULD KNOW ABOUT VINOL.

It is the Delicious Tonic We Advise for Growing Children.

Is your boy or girl pale and listless? Do they act differently from other children? Do they sleep poorly and eat poorly? Does your boy avoid the sports and games of other boys? Does your girl complain of headache and find her studies a hardship?

If so, you may make up your mind they are growing too fast. They need something to help nature in her great work of furnishing the necessary elements for creating flesh and muscle tissue, bone structure and rich, pure, red blood.

They need a tonic in the full sense of the word and we can tell you what to get.

It is Vinol Wine of Cod-Liver Oil, the great modern reconstructor. Children like it, it is so delicious to the taste, in spite of the fact that it contains a highly concentrated extract of the medicinal principles that are found in cod-liver oil.

But because the vile-smelling and tasting grease has been discarded and all of the other disagreeable features eliminated, the benefits of Vinol are easily understood.

Vinol acts favorably on the stomach, creates an appetite and enables the food that is eaten to do the greatest possible amount of good.

Following is a letter that bears directly on this subject:

"I was all run down and took Vinol. It did me so much good and it was so pleasant to take that I gave it to my children. They were growing fast and needed something in the way of a tonic and I found it to be just the thing for them."—SARAH PICKERING, 1932 Fall River, Mass.

We cordially invite mothers interested in the welfare of their children, as well as any one else needing a sure, safe and delicious tonic, rebuilder and rejuvenator, to call on us. We will gladly tell any one all we know about Vinol and why we so highly endorse it.

Inasmuch as we are always ready and pleased to refund the cost of Vinol to those who don't find it exactly what we claim it to be, it will be seen that we are prepared to substantially endorse our claims for the excellence of this marvelous preparation.

FUNSTON'S COUP

Gen. MacArthur Gives Details of the Daring Capture.

GIVER CREDIT TO FUNSTON

Says Aguinaldo Will Recommend General Surrender to American Authority—Comments As To the Result of His Capture.

Washington, March 29.—A cablegram received at the war department late Thursday afternoon from Gen. MacArthur tells in a succinct way the history of Aguinaldo's capture, gives all credit for the brilliant exploit to Gen. Funston, whose reward it suggests should be that of a brigadier general in the regulary army, and finaliy closes with an expression of confidence in the speedy cessation of hostilities throughout the Philippine archipelago as a result of the capture. Except that it makes no reference to the disposition to be made of Aguinaldo, the dispatch covers the whole field of gossip and speculation excited in Washington by the news that Funston's adventurous expedition had been crowned by complete success. The cablegram is as follows:

"Manila, March 28.

"Adjutant General, Washington: Important messages fell into the hands of Gen. Funston Feb. 28th, from which Aguinaldo was located at Palanan, Isabella province. An expedition was organized, consisting of Aguinaldo's captured messenger, four ex-insurgent officers and 78 Macabebes who spoke Tagalo, armed with Mausers and Remingtons, dressed to represent insurgents. Funston commanded, accompanied by Capt. Russell T. Hazzard, Eleventh cavalry; Capt. Harry W. Newton, Thirty-fourth infantry; Lieut. Oliver P. M. Hazzard, Eleventh United States volunteer cavalry; Lieut. Burton J. Mitchell, Fortieth United States volunteer infantry. These officers were dressed as American privates and represented prisoners. The expedition sailed from Manila March 16 on the Vicksburg, and landed March 14 on the east coast of Luzon, 20 miles south of Casiguran. They reached Palanan in the afternoon of March 23. The natives were completely muddled. Supposed detachment insurgent reinforcement for which supplies were furnished. Aguinaldo also sent supplies and had his escort of 40 men paraded to extend proper honor. A short distance from Aguinaldo's quarters the disguise was discarded and a combat followed, resulting in two insurgents being killed, 18 rifles and 1,000 rounds of ammunition being captured, together with Aguinaldo and two principal staff officers.

"There were no casualties on our side. The splendid co-operation of the navy, through Commander Barry and the officers and men of the Vicksburg, was indispensible to success. Funston loudly praises the navy. The entire army joins in thanks to the sea service.

"The transaction was brilliant in conception and faultless in execution. All credit must go to Funston, who, under the supervision of Gen. Wheaton, organized and conducted the expedition from start to finish. His reward should be signal and immediate with Gen. Wheaton, who recommends Funston's retention in the volunteers until he can be appointed a brigadier general of regulars.

"I hope for a speedy cessation of hostilities throughout the archipelago as a consequence of this stroke. As a result of conferences now in probable progress, Aguinaldo will issue an address advising a general surrender, the delivery of arms and the acceptance of American supremacy.

"MacARTHUR."

The conferences in "probable progress" referred to in the dispatch are believed at the war department to mean conferences with other insurgent leaders by army officers or by the Taft commission.

Rear Admiral Evans said: "I would not say that the capture of Aguinaldo will break the backbone of the trouble in the Philippines, because I believe that it is already broken, but it will do much toward bringing about a final settlement."

"What do you think the government will do with Aguinaldo?" was asked.

"I know what I would have done with him," was the answer. "I would not have caught him alive. It sounds rather brutal, but the easiest way to find a man like Aguinaldo would be to find him dead. However, I don't think he will be punished severely, as the president usually shows clemency."

Berlin, March 29.—German official circles congratulate the United States upon the capture of Aguinaldo and express their satisfaction that order will now be established in the Philippines since German trade had greatly suffered by reason of the war.

Dr. Levysohn, editor of the Berliner Tageblatt, says this means the end of the war. The Tageblatt, in an article published yesterday, says it is glad the time has come for the United States to realize a plan of establishing American government in the Philippine islands.

Denver, March 29.—United States Senator Henry M. Teller said regarding the capture of Aguinaldo: "The capture is important, of course. It is valuable to eliminate him from further operations in the Philippines, but I am sorry to say that his capture will not close the war by any means."

Treasury Statement.

Washington, March 29.—Thursday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold in reserve, in the redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $153,967,831; gold, $96,843,648.

HIS PUNISHMENT

Not Yet Considered By the War Department at Washington.

Washington, March 29.—The war department has not had time as yet to consider the exact status of Aguinaldo, whether he is to be tried, and what punishment, if any, is to be meted out to him. But there are certain general principles which are said to be clearly established, and the first question asked is as to whether Aguinaldo is to be tried as a military or as a civil offender. If he is to be regarded as having committed treasonable acts, or fomented an insurrection against the United States government, then the trial would be of a civil character, for these are political offenses against the authority of the United States government and are not offenses under the articles of war to be tried by a military court-martial or commission. It is hardly expected that the rigorous procedure for treason would be adopted. If it should be, section 5332 of the revised statutes provides that "every person guilty of treason shall suffer death, or, at the discretion of the court, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than five years, and fined not less than $10,000."

Another section provides for inciting insurrection, short of actual treason, and specifies the punishment as follows:

"Every person who incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States shall be punished by imprisonment not more than ten years or by a fine or not more than $10,000, or by both."

The foregoing, however, are political offenses against the authority of the United States. It is presumed that Aguinaldo will be held for the present at least as a military prisoner. If tried as such it would be because he had offended against some of the articles of war. Already there have been several trials of Filipino officers for offenses against military usage, such as brutality, but a military tribunal will not take up the larger political offense against the authority of the United states. Article 154 of the regulations governing armies in the field recites:

"Treating in the field the rebellious enemy according to the law and usages of war has never prevented the legitimate government from trying the leaders of the rebellion, or the chief rebels, for high treason and from treating them accordingly, unless they are included in a general amnesty."

This article is referred to as showing that the warfare in the Philippines has not given Aguinaldo such a strict military status as to relieve him from the higher and graver civil offense of high treason. At the same time, there is little belief that this offense will be charged, the idea being that he will be held as a prisoner without any definite determination of his status and perhaps in time be granted amnesty on condition that he leave the country.

OPINIONS EXPRESSED

By Military Men and Civilians On Aggy's Capture.

Boston, March 29.—Gen. Nelson A. Miles said regarding the capture of Aguinaldo by Gen. Funston:

"In my opinion this will tend to settle all trouble in the Philippines. The capture of their leader is sure to dishearten Aguinaldo's followers, and although there may be more or less trouble for some time, with small bands in different parts of the islands, I believe that the backbone of the trouble is broken. No doubt there are other men among the Filipinos perfectly capable of taking Aguinaldo's place, as he is not a man of any great magnetism or ability, but I do not believe that, after this capture, there will be much enthusiasm under any leader."

Gen. Miles would not express any opinion as to what should be done with Aguinaldo.

Chicago, March 29.—Maj.-Gen. Elwell S. Otis, formerly in command of the army in the Philippines and now in command of the department of the lakes, expressed satisfaction over the capture of Aguinaldo.

"The influence of Aguinaldo has been waning for some time," said Gen. Otis. "Therefore, the importance of the capture is not so great as might be supposed. He has been a fugitive in hiding for so long that a large number of his followers have dropped away and a great majority of the people are tired of the whole thing—tired of being robbed and tired of the warfare. In fact, affairs in the islands are as quiet now as they have been for 25 years under Spain. There are only two Filipino officers of any importance now left in the islands who still maintain their hostility to the United States. These are Gen. Cailes and Gen. Luchan. The former is now hiding in the mountains of the east coast of Luzon; the latter is in central Luzon with a small band.

"As to the effect the capture of Aguinaldo will have on our affairs in the islands I believe it will hasten the time when peace will be restored. Of course the United States will have to protect the people for some time to come, but I think that in the course of a few months or a year the people may be able to protect themselves largely. The capture will result in a decrease of military demands in the Philippines.

"Aguinaldo was once looked upon by the Filipino people as a little god, but this sentiment has been lost almost completely. I believe that Aguinaldo is personally honest, but he has been actuated by individual ambition."

Situation Is Worse.

Grand Rapids, Mich., March 29.—Reports from points above this city are to the effect that the water in Grand river is falling, but here and below the situation is worse than ever. A big ice jam 25 feet high is reported at Spoonville, 20 miles below this city, which is causing the water to back up. Water is backing up the sewers in basements of business blocks, putting out furnace fires. Hundreds of houses in the low districts on the west side are surrounded, and last night one dwelling was overturned by the current. Foundations of others are crumbling and occupants have been obliged to vacate for safety. The Grand is four inches above the high water mark of 1893, reaching 13 feet 10 inches.

MINERS CONFIDENT

Of Victory in Case There is a Strike Called.

HOPES OF A SETTLEMENT

A Strike to Take Place in Jackson, Ohio, District April 1—Relations at Other Mining Centers Very Much Strained.

Indianapolis, March 29.—At national headquarters of the United Mine Workers there was much activity last night. Secretary Wilson is in close communication with President Mitchell and is fully cognizant of Mr. Mitchell's plans for bringing about a settlement of the strained relations now existing in the east between the anthracite miners and the big operators. Mr. Wilson said he did not feel at liberty to discuss the situation until something definite had been done, or until President Mitchell's return. National Committeeman Fred Dilcher arrived yesterday morning and talked the situation over with Secretary Wilson. He is exceedingly confident the miners in the Pennsylvania districts have little to fear from the exactions of the operators. He says the miners are more strongly organized than ever before in the anthracite regions and are prepared to make a strong fight for their rights. Mr. Dilcher left last night for his home in Ohio.

Fred Evans, a prominent organizer of the mine workers, arrived here with Mr. Dilcher, and will remain indefinitely as editor of the Mine Workers' Journal. Mr. Evans expressed confidence that the operators are in no position to defeat the anthracite miners, and he thinks there can be but one end of the present situation—a miners victory.

Columbus, O., March 29.—The new mining scale will go into effect next Monday, and there are two districts in Ohio, the Hocking Valley and subdistrict No. 5, in which the scale has not been signed. The former consists of Belmont, Carroll, Harrison, Jefferson and Tuscarawas counties, in which about 5,000 miners are employed. The latter sub-district consists of Athens, Hocking and Perry counties. The operators have differed on the docking system. All told, there are about 7,500 miners employed in this district. Fears are now entertained in some quarters that there will be a suspension of work in these districts Monday. The operators and miners of sub-district No. 5 will meet in Canton Friday, when an effort will be made to settle the questions in dispute. The outcome in the Hocking Valley hinges on the action of the miners. The operators say there must be a change in the docking system, and the miners will vote next Monday to determine whether a change will be conceded.

The conference held here Thursday between the state officers of the United Mine Works and those of the Jackson district and the operators of Lawrence county, in regard to prices and conditions of mining in the Lawrence county coal field for the coming year, resulted in a disagreement. The miners demanded that the same conditions and prices prevail in Lawrence county as in the Jackson field. To this the operators refused to agree, saying that they would not pay the increased scale demanded. The conference adjourned and the officials of the miners announced that a strike of all the mines in Lawrence county would be called on the first of April. This strike will affect about 1,000 men.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., March 29.—President John Mitchell, Rev. E. S. Phillips and the district presidents of the United Mine Workers arrived in town last night. Mr. Mitchell told the Associated Press reporter that he did not know what the outcome of the meeting today would be. Rev. Phillips spoke in glowing terms of the reception tendered him by J. Pierpont Morgan. He thought the chances were that there would be no strike, but he could not speak positively.

Pardon Too Late.

Columbus, O., March 29.—The president granted a pardon to Henry Beach, a United States prisoner received at the Ohio penitentiary from the Indian Territory, but it came too late. Beach died on March 16. The pardon papers were received at the prison Thursday. He was sentenced to 15 years for larceny, the sentence being unusually severe on account of the fact that he broke jail before trial.

Recommends Disbarment.

Lansing, Mich., March 29.—Some weeks ago Circuit Judge Wiest made a report to the supreme court showing the part taken by Elbert S. Roos, a prominent Kalamazoo attorney, as a director of the Henderson-Ames company, and in counseling the directors of that company relative to their participation in the scheme which resulted in defrauding the state out of $38,000 by the pretended sale of military stores. The court referred the matter to Atty.-Gen. Oren, who yesterday filed a petition for the disbarment of Roos. The petition charges Roos not only with professional misconduct, but also with felony and subornation of perjury. The court has not yet acted in the matter.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

Statistics on the Subject by New York Labor Commissioner.

Albany, March 29.—The state commissioner of labor has issued a statement concerning immigration at the port of New York. It says:

From Oct. 1, 1819, when the general government began to record the number of immigrants arriving at customs districts by sea from foreign countries, to the close of the 19th century—a space of 81 years and three months—the volume of immigration at the port of New York aggregated 13,703,162, which represented nearly seven-tenths of the total arrivals (19,777,283) during the same period at all ports in the United States.

In comparison with the corresponding three months of 1899 there was a slight decline in immigration at the metropolis for the last quarter of 1900, the number of persons who landed in October, November and December having been 74,892 in 1899, and 74,432 in 1900. Of the latter, the largest number were southern Italians, 19,434. Hebrews were second, with 9,163.

The destinations of the immigrants who landed at the port of New York during the last quarter of 1900 were as follows: Alabama, 83; Alaska, 3; Arizona, 67; Arkansas, 14; California, 1,438; Colorado, 831; Connecticut, 1,985; Delaware, 72; District of Columbia, 67; Florida, 205; Georgia, 39; Hawaii, 22; Idaho, 44; Illinois, 3,611; Indiana, 445; Indian Territory, 54; Iowa, 523; Kansas, 267; Kentucky, 92; Louisiana, 388; Maine, 96; Maryland, 417; Massachusetts, 4,094; Michigan, 944; Minnesota, 676; Mississippi, 28; Missouri, 452; Montana, 184; Nebraska, 439; Nevada, 40; New Hampshire, 90; New Jersey, 4,181; New Mexico, 40; New York, 32,424; North Carolina, 5; North Dakota, 650; Ohio, 1,560; Oklahoma, 78; Oregon, 91; Pennsylvania, 13,647; Rhode Island, 835; South Carolina, 4; South Dakota, 858; Tennessee, 65; Texas, 428; Utah, 66; Vermont, 88; Virginia, 97; Washington, 213; West Virginia, 278; Wisconsin, 715; Wyoming, 103.

May Stop Public Work.

Albany, N. Y., March 29.—One hundred million dollars' worth of public contract work in New York city may have to be stopped because of a recent decision of the court of appeals that the law providing for a standard rate of wages applied to public contracts is unconstitutional. If this decision is to hold good, all of the contracts and agreements entered into by Contractor McDonald for the construction of New York's new rapid transit system may have to be annulled. Comptroller Coler, it is said, has the power to abrogate all such contracts, and may be called upon by the labor leaders or taxpayers to do so.

Proposed International Shoot.

London, March 29.—A well attended meeting of the London clay pigeon shooters was held last night. The proposed match with the American clubs was discussed. The discovery that the parliamentary betting act required the £500 purse to be paid outright to the winning team and that subscribers were forbidden to profit on their subscriptions in the event of England winning the purse, somewhat disconcerted the managers. A committee has been appointed to raise the purse, when the result will be communicated to the United States.

Will Resume Operations.

Pittsburg, March 29.—The Star tin plate works, at Etna and Twelfth streets, idle for about six months, will resume operations on April 8 and give employment to between 500 and 600 men. This was announced to-day by J. R. Phillips, the manager of the plant. The Star works are owned by the American Tin Plate Co. and the plant was the only idle one of that concern in this vicinity.

Cleveland at Princeton.

Princeton, N. J., March 29.—Ex-President Grover Cleveland delivered the second of his lectures on the Venezuelan boundary dispute before the students in Alexander hall last night.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

Thirty-six cases of smallpox are reported at Ponce, Porto Rico, but the epidemic is decreasing.

The Canadian contingent for the South African constabulary, over 1,000 strong, has sailed from Halifax to Cape Town.

Roland Reed, the comedian, is said to be critically ill at his home in New York city. Cancer of the stomach is his ailment.

A dispatch from Salonica announces that nine men were scalded to death by the bursting of a steam pipe on the Turkish tornado boat Shehab.

The Hungarian government has forbidden the practice of hypnotism except by medical men under special permission, owing to the number of crimes attributed to hypnotism.

Eleven fresh cases of the bubonic plague, including five Europeans, were officially reported at Cape Town. Five additional deaths have occurred.

Princess Ingeborg Charlotte Frederica, wife of Prince Charles, third son of King Oscar II. of Sweden and Norway, has given birth to a daughter.

Several Vienna newspapers assert that Japan has sounded Great Britain and Germany as to whether they would combine against Russia in the event of the annexation of Manchuria.

The trial of 19 Bulgarians in European Turkey, charged with revolutionary proceedings, has resulted in the condemnation of 3 to death, 11 to penal servitude for life and 5 were acquitted.

Rates for Pan-American.

New York, March 29.—Chairman Farmer of the joint passenger committee of the Trunk Line association and Passenger association said that at a meeting held Thursday in this city it was decided that round trip tickets between New York and Chicago, either eastward or westward, will not be sold. It was feared that there would be some trouble in effecting this arrangement on account of what has been done in regard to Buffalo rates to the Pan-American exposition. The chairman said that little objection was raised to the proposition. He would say nothing regarding what further action had been taken in connection with the Pan-American business.

MICHIGAN MATTERS

Humphrey's Drug Store Bill Was Killed in State Senate.

THEY MAY INVEST IN BONDS

A Bill Passed the House Giving Insurance Companies the Privilege of Purchasing Railroad Bonds—Other Michigan News.

Lansing, Mich., March 29.—The senate Thursday afternoon put itself on record as being opposed to "home rule" relative to the suppression of the liquor trade of drug stores "on the quiet" in villages. It was a triumph for the liquor interests.

Senator Humphrey called up his bill to amend the act for the incorporation of villages so that village boards shall have the same power to suppress drug stores that sell liquor that they now have to suppress saloons.

After considerable discussion, Senator Doherty moved to strike out all after the enacting clause, and the motion carried, 12 to 10. On third reading, the senate concurred in the action of the committee by a vote of 14 to 8.

Senator Humphrey's bill was primarily aimed at the proprietors of the drug stores at the famous village of Three Oaks.

There was much talking in committee of the whole over Senator Baugham's bill requiring black pepper sold in the state to be pure. Senator Robson, a grocer, moved to amend by inserting the word "knowingly," to qualify the act of selling.

Senator Atwood and others declared that no conviction could possibly ever be had if it had to be proved that the grocer sold impure pepper knowingly—that, with the word knowingly in, grocers could simply buy any pepper offered them, and retail it.

Senator Nichols sided with Robson, and declared that no man ought to be convicted of an offense when he didn't know he was doing it.

Robson's amendment prevailed.

Senators Moore and Doherty declared that they might better strike out all after the enacting clause, as the bill as amended practically annuls the present law, which is not a bad one.

The motion to strike out was lost, and the bill was agreed to. Later, on third reading, the bill was passed by a vote of 18 to 0.

In the house Thursday, when Rep. Goodrich's bill, requiring baking powder packages to be labaled as to ingredients of the powder came up on its third reading, Rep. Corwin moved that the label section be stricken out. But this motion was superseded by one to refer the bill to the committee on public health, which latter motion prevailed. The proposed law is desired by the state dairy and food commission.

The house passed Rep. Ferry's bill authorizing Michigan fire and marine insurance companies to invest up to 50 per cent of their total investments in railroad bonds that are secured by a first mortgage and that have for 10 years been paying 4 per cent interest. Rep. Hunt at first wanted the limitation reduced to 10 per cent of such companies' aggregate investments, but he later found 50 per cent would afford better protection.

Rep. Bland of Detroit got through three of his bills. One provides that any light guard or military company which has made application to be accepted as a company of state troops may be incorporated for the purpose of erecting an armory or other edifice.

Another bill provides that veteran corps or civil corps of any light guard or military company shall be entitled to membership as corporators in the company and the right to vote in the civil organization of the company.

The third Bland bill affects religious societies and provides for the incorporation of trustees to take, hold, invest and otherwise manage and control property of religious denominations.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, March 29.—Michigan pensions were granted Thursday as follows: Increase—Addison Lewis, Byron, $9; Oscar J. Booth, Saginaw, $8; Stanis Wasail, Delray, $8; Merritt N. Cleveland, Kalamazoo, $16; Henry G. Bigelow, Muskegon, $45. Widows—Marilla Chrysler, Detroit, $12; Laura Freeland, Midland, $8. War with Spain: Original—Nicholas Busch, Grand Rapids, $52; Frank F. Faling, Eugene, $8.

Will Be Started Up.

Muskegon, Mich., March 29.—The American Rolling Mill Co. has purchased from the American Tin Plate Co. the rolling plant of the latter in this city. The mill has been idle for a year and will be operated at once with a force of 500 men. J. H. Palmer and W. J. Moody of the Rookery building, Chicago, are the prime movers in the new enterprise.

Mine Sold.

Iron Mountain, Mich., March 29.—The big Aragon mine at Norway has been sold by Oglebay, Norton & Co., of Cleveland, to the United States Steel Corporation, and the latter will soon take possession. The deal has been pending for several weeks. The consideration is believed to be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000.

Actor Hackett Still Ill.

Cincinnati, March 29.—Actor James K. Hackett, who was stricken with nervous collapse here last Tuesday night, is still confined to his room. After a consultation the physicians decided that Mr. Hackett should retire from the stage for a month or more. He will probably leave for Philadelphia if able to travel.

A Horrible Outbreak.

"Of large sores on my little daughter's head developed into a case of scald head" writes C. D. Isbell, of Morganton Tenn., but Bucklen's Arnica Salve completely cured her. It's a guaranteed cure for Eczema, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Sores, Ulcers and Piles. Only 25 cents at C. A. Wright's.

Publication of Papers Read by Miss Hialey and Mrs. Howland at the Reception held at the Residence of Mrs. Geo. N. Stacy Monday March 24—The paper read by Miss Haight will be printed in the Herald of April 2.

RECENT EXCAVATIONS IN MICHIGAN.

BY GERTRUDE M. HIALEY.

We as dwellers in Michigan should be doubly interested in the excavations and discoveries which have been and are being made in Northern Michigan, discoveries which point strongly to the belief that the Toltec and Aztec once inhabitated our land, as they did that of Mexico and South America.

Prof. Crispo Emmanuel, of the Royal College of Learning, of Madrid, Spain, has made discoveries in what is known as "the thumb" of Michigan. He has found traces of a pre-historic race that occupied North America thousands of years before Columbus sailed from Genoa.

A stone wall, hidden from view for centuries, has been found buried in the marshes of Eastern Michigan, measuring some 15 to 20 ft. in height and somewhat wider at its base and extending about 25 miles from a point near Sebewaing to the little village of Parisville. It is in a good state of preservation and only escaped discovery before because of the marshy land in which it was buried. Finally, after a forest fire, which burned the entire district, and the brush, which covered the marsh, was swept away, it was found; hatchets and heavy hammers, implements of warfare, curious weapons of copper, and a few metal tablets with hieroglyphics engraved on them, similar to those of the Toltecs found in Mexico.

Prof. Emmanuel's theory is that the Toltec race became divided during the mad rush of the Aztecs, or mound-builders from the north. Part were driven southward and eventually found their way to Mexico and South America. The other, and much smaller portion of the race, were forced to seek refuge in the Peninsula of Michigan and finally fortified the island which has since risen from the water to form "the thumb." The immense wall was erected to protect them from the onslaught of their enemies who did not possess the inventive genius of the Toltec race.

Images and tablets were found near Newberry, Mich., in 1896. Some authorities affirm that, from the fact of these images facing the east, point out the idea that the race who made them were sun-worshipers, and that they look like Egyptian idols though the heads were those of human beings and not of the sacred animals with which the ancient race of the Nile were wont to ornament its carved images. The figures were of a man, a woman and a child and the tablet of stone was near them. They were all made of brown sand stone. The largest is the man, which is nearly life size, both it and the pedestal being formed from the same stone. The tablet is about six in. thick and 18 by 25 in. on each face. On one side a series of inscriptions were engraved, each set in a square of about 1 1-2 inches, there being in all 140 of them. And, again, others say that they bear strong resemblance to the work of the Aztec and Toltec of Mexico and South America, the figures on the tablet being like those found on the ornamentation of the sacrificial altars of the south.

Prof. Harlow I. Smith, of the American Museum of Natural History, writes concerning this. He says the entire district, draining into the Saginaw river and along the shore of Saginaw Bay, is rich in traces of a considerable inhabitance previous to the coming of the white settlers. Work shops where implements were made, village and camp sites, burial grounds, burial mounds, enclosures and embankments for defensive purposes, pits for the storing of provisions, and caches or hoards of blades, have all been discovered in this locality while the surface is strewn with objects made or used by man at a time before the advent of the whites.

Several years ago, workmen, while digging in Saginaw near the Ayers mound, found a number of human skeletons. Practically all were destroyed and none have been saved for science in their whole state. In these graves were found bear teeth, deer bones and culinary refuse in general. From the large number of fish bones found one might conclude that these people took advantage of the resources of the locality and much of their subsistence was obtained from its waters.

It is remarkable that no implement of defence or utensils for domestic use were discovered with the remains, while at the mound, only 300 ft. away, they were found in abundance. Fourteen caches have been discovered of which records are kept. A pottery urn, found in the collection of the late Judge Barter, is 3 ft., 9 in. in circumference and must originally have been over two feet in height. It was discovered inverted over the head of a skeleton at a village site and burial place, on the bluff at the head of the Cass river, six miles from Saginaw.

The so-called "garden beds," characteristic of this state, are found in various parts of the Southern Peninsula and are much varied and highly developed. Near Kalamazoo an extensive survey of one of the most noted prehistoric garden beds was made some years ago for the University of Michigan. An exact map was made and a series of photographs taken. Funds were secured from the Detroit branch of the Archaeological Institute of America with which these interesting and characteristically Michigan remants were made, and a plaster model was made of the "beds" as they now appear. Human skulls are found with circular preforations, the only others ever found being a few discovered in Canada.

The best of eastern institutions have for years been offering courses in the study of American antiquities. A regular course was established at Harvard in 1890. Prof. Smith says, "The study of archaeology as a branch of anthropology develops a liberality of feeling and a strong respect for the religion and customs of other peoples. Its greatest value is, perhaps, not literary or classic in nature, but coldly scientific, useful for determining the laws of development of human activities."

At our great expositions, American products are housed in buildings of European style. American museums are of Greek architecture, yet in America are architectural wonders, marvels of beauty and purity. The pointed arches, the dome, the sculptured lintel are common to Pre-Columbian America. That modern architect, who first builds a purely American building, will make a reputation for himself. So the Michigan potters might find models in Pre-Columbian Michigan pottery. The designers may yet be glad to produce Ancient Michigan art patterns in preference to the crude art, introduced by the pioneer, and even as a change from the very best of art designs. At least, they would be appropriate for Michigan.

So let us as a club of women seeking knowledge, study more about our own state and be proud that we belong to Michigan.

STORY OF POCOHONTAS.

BY MRS. N. A. HOWLAND.

In the dark and early days of our American continent, when not a white foot had ever trod the forest beyond the coast line, and there was not a Christian from the Gulf of Mexico to the North Pole, a little band of ill assorted Englishmen sailed up the Chesapeake bay and anchored with their strange looking craft at the mouth of the Pamunky river.

It was in the month of April, warm and delightful in that climate, and the river being three fathoms deep near shore, the boat, the captain said, could easily be tied to a tree but she lay off shore and cast anchor, while crew and passengers assembled themselves on deck at the captain's orders and listened with awed and respectful attention while he commanded "Hear ye, servants of his great and gracious majesty, King James of England, what your most gracious sovereign hath to say to ye, and what commands he has commanded ye with, for your future control and government in this island." Whereupon two seamen brought forward a heavy brass nailed box and deposited it at the captain's feet and he kneeling and uncovering his head produced a key from a leathern string about his neck and reverently unlocking the lid, brought forth a tin box sealed with the seal of the house of Stuart. Dropping on his knee, the others following his example, he raised his eyes to the bright Virginia sky and said laying his hand upon the seal "These are the instructions of our lord and master, King James, and we do solemnly swear to kee them faithfully, as becometh worshipful subjects, Amen."

The solemn stillness was broken by some crackling branches on the near shore, and with the "Amen" still on their lips their hands reached instinctively for their swords but there was no immediate occasion to be on the defensive, for only a group of Indian women had caused the alarm.

Not every brave hand had seized a sword at this seeming danger. One among them lay in chains that bright afternoon. He had been brought from below at the captain's word and placed in a position to hear the King's sealed instructions. The ship's prison had been damp and foul, and he seemed a hopeful prisoner as he lay on her deck enjoying the warm Virginia sunshine, and watching with a traveler's curiuos interest the unknown shores of that strange country. Being barred by his position of temporary disgrace, and the manacles on his hands and feet from any active participation in the solemn exercises, his eye had been the first to catch a glimpse of the Indian basket makers, whose curiosity had led them too near the bank and caused the momentary alarm among the crew. The prisoner would have been a study even to one well used to reading the lines in the faces of men, and to this child of the forest, who stood foremost in the group of native women, watching with a child's curiosity and a savage's keen instinct, the unusual spectacle of a band of strange creatures from no tribe ever heard of by saga or by story teller of her people, going through a solemn pow-wow in a great canoe unlike any boat her people had ever builded, this was an event of a life time not to be missed by any fear of danger. She listened to the strange sounds and looked at the pale faces of these uninvited visitors in her father's domain with an eager and to the prisoner a charming interest.

The voice of Captain Newport resumed the reading of the royal document and the prisoner listened listlessly through the wordy preamble, until his own name was called. B. Gosnold, E. M. Wingfield, C. Newport, J. Smith, J. Ratcliffe, J. Martin and G. Kendall are named as council to convene to elect an annual president, who with the council shall govern. The prisoner smiled the smile of one who bides his time, conscious that innate power must one day be recognized and that "all things come to him who waits."

He resumed the pleasanter study of the Indian maiden still standing on the bank. His face showed him still a young man. Less than thirty English winters had bronzed his cheek and bleached his beard, still there were lines which care and experience beyond his years had made. He wore his chains lightly, as if his bondage was but a probationary state out of which he should evolve a conqueror. One who had fought the Spaniard victoriously, had been a Christian slave in Turkish chains, had been cast away by pirates on a desert island and left to die, had stood upon a gallows erected by his own countrymen, with a noose about his neck, and yet had escaped death, must bear a charmed life and need not feel the spirit of fear in the hands of his fellow passengers, though their chains are about his neck, while they had the order of his king to make him one of their council, and he dismissed the thought as unworthy a moment's consideration.

He had been a favorite with women too. When he had been captured by Tartars and sold to slavery, a Turkish ruler's daughter had begged his life and sent him into the interior for safe keeping and when tired of her tender solicitude, he escaped this slavery and fled for the border in his chains, his irons were taken off by the Lady Callamata, "who largely supplied his wants."

Doubtless some spicy odor from the shore bore to him a faint reminder of these fair rescuers of other lands and he looked again in the direction of the soft eyed Indian maiden under the Virginia laurel tree, but the daughter of the Powhatans had gathered up her baskets and fled and Captain John Smith was left to his memories of other fair women.

In the December after, Smith having been released and taken his place in the council, was one day called by Governor Ratcliffe to advise with him about procuring food for the little colony. "We have now but one small can of barley a day for five men, even that is water soaked and not fit for food, and yonder in the little open space under the oak, are sixty-seven low mounds, which mark where our neighbors lie. A few weeks more at best and we shall lie beside them, better to die by the savage's arrow than to await here the effect of starvation."

"Who will go with me up the river for corn?" said Capt. Smith, "I wear a charmed life and no wild red man shall take it." Twelve gaunt half famished men, whose stomachs refused longer the salt river water for drink, and the sodden barley for food, rose up in desperation and said "We will be the number." "Three of you sit down" said Smith, "I can use but nine. Martin, Kendall, Gosnold, you remain and level off the graves under the oak, so that there be no elevations there to mark how many of our number are gone and our strength diminished, and when we return, if we be so fortunate as to procure corn, we will sow the space with our barley, that the red man seeing it grow, will think only that we provide for another year's food, and not that we conceal where our comrades sleep beneath it."

The barge containing Smith and his nine companions proceeded carefully up the river toward the Indian village of Wer-o-woc-o-mo-co, where the city of Richmond now stands. This was the seat of the Powhattan kings, a hostile country, where every step was attended with danger; but "hunger's power is strong," and the remembrance of the pinched and suffering faces of the companions still alive and depending upon them at Jamestown, and of the others who had given up the battle and been laid under the oaks of the forest, nerved them to the undertaking, and Smith, choosing John Robinson and Thomas Emery as the two most daring spirits to accompany him on the errand of peril, left the barge in charge of the other seven, and pushed on in his course 20 miles further.

Cassen was left in command of the barge with six men, with orders to keep in midstream. "Remember, Cassen," said Smith, "there is danger to us all if you go near shore. Keep her out in the middle until our return. There seems to be an unusual stir ashore, and more than the usual number of natives are stalking the forest. I apprehend no good to the colony from this assembling of tribes, and nothing must be done to excite them."

"Aye, sir; we will wait you here, and nothing ill shall come from our indiscretion." But the captain had scarce disappeared up stream when the look of sullen dissatisfaction settled upon Cassen's face, and when night came down slowly and gathered thickly over the banks of the James, and strange noises were heard in the forest and strange birds shrieked from the trees, and an occasional wigwam fire showed in the little encampment a squaw stirring a savory bit of venison over the coals, Cassen's impatience to gain fame and food for himself overcame his discretion, and he voiced the thoughts of his men when he said: "Why should we lie here waiting for Smith to bring us food? Why can we not solicit a share in their meal and repay them with our copper dishes? And if they will sell us corn to take back to the village, we can pay for that also with our copper ware, and we shall have then none too much food till the corn grows again. Let us try it—what say ye?"

"We follow you, Cassen," said every one. And six hungry Englishmen crawled eagerly up the bank behind Cassen, who rushed impetuously on toward the wigwam door from whence the brightest light issued. A dozen braves were sitting around the fire listening to the great chief's council; the squaw was still stirring the savory pottage over the wigwam fire. The young warrior nearest the tent door rose with a yell and hurled his tomahawk through the opening at some unseen intruder. A groan and a shriek in an unknown tongue brought the whole company to their feet and a volley of arrows followed the flying Englishmen, whose retreat to the barge was soon accomplished.

When they reached her deck they found that Cassen had been left behind. One said he had seen him fall. After waiting and calling and signaling for a full hour to their rash commander, with no answer but the shrieking of the owls in the tree tops, and the more terrible screeching from the village wigwams, they took up anchor and pulled down stream, leaving him to his fate.

When morning came they had reached Jamestown, but a canoe containing three Indians, with poor wounded Cassen as their guide, had gone up the river in pursuit of Smith and his party. O-pe-can-cha-nough, the brother of the great Powhattan, but far more bloodthirsty and cruel, led the pursuit.

Discovering a canoe tied to the bank led the Indians to spring ashore and follow the tracks of unmoccasined feet in the direction of a smouldering campfire. Two pale-faced warriors lay asleep, with their feet to the ashes. This was the looked-for prey, and the great Ope-can-cha-nough dispatched both with his club as he would have killed a spotted adder before it had time to rise and strike him. The white chief was not there—it was he they most feared—but yonder lay his cloak and the strange black hat with the drooping feather. They concealed themselves behind the underbrush, and lying flat and motionless, covered with fallen leaves, awaited his return. Soon, with ears to the ground, they heard the slow step of heavy feet that bear a burden. The white chief was bringing baskets of corn to his dead comrades. He shouted out encouragingly to his sleeping friends, let down his load and came near to see why there was no responsive shout, and then, transfixed with horror, stood realizing that he was alone, single-handed, in an enemy's country, twenty miles from a white face, with only the dead bodies of his friends for companions. Then, with a fierce yell, the concealed enemy sprang toward him. His hand bravely grasped a sword, but the odds were too many. His arms were pinioned by a skilfully thrown lasso, and Captain Smith was again a prisoner.

No hope of reaching the barge remained; but life, even to a man in his desperate straits, was sweet, and he knew that superstition has saved as well as lost many lives.

Now that he was harmless, O-pe-can-cahn-ough proceeded to amuse himself by examining this curious specimen of an enemy. He felt his clothes, pulled off his top boots, took the long plume from his hat and placed it in his own headdress, appropriated his cloak and ruff, and seemed in no hurry to kill so harmless a prey. The wary captain begged for the use of a hand, and, taking a compass from his pocket and pointing to the moss always on the south side of the tree trunks, made them understand that the compass pointed always north. Blindfolding his own eyes and turning around and around to lose the direction, with the compass in hand he again told them correctly which way was north. Then, with inkhorn and quill pen, he wrote a message to the friends in the settlement, and, pointing to the copper kettle which hung over the campfire, made them understand that if they would carry this message to the white colony and wait until two suns had set, and then dig at a place where the compass pointed, more of the kettles would be found. Ope-can-cah-nough tested the truth of the white magician's words and decided that he was a god, and led him around by a long tether to be exhibited among the tribes.

He was taken before the great Powhattan; all these wonderful things were told of him; a great council was held, and it was finally decided that he must die.

Then Smith, remembering how he had twice before owed his life to a woman's tender heart, bestowed his best glances and smiles upon the king's daughter — the same maiden whose attention he had so strongly attracted when he lay in chains upon the deck of the Constant in early spring.

When the great stones were brought in and laid at Powhattan's feet he understood their terrible meaning by the piteous glances Pochahontas bent upon him and by the appealing attitude she made before her father.

There was no sign of relenting on the old chief's face. His was the only arm deemed worthy to strike so distinguished a victim, and the weapon was already in his hand and the Englishman's head upon the cruel stone, when, instead of the deadly club descending, he felt only the soft arms of the Indian maiden.

In the days that followed, when the handsome captain was but a slave of the fair princess—saved to make for her beads and bells and ornaments of copper, and to teach her of the wonderful things that lay in the land of civilization over the sea—it is little wonder that she loved him, even as had the Turkish woman and Lady Callamata, on the Russian border, and that Smith, through her, obtained his restoration to his people.

But gratitude sits lightly on human hearts, and, restored to freedom, we forget our bondage and too often the hand that delivers. Gifts of deerskins and beadwork and blueberries and all manner of food were lavished upon the little colony, while Smith was its leading spirit, and visits to the strange pale-faced people were to the fair barbarian like trips to fairyland.

One day the great white winged ship sailed away to an unknown country and Smith was seen no more in the colony and the Indian maiden learned one of the lessons of civilization that

"Love is not always wise,
And it is not always blest
For it bringeth tearful eyes
And it loads a sighing breast."

The forlorn princess grieved but still haunted the settlement in the hope that he might return. Like Ruth she resolved "thy people shall be my people" and continued to supply the colonist's wants for his sake and turned to his next friend, John Rolfe, for comfort and for news of him. Her tribe was bent on a war of extermination. Their suspicions could not be allayed and she was powerless to placate her father's wrath. He forbade her his wigwam unless her visits to the colony ceased, she persisted and was driven to the tent of old Ope-can-cahnough for shelter.

The old Indian women of this family, like their white sisters were covetous and greedy, and had set longing eyes upon the bright copper kettles of the white settlers. Pocohontas was betrayed into visiting an English ship with her aunts and cousins and they for the gift of the prettiest kettle in the store, went away and left her a prisoner in the hands of the people she had so faithfully befriended. She was held as a hostage for the good behavior of her father's tribe and so far succeeded that hostilities were for a long time delayed.

John Rolfe consoled and comforted the fair prisoner and as the dear friend of a dead lover she finally married him and sailed away to that land of which she had heard so much, and where her lover slept. All that he had told her and more were true of the splendors of that foreign court. The king and all the princes and great ladies did her honor and loaded her with gifts more than she had ever seen in her dreams, but among the others there came kneeling before Queen Anne to speak in her favor, the white chieftain whom she had mourned as dead. Here he was in the flesh, not a spirit as she had been wont to regard him, but a living man, relating for the entertainment of all these fine people the story of her love. She turned her face away and wept and refused to see more of the court grandeur.

With her husband she sorrowfully embarked for the land of her fathers, realizing with our own Willis

"Love, love, love, soon makes the hair turn gray
When only one fills all the heart,
And that love far away."

When night fell over all the sea and the shores where he dwelt were no longer discernable, she closed her eyes wearily upon the disappointments of this world, laid her little infant son in John Rolfe's arms and awakened in the green and happy hunting ground "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

On the Government.

They were two big, burly Indians. The long eagle feather in the hat of one who is known as "chief" and the bright red ostrich tip in the sombrero of the other would have told that if the unmistakable features had not evidenced it. A government employee, it matters not who, but one who may possibly in certain events happening make a "stake" out of the tribe to which these Indians belong, was doing the honors of the capitol and showing the braves about the corridors. They left the Indian committee room and came to the door of the house restaurant.

"Let's have a bite to eat," suggested the man with the graft.

"All right," was the quick reply of the aborigines.

At the luncheon counter the one who could master the most English asked, "Guv'munt pay?"

"Oh, yes," responded the host, thinking that the quickest way to inform them that they would not have to stand good for the bill.

"Ugh!" grunted the brave, "we eat lot, guv'munt pay." And they did—four cups of coffee each, half a dozen hard boiled eggs, three ham sandwiches, one dozen doughnuts, a whole baked chicken, ice cream, a whole pie each and besides that a thirst for fire water that was absolutely appalling. The luncheon counter looked as though a cyclone might have paid it a visit by the time the Indians got through, and the bill that the "guv'munt" clerk had to foot made his week's salary look like 7 cents.

"Guv'munt heap good," grunted the brave as he picked his teeth in true "white brother" fashion in the corridor. "We eat here again." But it will not be in company with that particular clerk.—Washington Star.

"How Soon We Are Forgot."

A writer in a Washington newspaper, in a column devoted to instructive and entertaining chat about the capitol, expresses surprise because in the basement of the building are portraits of "worthy old gentlemen" forgotten by "nine-tenths" of the visitors to the building and wonders somewhat why Richard Montgomery, Thomas Mifflin, Charles Thomson and Francis Hopkinson should find a place in the memory of the painter and on the wall of the senate basement.

The writer had looked in Fiske's "History of the United States" and could not find either Thomson or Hopkinson. When he goes to Quebec, he may find the mark to indicate where Montgomery fell while trying to capture the citadel and the house in which he died. At St. Paul's church, New York, he can find his tomb. Mifflin he can find as the president of the congress that received Washington's resignation, and Thomson he will discover to have been regarded as one of the brightest men of the Revolutionary time, while he has but to look at the original Declaration of Independence to see "Fras." Hopkinson's name, one of the best known of all signers because of the brilliancy and variety of his accomplishments.—New York Times.

A man who gets into the habit of never making mistakes is altogether too near perfection for this world.—Chicago News.

Good advice is like castor oil—easy to give, but hard to take.—Atchison Globe.

New England Youngsters.

One of Detroit's lawyers, who has had such professional success as enables him to spend a portion of each summer in a quaint New England section, brings back some very interesting facts.

"I take my outing in one of those parts," he says, "where the farms are so run down that you can't hope for a good crop of anything unless it be beans or goats. One of the consequences is that the young men have to find some other part of the country in which to make a living, and I'll wager that there is not another community in the Union where the average age is higher.

"Knowing me to be a lawyer, some of the residents called me into a conference about the township treasurer who had been guilty of advancing a teacher $2 on her salary without the consent of the trustees. There was not a man there except myself who was not past 82, and two were over 90.

"While I was making a talk in favor of the treasurer and trying to minimize his transgressions without offending the selectmen, as they called them, a man of at least 65 slouched through the door and took a seat.

"'Just a minute,' said one of the oldest veterans, as he interrupted and glowered at the intruder. 'How often have I quoted that there quotation to you 'bout old men for council and young men for war? This is a council. Now you just run out till we get through, Willie. If there's any a'rest to be made, we'll call on you.' And Willie went without turning a word."—Detroit Free Press.

Finding Days of the Week.

The prematurely aged young man whose duty it is to get up The Record's "Answers to Correspondents" column says that queries of the same nature always come in bunches. They seem to be epidemic. Just at present a great many people seem eager to know what day of the week they were born on, and it keeps him busy figuring the dates out. He has a system which he uses, and for the benefit of others who may be in search of like information it is herewith given:

For instance, take Jan. 15, 1868. A man born on that date writes to know what day of the week it fell on. In order to ascertain this divide the figures representing the year by 4, rejecting the remainder, if any. To this dividend and quotient add the number of days in the year to the given date, inclusive, always reckoning 28 days in February. Divide the sum by 7, and the remainder will be the number of the day of the week, 0 signifying Saturday. Here is the illustration, taking Jan. 15, 1868:

```
                                4)1868
                                   467
Number of days to Jan. 15.........  15
                                7)2350
                                   335—5
```

Thus, by this calculation, which is infallible, it will be seen that Jan. 15, 1868, fell on the fifth day of the week, which is Thursday.—Philadelphia Record.

Thrifty.

A Canadian minister had just married a couple. The registers were signed, and nothing remained but the giving and taking of the fee. The bridegroom, a strapping young fellow, asked:

"How much is it?"

The parson glanced at the smiling bride and slyly answered:

"Whatever you think it is worth."

Now, it should have been worth a great deal, for the girl was young and pretty.

"I reckon it's worth about 5 shillings," said the swain, holding out two half crowns.

The clergyman looked blankly at the coins, then turned to the fair one.

"I'll leave it to you, madam," he said. "What do you think it's worth?"

What did this young and blushing bride do? She reached out, took the coins, handed one half crown to the minister and put the other into her pocket!

"A thrifty wife," said the minister, with a sigh, "is her husband's crown."

Perhaps he ought to have said half crown.—London Tit-Bits.

Fooled His Doctor.

The late Rev. H. R. Hawels, who was equally notable as preacher, journalist, lecturer and musician, suffered from a dangerous hip disease when a boy of 9. The celebrated Sir Benjamin Brodie, who was asked if a change of scene would benefit the afflicted youth, answered, "Take him anywhere—it does not matter."

Hawels lived to laugh at his doctor, and half a century later, after a life of exceptional industry, he was in vigorous health.—New York World.

The Two Pinnacles.

"The performance reaches the highest pinnacle of dramatic wit," wrote the press agent

"Isn't that rather a strong statement?" asked the dramatic editor.

"Oh, no! We are getting $5 for general admission."

Alas, it is sometimes true that we mistake the pinnacle of price for the pinnacle of art!—Baltimore American.

Be a Man First of All.

Quite beneath all discussion of electives and vocations, as whether I will be an engineer or a clergyman, is the certainty, for every youth who would be truly successful, that he must be a man; that he ought to be a "full grown man," as the old version read squarely and none too strongly; to be a "perfect man."—Success.

Ransoming the Dead.

In mediæval times not only were living prisoners ransomed by their friends, but a ransom was demanded even for the bodies of those slain in action.

Shaves of a Lifetime.

Beard appears to grow at the same rate and to follow the same rules of personal conduct as the hair of the head. So if a man began shaving when he was 16 and lives to be 70 years old he will have cut more than a little bit off the top. If he could keep in position all he has thrown away, a head of hair 35 feet long and a beard 27 feet long, all in one bunch, would enable him to travel with a circus summers and sit in a store window to advertise a hair restorer in the winter.—Ainslee's Magazine.

Eugene J. Hall, the poet and publisher, says that one dose of Foley's Honey and Tar restored his voice when hoarseness threatened to prevent his lecture at Central Music Hall, Chicago. Nothing else as good. J. J. Orr.

A Modern Polonius.

"My son," said the fond but wise parent, "you are leaving me to go out into the world. I have nothing to give you but advice. Never tell a lie. If you wish to put one in circulation get it published. A lie cannot live, but it takes one a blamed long time to fade out of print.

"Always read your contract. A man might consider he was getting a sinecure if he were offered a position picking blossoms off a century plant; but, you see, he wouldn't have a remunerative occupation if he were paid on piecework.

"Be not overcritical. Even the most ordinary sort of a genius can tell when the other fellow is making a fool of himself.

"Remember that the young man, like the angler's worm, is rather better for being visibly alive.

"Be careful in the choice of your surroundings. Environment will do a great deal for a man. For example, flour and water in a china jug is cream sauce. In a pail on the sidewalk it is billsticker's paste.

"Don't forget that there's a time for everything and that everything should be done in its proper time. Never hunt for bargains in umbrellas on a rainy day.

"You may make enemies. If you know who they are, don't mention them. Silence is golden. It saves the money that might otherwise be spent in defending a libel suit. If you don't know who they are—well, abuse lavished on a concealed enemy is like charity indiscriminately bestowed; it's a good thing wasted."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

How Blaine Remembered Henderson.

It was before General Henderson had been elected to congress, and Blaine was speaker of the house. Henderson was in Washington, and naturally Blaine was one of the statesmen that he much desired to meet, and the opportunity came of a morning just as the speaker was passing through the lobby on his way to the marble rostrum. The formal greetings were exchanged in a brief moment, and General Henderson was left to see the swinging doors close on the form of the Republican leader.

Six years later General Henderson again came to Washington, this time to get Iowa divided into two judicial districts. He put up at Wormley's, where Blaine also lived, it being in those days a fashionable and flourishing hostelry. A week or so after his arrival from Iowa, as General Henderson was entering the dining room, he met Blaine after having passed and repassed him many times. The Maine man grasped him cordially by the hand, called him by name and inquired about Iowa.

"I had heard of Senator Blaine's wonderful faculty for remembering names," says General Henderson. "When I had seated myself at the table, I beckoned to the head waiter.

"'Hasn't Mr. Blaine asked you my name?' I said to him. 'Now think hard and be sure of your answer.'

"'Yes, sah,' replied the waiter. 'He done called me ovah las' night an asked yo' name an all about yo'. I told him yo' was Mistah Henderson.'"—Washington Post.

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but when all other medicines failed, three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 58 pound." It's absolutely guaranteed to cure Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Bronchitis and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at C. A. Wright's drug store.

The Bidwell entertainers last night at the Universalist church were greeted to a small audience but gave a good entertainment. Miss Ola is a picture on the stage, is a fine reciter and has a splendid baritone voice. Many were disappointed on not hearing "The Confessional" as was advertised, owing to the smallness of the stage. Mr Bidwell rendered some fine selections on the violin in a pleasing manner and his dialect stories kept the audience laughing.

Morning subject Sunday at the Baptist church "From Palm Sunday to Easter." Evening subject "Borrowed Religion."

Prof. F. S. Goodrich, of Albion college, will deliver the 20th Century Thank-offering address for the W. F. M. S. of the M. E. church Sunday morning next and in the evening he will lecture at the M. E. church on the subject, "Living, or a Life."

Morning subject at the Presbyterian church Sunday will be "Not Yet," a sermon for young people. Evening theme, "Hinderances to the Acceptance of Christ." Preaching services will be held in the church each night next week. Rev. E. M. McMillen, of Adrian will preach Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Research Circle.

The ladies of the Research Circle held their last meeting for the year at their club room Tuesday evening. Music was furnished by the Tecumseh orchestra, who rendered some fine music and were heartily encored. A paper was read on "The Causes of and the Revolution." After another fine selection by the orchestra, all were asked to take part in an old fashioned spelling match. Sides were chosen by Mrs. J. J. Freeman and Miss Sena Hosmer and the words were pronounced by Mr. Kellogg. Mrs. Belcher won the prize, a box of Lowney's. Cuts were drawn for the consolation prize, a toy, which was secured by Mrs. Freeman. Dainty refreshment were served, after which the ladies and their guests departed for home.

Red Cat Inn.

The play by Mark E. Swan and company at the opera house last evening was good. The play in itself was light and catchy, and acted with much life and in a manner befitting a much better company. In fact the show was much above the average and on their return Saturday evening, April 6, will no doubt get a full house.

Knights of Pythias Visit Adrian.

Maple City lodge No. 39 Knights of Pythias issued invitations to all the lodges of the same order in Lenawee and two lodges in Monroe Tuesday night to meet grand chancellar G. L. Lusk. Over 250 Knights responded to the invitation and were royally entertained.

The Light Guard armory was secured for the work in the third degree and promptly at eight o'clock Chancellor Commander Hugh Mills called the lodge to order. The Adrian team did the work in a pleasing manner conferring third rank on Henry Lentz. Following the work Grand Chancellor Lusk of Bay City, who was introduced before the work began made a few remarks warmly commending the Adrian team in their work, which was also highly appreciated by the visiting lodges.

On invitation the members of the visiting lodges were conducted to the dining hall, which was Castle hall, the main lodge room of the Knights converted into a dining room, and it was highly decorated in the lodge colors, red, white and blue, for the occasion. The tables were arranged in two rows along the main room from north to south with the speaker's table next to the stage. These tables were decorated with myrtle, the emblem of the order. Prof. Cramer's orchestra occupied a position on the stage and played nice music during the banquet.

When everything was ready the knights marched in from the armory headed by Sir Knight W. F. Ayres and while the "Pythian March," composed by Prof. Morrison, was being played by the enlarged orchestra, the banqueters took their places at the tables. After an invocation by Prelate J. B. Richards the knights took hold and were regaled by the following menu: Hunyadi water, baked white fish, bread, pickles, cold boiled ham, roast beef, creamed potatoes hot rolls, coffee, cream, ice cream, cake.

After the banquet was over the toastmaster, J. B. Welch, announced that a feast of reason would take place. First on the program was a march by the orchestra "The Blue and the Gray," after which they again played "The Pythian March." Mr. Welch then introduced the speakers of the evening. The first was S. Milo Dole, who responded to the toast "By Degrees." Mr. Dole's toast was a feature of the evening.

Miss Rosa Beard was then announced for a specialty, who with Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Beard were stopping in the city. Frank Smith, of Morenci lodge, came next to respond to the toast "Man to Man." He succeeded in making his hearers laugh. Next on the program was an Irish specialty from J. C. Beard. Grand Chancellor Lusk was then announced and took the platform while speaking. Geo. Scott gave a rendition of The Silly Boy.

Don Bowen, of our home lodge, responded to Wherein Pythianism excels Most. He said if it was left to him personally to decide he would say that it flourished most at Tecumseh, where they are the youngest lodge and have grown to be the second in strength and the first in popularity. He spoke of the order in the east and in the west, and of its most excellent work in the hearts of the members. Mrs. Beard then gave a couple of coon songs. Dr. O. N. Rice, of Tipton, responded to the toast, Pythianism at the Bedside.

Hugh Mills made a few remarks. Mr. Cobb then spoke of the lodge at Hudson and Frank Barnum set the audience wild with his rendition of the Whistling Coon. Owing to the lateness of the hour several refused to respond and it was after 3 o'clock before the program closed, although some of the lodges had departed before. Perhaps never before in the history of this lodge have they been more royally entertained, nor could the Adrian lodge ever have bidden guests to a more elegant affair. They proved themselves to be genial hosts.

A BLOODY DEED.

Farmer Murders His Hired Man and Kills Himself.

Mayville, Mich., March 29.—The Leix home, two miles southwest of Mayville, was the scene of a bloody tragedy Thursday morning when Christian Leix, aged 35 years, in a fit of insanity, murdered his hired man, Jacob Mooth, Jr., aged 19, and then killed himself with a razor.

Young Mooth came to live at the Leix home Wednesday, having hired out for the summer. Yesterday morning Leix and Mooth left the house for barn, with the intention of hitching up a team to haul manure. Just what took place between the two will never be known, as both were found half an hour later in a pig pen adjoining the barn with their throats cut. Mooth's jugular vein had been severed and he died from loss of blood soon after the bodies were found. Leix's throat was cut almost from ear to ear, but the main veins were not severed. A doctor sewed up the wound but he died before noon. Mooth also had a gash cut in one hand, showing that a struggle had taken place between the two.

Leix had been under a doctor's care for several months, and members of the family now recall various acts of his which, while passed by, were noticed at the time, and now indicate that he was not in his right mind. He was one of the well-to-do German farmers of the township, and leaves a widow, two children, parents and brothers and sisters. Their family life had always been happy. Mooth was a single man.

Spread of Typhoid.

Lansing, Mich., March 29.—The necessity for taking precautions in caring for typhoid fever patients is strikingly demonstrated by a case reported from northern Michigan. An employe in a lumber camp fell sick with typhoid fever and was removed to a farm house in an adjoining township. The case was not reported to the health officer, and no precautions were taken for the avoidance or destruction of the infection, owing to the ignorance of the family and nurse and the neglect or inability of the physician to give directions. The nurse (a brother) slept with the patient; the infected excreta were not disinfected; nurse and patient drank from the same cup, etc. As was to be expected under such circumstances, the nurse and two members of the farmer's family took the disease. Later the cases were reported, and under the health officer's direction the necessary precaution was taken and further spread of the disease prevented.

Reversed.

Blackburn — Judge Snyder made a rule some time ago that all women should remove their hats in his court, but I see that the order is not enforced.

Whitebead—No. The women folks appealed to the judge's wife, and she rendered a dissenting opinion.—Denver News.

GREAT PUBLIC CONVENIENCE.

The Detroit Trust Company and Its Field of Work.

The convenience to the general public of a strong association which can assume and carry out fully any and every duty of a trustee, is obvious. Such an organization is the Detroit Trust Company, with a capital and surplus of a million dollars. It occupies offices at 82 and 84 Griswold street. The officers are: Alexander McPherson, president; Theo. D. Buhl and Henry Stephens, vice-presidents; Geo. L. McPherson, treasurer and assistant secretary; and A. E. Mason, trust officer; and the board of directors includes many of the soundest financial names in Michigan. The Detroit Trust Company is duly authorized to act as executor and trustee under wills; administrator of estates; guardian of minors and other incompetent persons; assignee and receiver of insolvent estates; agent for the registration and transfer of bonds and stocks, and the payment of coupons and dividends.

It takes entire charge of real and personal property of individuals, firms and corporations at reasonable rates; collects rents, pays taxes and other expenses and makes repairs. It invests the funds of its patrons in safe interest-bearing securities at small cost and issues certificates of deposit bearing interest.

Our readers having business in any of these lines cannot do better than to correspond with this excellent organization. An investigation of its methods will substantiate all its claims to public utility.

A LONG FELT WANT.

It is Supplied in This Vicinity At Last.

It is hard to always be pleasant.

Good natured people are often irritable.

If you knew the reason you would not be surprised.

Ever have Itching Piles?

Not sick enough to go to bed or not well enough to be content.

Nothing will annoy you so.

The constant itching sensation.

Hard to bear, harder to get relief.

Keeps you awake nights.

Spoils your temper—nearly drives you crazy.

Isn't relief and cure a long felt want?

It is to be had for everyone in Doan's Ointment.

Doan's Ointment never fails to cure Itching Piles, Eczema, or any itching of the skin.

Here is proof of it at the testimony of an Ann Arbor citizen:

Mr. C. C. Church, of 520 South 7th street, Ann Arbor, now retired from the active duties of life, says: "I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Ointment. To anyone requiring a healing and soothing preparation it will prove invaluable. I suffered for years from itching hemorrhoids and though I tried everything I could hear of and used remedies prescribed by scores of friends I was unable to obtain permanent relief until my attention was called to Doan's Ointment. I was somewhat surprised after the second application to notice what a different effect it had from anything I had hitherto used. Encouraged I used it strictly according to directions and in a surprisingly short length of time when you take into account the number of years I was afflicted, the irritation ceased and the inflammation was allayed. When Doan's Ointment cured me it will cure others."

Doan's Ointment for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

Treatment of Burns.

Burns may be ordinary, but they lose none of their smart because of the ease with which they are acquired. Some persons seem to have a perfect genius for getting burned. If they strike a match, it breaks and scorches them, while a visit to the kitchen ends in a burn from the oven or a scald from hot water or steam. Of course the right thing to do with a burn is to get it away from all contact with the air and to do this with all possible haste.

The necessary articles for the treatment should be on hand, and they are baking soda—not washing soda, notice—fresh fat of some sort and several thicknesses of cotton cloth. It is an excellent plan to have a bottle of carron oil ready for such emergencies. Carron oil is made by shaking together equal parts of linseed oil and limewater. If the skin is broken over the burn, use the oil without the soda. Otherwise moisten the soda with olive oil or sweet oil or even lard or cold cream and apply it. Over this wrap the cloth. Cotton batting is often used for covering the burn and keeping out the air, but it is not to be recommended. It is not a good plan to use flour, dusting it over a burn, for it frequently hardens and is of little comfort.

One of the simplest measures for a superficial burn is to apply the white of an egg with a soft piece of old muslin, adding more as it dries.

An Anecdote of Verdi.

The first production of Verdi's opera "Othello" took place at Milan, and all the prominent musical critics of Europe foregathered in the Cathedral City in honor of the occasion. Among them was a Parisian journalist of wide reputation and admitted authority in the musical world. His first care on his arrival in Milan was to seek out Verdi and ask to be allowed to be present at one of the final rehearsals.

The composer received him with extreme politeness, but replied that he could not possibly grant his request, as he had decided that the rehearsals were to be absolutely private, and he could not make an exception in the favor of any one journalist, however distinguished.

The Paris critic, far from pleased at this answer, protested that in these circumstances his account of the opera might not be all he should like it to be. "You see," he explained to the composer, who affected not quite to understand, "I shall have to telegraph my article the same evening. It will necessarily be hastily written, and the impression in Paris the next day may suffer in consequence."

But Verdi was more than equal to the occasion. "My dear sir," he made answer, "I do not write for 'the next day.'" The critic bowed himself out.

Utilizing an Ancestor.

A self made man with a taste for art, thinking he would like to have about his house some marble presentments of his ancestors, ordered of a fifth rate sculptor a bust of his grandfather.

In due time it was sent home, and after a few days, his admiration being exhausted, the wealthy man sent for his plumber.

"I don't mind confessing to you," said the former, "that I don't appreciate the fine arts unless they are turned to some useful purpose. Now, I have something to suggest to you."

And he proceeded to give some instructions to the tradesman.

A week later, on the anniversary of his birthday, the millionaire pointed out with pride to his guests in the middle of his conservatory the bust of his grandfather, from the top of whose head rose gracefully a jet of limpid water, falling into a marble basin in which some fine gold and silver fish disported themselves.—Christian Endeavor World.

By Way of Suggestion.

"The trouble with me," spoke the young man who was on his way home with his best and loveliest from a party at the Kenhurst club, "is that I always feel embarrassed when I am out in company. I never know what to do with my hands."

"Suppose you just hold them up," said a hoarse voice in his ear.

The voice pertained to a large, rough looking man with a mask on his face and a large, rough looking revolver in his hand, and the youth lost no time in complying with the suggestion.—Chicago Tribune.

Energy will do anything that can be done in this world, and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunities, will make a two legged animal a man without it.

Pity and Beauty

The most beautiful thing in the world is the baby, all dimples and joy. The most pitiful thing is that same baby, thin and in pain. And the mother does not know that a little fat makes all the difference.

Dimples and joy have gone, and left hollows and fear; the fat, that was comfort and color and curve--all but pity and love--is gone.

The little one gets no fat from her food. There is something wrong; it is either her food or food-mill. She has had no fat for weeks; is living on what she had stored in that plump little body of hers; and that is gone. She is starving for fat; it is death, be quick!

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the fat she can take; it will save her.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

HE CURSED THE TOWN

END OF THE FIRST CAPITAL OF ILLINOIS PROPHESIED BY AN INDIAN.

The Destruction of the Town of Kaskaskia Was In Accordance With the Last Words of the Chief Who Died For a Woman's Love.

Since the waters of the Mississippi river washed away the last vestige of Kaskaskia, the first capital of Illinois, an old legend that contained the prophecy of the total destruction of the once flourishing little city has been recalled. Kaskaskia was situated on a peninsula at the junction of the Kaskaskia and the Mississippi rivers, and in 1882 the Mississippi river cut its way through the peninsula, leaving the remnant of the town on an island. The water continued to wash away the rich alluvial deposits on which Kaskaskia was built until, late in 1900, the last foot of the land where the town once stood disappeared. This singular ending of Kaskaskia's once splendid ambitions has recalled to the superstitious the story that the town was cursed in the eighteenth century by an Indian who had been wronged by one of the leading citizens.

Jean Benard came to this country from France in 1698, bringing with him his wife and his 10-year-old daughter Marie. The family settled in Kaskaskia, where Benard established a merchandising business. The Frenchman soon became one of the most prosperous and most influential men of the town. Marie, his daughter, grew to be a beautiful woman, much courted by the most eligible young men of the new country. She was in no hurry to accept any of them, and her fame as a belle spread from Lake Michigan to the gulf of Mexico.

A young chief of the Kaskaskia tribe of Indians, having become converted to Christianity after several years of study under the tutelage of the Jesuits, built himself a house in Kaskaskia and was taken into partnership in one of the trading houses there. He was prosperous, handsome and well educated and was soon received into the homes of the white settlers. One night at a ball he happened to meet Marie Benard.

The girl was at once fascinated by the tall, fine looking Indian, who fell in love with her at first sight and made no secret of his admiration. But Benard pere soon noticed the attachment and forbade his daughter from communicating with the young Indian. To make sure that there would be no more meetings Benard used his influence to prevent the chief from attending any of the social entertainments given in Kaskaskia.

But love always finds a way, and the young couple managed to see each other despite all the precautions of the girl's father. But Benard became aware of these meetings and again took means to prevent them. He was a man of wealth and influence, and he had the Indian forced out of his partnership in the trading company.

The Indian left Kaskaskia. For almost a year nothing was heard of him, and Benard thought that his daughter had forgotten her lover, for she appeared gay and careless, and she accepted with apparent pleasure the attentions of a young Frenchman. One night when a large ball at Kaskaskia was at its height Marie Benard disappeared.

Those who searched for Marie discovered that the young chief of the Kaskaskians had been seen that evening in the town, and the conclusion was at once reached that the girl had eloped with him. Benard at once organized a party to go in pursuit of the fugitives. As there was a heavy snow on the ground, their trail was easily discovered and followed. The Indian and Marie had crept away afoot, and as their pursuers were supplied with fast horses the young lovers were captured after a day's chase about 40 miles from Kaskaskia. Their destination had been the French settlement at St. Louis, where the Indian had provided a home for his wife.

The Indian surrendered without resistance, and the posse started on the journey back to Kaskaskia, taking the two captives. Most of the men who composed Benard's party wanted to kill the Indian instantly, but Benard would not allow it, for he said that they should leave him to deal with his daughter's lover.

When the party reached Kaskaskia, the girl was placed in the convent there. Then Benard took the Indian to the bank of the Mississippi and, binding him tightly to a log, turned him adrift in the river. As the helpless Indian floated away to his death he raised his eyes to heaven and cursed Benard, who, he declared, would die a violent death. The Indian's last words were a prophecy that within 200 years the waters which were then bearing him away would sweep from the earth every vestige of the town, so that only the name would be left.

The unhappy girl died in the convent. Benard was killed in 1712 in a duel. The last trace of Kaskaskia has been obliterated, and the superstitious declare that the Indian's curse has had something to do with the passing of the once flourishing town. On dark and stormy nights the ghost of the Indian is said to appear. The specter, with strong arms bound and face upturned, floats slowly by on the river where the stream sweeps by the site of the vanished city in which Marie Benard once lived and in which she died mourning the red man that she loved.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

GAIN FLESH

An Absolute Necessity in Many Cases.

A DECREASE IN WEIGHT FREQUENTLY INDICATES A DECLINE.

Our Modern Rebuilder, Vinol, Will Help You Do It.

THE WAY IT ACTS ON A DEPLETED CONSTITUTION IS SIMPLY MARVELOUS.

Are you getting thin? If you are you had better watch yourself. Take Vinol. It will build you up quickly and surely.

A healthy man does not vary much from year to year in his weight. This is as it should be. Vinol enables the organs of the body to renew flesh, muscle tissue, bone structure, and attends to purifying the great vital current of the human system, the blood.

Vinol contains the active curative properties of Cod-Liver Oil in a highly concentrated state, and is the most wonderful tonic that we have ever had anything to do with.

Vinol acts upon the stomach in a beneficial way, enabling it to obtain for itself the necessary ingredients from the food that is taken into it to build up the pure healthy body and increase the weight.

Mr. H. M. Stufell, who is a well-known passenger trainman on the Boston and Maine Railroad, suffered, as many railroad men do, with kidney and other troubles. He writes as follows:

"My kidneys troubled me a great deal, my bowels were very irregular, I had great distress in my stomach, suffered with bilious headaches, had no appetite, could not sleep nights, and was losing flesh rapidly. I began to take Vinol, I am now on my third bottle, and it is doing wonders for me. My kidneys are better, my bowels are again regular, my stomach no longer troubles me, and no more headaches, and as for appetite, don't speak of it; I sleep like a top and have gained thirteen pounds. You can count on me always to recommend Vinol as the king of medicines."

With many such testimonials as the above coming before us it is not strange that we endorse Vinol as strongly as we do. We unhesitatingly agree to return to any one who has taken Vinol and is not satisfied that it has accomplished all that we claim for it every cent that they have paid us for this remedy.

Every woman loves to think of the time when a soft little body, all her own, will nestle in her bosom, fully satisfying the yearning which lies in the heart of every good woman. But yet there is a black cloud hovering about the pretty picture in her mind which fills her with terror. The dread of childbirth takes away much of the joy of motherhood. And yet it need not be so. For sometime there has been upon the market, well known and recommended by physicians, a liniment called which makes childbirth as simple and easy as nature intended it. It is a strengthening, penetrating liniment, which the skin readily absorbs. It gives the muscles elasticity and vigor, prevents sore breasts, morning sickness and the loss of the girlish figure.

An intelligent mother in Butler, Pa., says: "Were I to need Mother's Friend again, I would obtain 9 bottles if I had to pay $5 per bottle for it."

Allegan county gives 1,500 majority for the state ticket. Amendments defeated.

Coldwater democrats elected E. E. Palmer mayor by 100 majority.

A democrat, Z. L. Baldwin, was elected mayor of Niles by a large majority.

Berrien county went republican by 1,000 majority.

Herman A. Foelitzer, rep., was elected mayor of Benton Harbor by 629 majority. Adolphus S. Miles, dem., was elected treasurer by 100 majority.

Homer township, Calhoun county, went democratic.

Albion elected James Stanley, dem., mayor. Frank W. Culver, dem., clerk, and Henry D. Smith, rep., treasurer.

M. E. Main, citizens' ticket, was elected mayor of Gladstone by 90 majority.

Eaton Rapids democrats elected John T. Hall mayor and two aldermen. Republicans still have the council.

Republicans carried Eaton county by 500 majority.

Charlotte has gone democratic, that party still having a majority in the council.

Republican majority in Genesee county will reach 1,500.

Republicans have 500 majority in Gladwin county. New jail bonding act defeated.

The city of Gladwin elected the republican ticket without opposition. J. W. Leninger, mayor; M. E. Raymond, clerk, and F. E. Atchinson, treasurer.

Aldrich is elected mayor of St. Louis by 32 majority.

Nelson C. Rice was elected mayor of St. Joseph on the Republican ticket by 500 majority.

In Adrian Mayor Willard Stearns was defeated for re-election by Dr. J. H. Reynolds by 94. The city ticket is divided, republicans electing a mayor, treasurer and justice; democrats a clerk, marshal and street commissioner.

At Hudson the city election passed off quietly. The democrats elected their mayor, O. R. Pierce, by 34 majority; B. E. Westfall was elected marshal; Henry C. Hall, Samuel Stephenson and Ed West were elected aldermen on the democratic ticket; W. W. Bennett on the republican ticket.

W. F. Berry, rep., defeated John Prichs for mayor of Mt. Clemens by 70 majority.

Grand Haven went republican by a large majority. J. W. O'Brien was elected mayor by a majority of 200. Ottawa county went republican by 1,200.

Indications are that republicans carry Livingston county by about 100.

The state ticket has about 275 majority in Big Rapids. E. C. Newcombe was elected mayor by 324 majority. The democrats elect two supervisors, one alderman, and one constable. Everything else is republican. County probably gives 700 majority republican.

Midland elects entire republican city ticket. The four wards elected citizen supervisors. Mustard (rep.), for school commissioner, carried the city by 130, and is probably elected. The republican state ticket will carry the county by 200. Light vote. Amendments are in doubt.

Monroe is democratic in the city by about 130. Jacob Martin (dem.) was elected mayor by 187. There will be a democratic common council and board of supervisors. A small vote was cast on the local issue to abolish the board of public works. It did not carry.

Mr. Moore (dem.) was elected mayor of Muskegon by about 900 majority. This is a surprise, as the city has a normal republican majority of between 600 and 700. The state ticket was given a good republican majority.

The election in Pontiac was something of a surprise. Dr. Harry C. Gillot (rep.), defeated Peter I. Meloy for mayor by 158 majority. John E. Brondige (dem.) was elected clerk by 74 majority, and Wm. F. North (dem.) for treasurer, received 494 majority. Oakland county will give about 800 majority for the republican justice and regents.

A political cyclone struck Hillsdale. The democrats elected Blackman mayor by 242 majority. They also elect clerk and treasurer, three of the four supervisors and three of the four aldermen.

Incomplete returns from Ogemaw county give republican candidates for justice of the supreme court and regents of the university about 600 plurality. The democrats elect mayor of Lapeer city by over 100 majority. The republicans getting only clerk, one alderman, justice and street commissioner

MADE MANY NEW LAWS

Legislature Has Enacted Two Hundred and Fifty Up to Date.

CONSIDER RAILROAD TAX BILLS

Small Hope for Passage of Bill Providing Graded Scale for Judges of Probate.

Lansing, Mich, April 2.—Now that the legislature has concluded the bulk of its work as a sort of a composite board of supervisors for the various counties of the state, something may be expected from it in the way of general legislation. The present legislature, in common with most of its predecessors in recent years, has come in for a liberal share of criticism for "having done nothing." Now the fact of the matter is that a whole lot of business has been accomplished, although not much of it has been of general public interest. The people of Michigan may as well make up their minds that this same condition of affairs will continue to eixst until they do their part toward correcting them. Instead of criticising the legislature, they will do well to criticise themselves and then undertake to reform their ways and lay out a different design on the trestle board. Just as long as the constitution requires the legislature to enact all classes of local legislation, which would be a great deal better and more properly done by the several boards of supervisors, just so long will this class of business occupy practically the entire time of the legislature up to the spring election and cause all general legislation to be put off until the session is about ninety days old. So far from having done nothing, as has been so frequently asserted, the present legislature has actually done more work than almost any of its predecessors has transacted up to this date. Nearly 250 new laws have been enacted. The people have the remedy in their own hands, and until they apply it they should be sparing of their criticism of the legislature for dilatoriousness during the first three months of the session. They need not look for any relief as long as the constitution remains unchanged.

HON. WILLIAM CHANDLER.
[Chairman of the House Committee on Railroads.]

Railroad Tax Bills.

The hearings of the numerous railroad tax bills, so-called, which were adjourned a fortnight ago because of the inability of some of the railroad attorneys to be present, commenced this morning and will continue until every one who has anything on his mind concerning this important subject which he wishes to unload has had his say. These hearings are presided over by Chairman Chandler of the house railroad committee, who has given much time and study to the subject, and who is the author of one of the principal bills under discussion. The bill not only applies to the property of railroad companies, but also to that of telegraph, telephone and express companies.

Following the consideration of these bills the house committee on private corporations, of which Representative McCall is chairman, will give a hearing on several bills affecting express companies, both as to taxes and methods of exchanging business with each other.

Ad Valorem Basis.

The Chandler bill provides for the taxation of the property of the several classes of companies named on an ad valorem basis, but this is not the only one that is being considered. There are several more along the same lines, and in addition Representative McCall is making a strong fight for his bill, which practically doubles the present specific tax rates paid by railroad companies. The latter measure is being received with a great deal of favor by many legislators, and there is no doubt that a determined effort will be made to give it the right of way over the ad valorem tax bill. The argument made is that it presents altogether the simplest and most inexpensive method of taxing railroads, for by simply raising the rate they can be raised from this source whatever revenue the state desires. The plan is to have the tax commission figure out what the railroads would pay if taxed on an ad valorem basis under the Cooley appraisement, and then foreclose all trouble or question of constitutionality with its incidental delays and expensive litigation by increasing the rates to a figure that will produce the revenue desired. Notwithstanding this sentiment, however, the chances are altogether in favor of the enactment of an ad valorem law.

Interurban Road To Be Considered.

The railroad tax bills are not the only railroad measures that will be considered this week, a hearing having been set for Thursday morning on the Chandler bill bringing electric interurban roads under the supervision of the commissioner of railroads. The great increase of this class of roads during the past few years, and the certainty that many more will be constructed in the near future, renders this matter one of great general interest. The scope of the Chandler bill is very broad. It provides for bringing electric companies under the general railroad law for all purposes, subjecting them to the same taxation that steam roads pay, providing for condemning property for right of way, compelling them to report to the railroad commissioner, etc. It is proposed to credit the revenue derived from the taxation of these roads in the genral fund of the state instead of in the school fund to which all other railroad taxes are credited.

Senator Humphrey's bill providing for the establishment of rural high schools has been passed by the senate and is now in the hands of the house committee on education. The chances are favorable for its becoming a law. Such schools are not to be established, of course, unless the proposition is ratified by a majority of the taxpayers of the affected district.

Compromise Garnishment Bill.

A compromise garnishment bill has been reported by the house judiciary committee as the result of the long and somewhat bitter controversy over the Nevins bill. The compromise measure provides for an exemption of $8 and 80 per cent. of the balance of the weekly wage up to $30. The 80 per cent. additional exemption will not apply to sums in excess of $30.

Another move has been made in the direction of establishing an additional normal school in western Michigan, the senate committee on education having favorably reported the Kelly bill after amending it in several particulars. As amended the bill does not locate the proposed institution, but leaves the location to be selected by the state board of education and the education committees of the two houses. The former is to select the site, and the appropriation for equipment of the building, which is to cost $25,000, is reduced from $10,000 to $5,000.

Amendments to Tax Law.

Representative Dennis of Lake has secured the enactment of two laws which are of great importance to the taxpayers of the northern counties of the state, these new statutes making amendments to the general tax law. Heretofore while the law made the taxes a lien upon the real estate from the first day of December in the year in which the assessment was made until such taxes were paid, there was no provision for enforcing this lien from the time the township treasurers made their returns of delinquent taxes until the lands were bid off at the tax sales twenty-six months after the making of these returns, thus giving the owners of the land more than two years in which to cut the timber and leave the land with the accumulated taxes, to be carried by the township, county and state until some one decided to purchase the land for taxes. The amendments mentioned make it unlawful for any one to remove any forest product from such lands until the taxes are paid, and gives county treasurers power to collect the taxes in all such cases at any time after the lands have been returned delinquent.

The indications are that the very general complaint of double taxation under the mortgage tax law which has been in force for a number of years will be done away with by the passage of the Lowry bill, an explanation of which was given in a recent letter. Briefly this bill provides for the taxation of mortgages to the mortgagees in the taxing district in which the realty by which they are secured is located, the owner of the realty to be taxed only upon the value of his equity in the property. The mortgages are to be taxed as an interest in the realty.

Graduated Income Tax.

The Pierson graduated income tax bill has been agreed to by the senate in committee of the whole, but it was so vigorously attacked during the discussion that the introducer feared that he could not pass it on third reading at that time and therefore had it tabled. It is very doubtful if it ever becomes a law.

The house committee on apportionment has practically agreed to the bill apportioning the legislative districts. But few changes are made in the present representation. Wayne county's representation is increased by one, and the only reductions made are in Ionia, Montcalm, Macomb, Monroe and Eaton, each of which loses one member.

Little Hope for So-Called Physicians.

There is very little hope in the present situation for the so-called physicians who have been graduated from false medical colleges or diploma mills. The plain fact of the matter is that these gentry as a rule have purchased their diplomas for so much cold cash, more if they had it and less if they were shy. They were never required to attend college, and in most instances the entire transaction between them and their alma mater was commenced and finished within six weeks. Naturally enough under these circumstances they groaned inwardly when the state medical board decided not to recognize the diplomas of these bogus colleges, and with a nerve worthy of a better cause they swooped down upon the legislature last week and sought to have the law amended so that their registration under the worthless law of 1883 might be accepted. As intimated, they made very little headway. They were willing to submit to most anything but an examination, and a majority of the legislators are impressed with the idea that if they are qualified to practice medicine they would not be devoting months of the valuable time to an effort to obtain immunity from examination. And the legislators are right. Michigan was for years the dumping ground for the products of the diploma mills and it is time the practice was stopped.

There seems to be small hope for the passage of the bill providing a graded scale of salaries for judges of probate of the various counties. The scale is based on population and runs all the way from $400 to $3,500. It would increase salaries in most of the counties, and the house judiciary committee has quietly pigeon-holed it and will permit it to repose throughout the balance of the session.

JAMES V. BARRY.

The Industrial Commission.

Washington, April 2.—The industrial commission yesterday announced the names of those who will testify before the commission during the hearings this month. The following transportation witnesses have been arranged for definitely for this week. It is probable that two or three others will also testify: A. S. Randall, chairman committee on governmental ownership and control of telegraphs of the International Typographical union; H. G. Burt, president Union Pacific railroad; S. N. Fenton, president Chicago & Alton railroad; M. C. Markham, assistant traffic manager Illinois Central railroad.

Violation of the Civil Service.

Washington, April 2.—Special Agent Kemp of the civil service commission left here Monday for El Paso, Tex., to assist in the proceedings brought against Collector of Customs Dillon and four subordinate employes at El Paso, growing out of alleged violations of civil service laws.

Hour of Reckoning Set.

Ottawa, April 2.—The work of taking the census throughout Canada was begun Monday. The population is to be recorded as it was Sunday, the decisive hour of reckoning being 12 o'clock midnight, so that everyone born before that hour and everyone dying after it are to be counted in the population. An army of some 9,029 officials will be employed, and it is expected all schedules will be returned to the census office by the end of this month.

Suicide of an Alderman.

Traverse City, Mich., April 2.—Jas. L. Moore, alderman from the first ward, and a prominent agricultural implement and machinery dealer, shot himself through the heart Monday afternoon, dying instantly. He came back from dinner, arranged his letters and business papers where they could be seen at a glance, lay down on a bed in the room above his office and shot himself with a revolver. He was found soon after by his young son, who went to call him to meet customers. He carried a life insurance policy for $10,000. His death was undoubtedly the result of personal troubles which preyed upon his mind until he became temporarily insane. He was 56 years old and leaves a widow, two daughters and a son.

SHARP FIGHTS IN SOME CITIES.

Estimated Majority for Montgomery for Supreme Court Justice and Carey and Fletcher for Regents About 45,000—Amendments Failed to Pass.

Election reports from throughout Michigan show a very light vote as compared with the vote cast at the presidential election, but indicate that the republican candidate for justice of the supreme court, Robert M. Montgomery, and the republican candidates for regents, Frank W. Fletcher and Henry W. Carey, will be elected by an estimated plurality of 45,000. The vote will not fall much below that of two years ago, when Justice Grant's plurality was 51,348.

The returns on the legislative salary amendment and the Bay county court amendment indicate that both are lost.

Mayors Elected.

The following is a partial list of mayors who were elected in Michigan cities:

Niles—Z. L. Baldwin (dem.).
Gladwin—J. W. Leininger (rep.).

Detroit Goes Republican.

Detroit, Mich., April 2.—With democracy disorganized and the people generally apathetic, the republicans of Detroit swept through the city, carrying everything in an extraordinarily light vote cast—a little less than 17,000 for police justice. Judge John B. Whelan, republican, received 10,605 votes, while Thos. W. Fitzsimmons, his democratic opponent, got only 6,320, the former's majority being 4,285. Whelan carried every ward in the city, even that democratic stronghold, the ninth.

For justice of the state supreme court, Judge Montgomery defeated Adsit by a majority of 2,507 in this city, while the republican candidates for regent were not far behind. The proposed constitutional amendment to pay legislators $1,000 salary per term, instead of $3 a day, as at present, was lost in the city.

Jackson Goes Democratic.

Jackson, Mich., April 2.—Monday's election resulted in a democratic sweeping victory. Last year the republicans won by 399; this year Frank E. Palmer, democrat, defeated Wm. M. Palmer, republican, for re-election by 526. Democrats also elected balance of the city ticket by 242 to 542 plurality, five of eight supervisors and three of eight aldermen. This makes the council republican by 11 to 5.

Grand Rapids Goes Republican.

Grand Rapids, Mich., April 2.—The republicans carried the city by 1,200, re-electing the city ticket headed by clerk, except comptroller, whom the democrats probably re-elected. The republicans gain two aldermen and the council. Kent county goes republican on state ticket 2,500.

A Democratic Mayor.

Petoskey, Mich., April 2.—Ex-Mayor E. L. Rose, dem., was elected mayor by 100 plurality, carrying two wards, defeating Senator Barnum. The balance of the candidates on the republican ticket were elected.

Things Mixed in Bay City.

Bay City, Mich., April 2.—Light vote; Cunningham (dem.) elected mayor over Fox (rep.) by about 1,000. For treasurer, Gustin (rep.) re-elected. Democrats captured comptrollership and five of 12 aldermen. Common council continues republican.

He Kept His Leg.

Twelve years ago J. W. Sullivan, of Hartford, Conn., scratched his leg with a rusty wire. Inflammation and blood poisoning set in. For two years he suffered intensely. Then the best doctors urged amputation, but, he writes, "I used one bottle of Electric Bitters and 1 1-2 boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve and my leg was sound and well as ever." For eruptions, eczema, tetter, salt rheum, sores and all blood disorders Electric Bitters has no rival on earth. Try them. C. A. Wright will guarantee satisfaction or refund money. Only 50 cents.

SOME SHARP FIGHTS

Cleveland Elects Tom L. Johnson Mayor.

TOLEDO GOLDEN RULE JONES.

Some Very Great Surprises Given Politicians Throughout the Country, But Nothing Indicating Any Change In National Politics.

Cleveland, O., April 2.—The most interesting municipal election held in this city in years resulted Monday in the election of Hon. Tom L Johnson (dem.) to the office of mayor over Wm. J. Akers (rep.) by a plurality that may go as high as 6,000. Only the head of the republican ticket was defeated. the candidates for the minor officer on that ticket being successful.

The remarkable feature of the municipal election was the overwhelming defeat of Mr. Wm. J. Akers (rep.) by what later returns show to be about 5,000 plurality. The city council will have a republican majority of two. Kurtz (rep.), for city treasurer, was elected. Mr. Akers' defeat is generally believed to be due to the charge that he represented what is known as the McKisson faction in local republicanism.

"Golden Rule" Jones Elected.

Toledo, O., April 2.—Samuel Jones has been elected to succeed himself as mayor of Toledo. His majority over McMaken will be about 3,000. Jones announced himself as a non-partisan candidate, and his nomination was secured by petition, the papers being widely circulated and signed by the majority of the workingmen. He was endorsed by the democratic convention and was, in fact, the democratic candidate. His campaign was unique. His forces were not marshalled, and he had no campaign committee to take charge of the fight. He spoke in every ward and precinct in the city, advocating the golden rule.

The republicans had a strong candidate in Gen. W. V. McMaken, who served in the Spanish-American war with distinction.

Democratic Mayor Elected.

Columbus, O., April 2.—John N. Hinkle (dem.) was elected mayor over Henry C. Taylor (rep.) by about 200 plurality. The present administration is republican.

Other Places in Ohio.

Youngstown, O., April 2.—The entire republican ticket was elected here by majorities ranging from 800 to 1,200, showing large republican gains. The vote was two to one against advancing the city to first class.

Springfield, O., April 2.—Republicans elected mayor, city solicitor, police prosecutor and entire township ticket, while democrats elected police judge and water works trustee. This is the first time in eight years that the republicans have elected a mayor. M. L. Milligan, the successful candidate, is a brother-in-law of Senator Fairbanks of Indiana.

Dayton, O., April 2.—A heavy spring vote marked the election here Monday and the result shows distinct republican gains. The council stands as before, democratic 12 to 8, and the school board republican in the same proportion. The vote was about 16,000, as against 23,000 in the fall campaign.

Reindeer Reservations.

Washington, April 2.—The president has issued an executive order reserving for reindeer stations two tracts of land in Alaska, one on Norton Sound and the other on Unalaklik river. They are made subject to any legal existing rights to any land within these reserved limits. The first reservation occupies the entire peninsula of which Cape Denbigh forms the southwest extremity, approximately 15 miles long and five miles wide. The second begins about six miles above the mouth of Unalaklik river, extends ten miles northeasterly along the north bank of that river, thence ten miles northwest, another ten miles southwest and thence southeast to point of beginning.

A Radical Difference.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—The Russian government publicists don't cease to emphasize the radical difference between the Russian position towards China and the other powers. The Novoe Vremya, developing this, says: "For others, China is merely a market which they can leave to seek a better one if it becomes unprofitable. Russia cannot leave China because of their immense common frontier."

Ordered to Australia.

Washington, April 2.—The navy department has sent orders to Admiral Remey, the commander-in-chief of the naval forces on the Asiatic station, to proceed aboard his flagship, the Brooklyn, to Melbourne, Australia, in time to take part in the exercises commemorative of the opening of the first federal parliament from May 6 to May 9 next. It is possible that the New York or the Oregon, en route to and from Asiatic station, also may be authorized to stop and take part.

Recent Philippine Surrenders.

Manila, April 2.—The recent surrenders include Gen. Gonzalez, 11 officers and 44 men, with 45 rifles, at Malabon, and Col. Herrara, 3 officers and 25 men with rifles, at Laguna, and Colonels Pablo, Tecson and Sibul at Bulacan.

A Modern Mother's Diary.

Tonight Clifford has said:

"Mamma, are the stars holes in the sky to let the rain through?"

I cannot sleep, such is my agitation.

Clifford is scarcely 5 years old, whereas, according to the best pedagogical authorities, Martin Luther did not ask this question until he was 7 and Alexander the Great, in all probability, not until he was 9.

I know not what to think.

One moment I feel assured that Clifford is evincing an unaffected humor, only in the next moment to be overwhelmed by the suspicion that he is bidding for newspaper notoriety merely.—Detroit Journal.

ASKS FOR RESTRAINING ORDER.

Death Rattle of a Once Powerful Organization.

Washington, April 2.—The order of the Knights of Labor, Simon Burns, general master workman, and John W. Hayes, general secretary and treasurer, Monday instituted proceedings in equity for injunction, discovery of accounting against John N. Parsons, Emery E. Burley, James J. Donnelly, John A. Connor, A. J. O'Keefe and W. E. Carr, alleging that the defendants falsely represented themselves as officers and members of the Knights of Labor. The court is asked to order an accounting of all moneys received by defendants, or any one of them, from the local or district assemblies, and the payment of all such to Secretary-Treasurer Hayes. The bill also asks the court to restrain the defendants from publishing any paper purporting to be the official Knights of Labor organ or circulating any such except the journal published by the complainants, and to prohibit the defendants from acting as the general executive board of the order and to declare the complainants the only order of the Knights of Labor. The trouble between the factions of the knights dates back several years, and yesterday's action is in the form of an amended bill to former litigation.

STRIKE NOTES.

The majority of the union carpenters in Binghamton, N. Y., went on a strike April 1. They demand an eight-hour day with full nine hours' pay.

The Mahoning valley furnace operators have granted the demands of their employes for an advance of 20 cents per day for furnace laborers.

Syracuse, N. Y., painters gained an eight-hour workday Monday, all but three firms having signed the contract with the union for the ensuing year. Four hundred painters are benefitted.

The painters and decorators of Saginaw are on strike for 25 cents an hour and an eight-hour day. It is believed the trouble will be settled by Wednesday morning.

The strike of the metal polishers in the Ideal Manufacturing Co.'s works in Detroit for a restoration of the old scale of prices was successful, and the men will return to work Wednesday.

Reports received at a mass meeting of the Lanarkshire colliery engine handlers at Hamilton showed that 30,000 miners were idle in Scotland owing to the strike for an eight-hour day.

The union egg testers of Chicago employed by one-third of the wholesale dealers, went on strike Monday for a 10-hour day and 25 cents per hour. The remaining firms conceded the scale.

About 500 teamsters of Buffalo, affiliated with Team Drivers' Union No. 49, went out on strike Monday morning for $1 a week increase. A number of firms have already conceded the advance.

TEACHING A YOUNG LARK.

How Its Mother Coaches It to Hop About and Fly.

J. M. Barrie, the noted Scottish story writer, in Scribner's Magazine told how a young lark got its first lesson.

A baby lark had got out of its nest sideways, a fall of a foot only, but a dreadful drop for a baby.

"You can get back this way," its mother said, and showed it the way. But when the baby tried to leap it fell on its back. Then the mother marked out lines on the ground on which it was to practice hopping, and it got along beautifully so long as the mother was there every moment to say, "How wonderfully you hop!"

"Now teach me to hop up," said the little lark, meaning that it wanted to fly, and the mother tried to do it in vain. She could soar up, up, very bravely, but she could not explain how she did it.

"Wait till the sun comes out after the rain," she said, half remembering.

"What is sun? What is rain?" the little bird asked. "If you cannot teach me to fly, teach me to sing."

"When the sun comes out after rain," the mother replied, "then you will know how to sing."

The rain came and glued the little bird's wings together.

"I shall never be able to fly or sing," it wailed.

Then of a sudden it began to blink its eyes, for a glorious light had spread over the world, catching every leaf and twig and blade of grass in tears and putting a smile in every tear. The baby bird's breast swelled, it did not know why; it fluttered from the ground, it did not know why.

"The sun has come out after the rain!" it trilled. "Thank you, sun! Thank you! Thank you! Oh, mother, did you hear me? I can sing."

Then it floated up, up, calling, "Thank you, thank you, thank you!" to the sun. "Oh, mother, do you see me? I am flying!"

A Good Memory.

A bad memory in most cases might be more properly described as one rusting from sheer want of use. The fact is our brain cells are always "ready to oblige," but we do not give them sufficient encouragement in their well meant efforts. Naturally the individual may cultivate a memory for certain details more readily than for others, but the general basis of all recollective acts is the same, and there is no department of human mental activity in which the motto that "practice makes perfect" holds more truly than in the science of mnemonics. The view may be expressed, indeed, that we never forget anything presented to our brain cells. When we say we have forgotten, we really mean that we cannot find the mental photographic negative whence we can print off a positive reproduction.—London Chronicle.

From an Author's Notebook.

The following is an extract from the diary of an impecunious author: "Rose at 5 and had a sonnet and a glass of cold water for breakfast. I retired early in the evening without supper, as I feared the neighbors would be annoyed by the rattling of the knives and forks."—Atlanta Constitution.

Gates of the Land of Promise.

No one can watch a load of immigrants land without being struck by the astonishing signs of hope and confidence about them all. There has never been any exaggeration of this. Incredible as it may seem to one who knows how grim is the struggle for life among the masses in America, it is evident that this is still the land of promise to the poor of Europe.—Scribner's.

The largest sponge ever sent to market was from the Mediterranean. It was ten feet in circumference and three in diameter.

RAILROAD SPOTTERS.

THE SECRET SERVICE THAT ONE BIG SYSTEM MAINTAINS.

Members of It In Every Department From Yardmen Up—Curious Complications When Spotters Unknown to One Another Cross Lines.

"Probably the most perfect spotter system achieved by any private corporation," says S. H. Adams in Ainslee's, "is that of one of the big eastern railroads, which is to some extent modeled on the secret service system of some of the eastern governments, though by no means so complex.

"So farreaching and so direct, however, are its lines of communication that the president of the organization is himself kept constantly informed of the trend of affairs and the changes of sentiment among the employees of every division and subdivision of the whole railway system, and that without the knowledge of any other persons but his own special corps of clerks and secretaries.

"Nobody but himself knows the entire personnel of the wonderful service that he has perfected. His agents are drawn from every branch of the road's operating staff. They are engineers, freight brakemen, passenger trainmen, conductors, signalmen, yardmen, station agents, track walkers and even division officials. Should that road have a strike—and strikes are far less likely to occur than they were before the present system was put into operation—the president will have detailed warnings of it from all the storm centers long before the first mutterings find cautious utterance in the newspapers.

"While it also acts as a defense against thefts by employees, this system is intended primarily to prepare, so to speak, a diary of the disposition, character, working efficiency and sentiments toward the road of the men who constitute the vast human machinery of the corporation. The feeling which culminates in a general strike is not the result of one act alone, but a slow growth made up of many grievances real or fancied.

"To keep track of the shifting mental attitude of his employees is the aim of this railroad president. If a certain division superintendent has made himself unpopular with his subordinates information to that effect comes 'by underground wire' to the central office and the matter is taken under advisement. If the newest fireman on the road attempts to stir up discontent by inflammatory talk, his views soon reach the official ear. Every leading spirit in the employees' organization is known to the president, who also knows whether, in case of trouble, the man is to be reckoned upon as a conservative or a radical.

"Sometimes this works out the man's career in a manner quite incomprehensible to him. For instance, Night Watchman Brown is shifted without cause that he can fathom from one division to another. How should he know that rumors of trouble in that division have reached the presidential ear and that he himself, being down in the president's little book as a speaker of weight and a counselor of conservative methods, has been shifted over to act as unconscious agent in checking a dangerous tendency?

"Some of the admiring coworkers of the head of this system declare that in two minutes' reference to his collected funds of information he can unroll the family history of the woman who washes the windows of car No. 41144X and tell whether, in her estimation, he himself is an oppressor of the downtrodden or a perfect gentleman.

"Where so many invisible lines radiate from the same office it is inevitable that some of them should cross. Curious complications result from contact between spotters as unknown to each other as they are to those whom they watch.

"Several years ago at a time of general labor troubles a certain railroad got no less than five reports from its confidential men informing them that an employee who was several degrees higher in the secret service of the road than any of them, had they but known it, had been making incendiary speeches.

"This was true. Matters had so shaped themselves that the man accused had to appear as a radical in order to gain admittance to inner councils where the important questions would be finally decided. To the chagrin of the authorities they were obliged to transfer him. Had they not done so the suspicions of the men who make the reports would have been aroused. That spotters should know each other as such is held to be highly undesirable. There is always the chance that they might work in conjunction instead of acting as checks on each other."

The Manufacture of Plate Glass.

The casting table of a plate glass factory is about 20 feet long, 15 feet wide and 6 inches thick. Strips of iron on each side afford a bearing for the rollers and determine the thickness of the plate to be cast. The molten glass is poured on the table, and the roller passing from end to end spreads the glass to a uniform thickness. The glass, after cooling rapidly, is transferred to the annealing oven, where it remains several days. When taken out, it is very rough and uneven and in that state is used for skylights and other purposes where strength is desired rather than transparency. The greater part of the glass, however, is ground, smoothed and polished.

Doesn't Count For Much.

"Lovely wedding, wasn't it?" asked the maid of honor.

"Quite so," admitted the bride's dearest enemy.

"Every detail perfect," suggested the maid of honor.

"Oh, I don't know. We might make an exception of the groom, don't you think?"

"Oh, possibly, possibly," admitted the maid of honor, "but that's a minor detail, anyway."—Chicago Post.

Heat of the Stars.

Experiments at the Yerkes observatory have led to certain results on the heat of the stars that may be summarized as follows: The apparatus employed was sensitive enough to register the heat received from a candle 15 miles distant. The heat received from Arcturus was equivalent to the heat received from a candle at a distance of about six miles.

THE ACT OF A HERO.

He Snatched a Life Out of a Pool of Molten Metal.

Three men came up carrying a long iron shaft, which had been cut in two, so that an iron ring could be inserted between the two halves. An empty crucible a foot wide and deep hung in the ring. The forward end of the pole held a crossbar, making it, as it were, a huge T. Two men held the T part of the pole; the third grasped the rear end. The crucible hung between. The remainder of the molten metal from the caldron was tipped into one crucible, and the men trotted off with it, the two in front with strained faces, the man behind driving them complacently, the oddest team in the world. He steered them through a doorway, and they emptied their crucible into a small mold. As they went they kept step in an unusual manner. Instead of stepping out right foot with right foot the left man's right leg and the right man's left leg went forward together, knee with knee, foot with foot. We asked why.

"That," said our guide, "is to prevent them from tripping. If they should fall, you know, that metal would pour over them."

"Of course such a thing never happened?"

"Yes, it did once. One of the men went down. The other jumped clear, but the fellow on the floor swam in it."

"Horrible! Of course he died instantly, poor man?"

"No; the foreman of the carrying gang, taking in the situation, made several terrific leaps for him, jumped right into the middle of it, picked him up and threw him out of it bodily. Then he jumped clear himself, with the stuff dropping from his shoes. They both went to the hospital, but they are all right now. Heroic, wasn't it? By the way, that's him, the foreman, Jim H., over there now. He is still looking after those fellows."

We looked over to where a big muscular fellow was directing a gang of men manipulating molten metal. He was not disfigured, and he did not look like a hero, but thereafter the grime that covered him seemed noble indeed, and he would not say a word of his feat when we sought to talk with him about it. But Jim H. will probably never want for a job as long as Baldwin's is working.—From an Article on the Baldwin Locomotive Works in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

ONLY AN OLD SONG.

But It Illustrated the Curiosity of a New York Crowd.

It was only a song, and an old one at that, but it came near causing a block on the Broadway surface line the other day. The singer was as black as the coal in the cart he was driving, but that fact cast no shadow on his exuberant spirits. As he swung his chariot from Broadway into Cortlandt street he raised his voice. Then the trouble began.

When the notes of "Old Black Joe" rang out high and clear above the din of traffic, expressions of blank amazement overspread the faces of the hurrying pedestrians who thronged the sidewalks. Necks were craned in a vain search for the location of some newly patented phonograph. Crowds collected and gazed vacantly upon the air, as if they expected to locate the sound in some office window; teams were drawn up until a long line of trucks extended up Cortlandt street to Broadway, barring access to the street, that their drivers might ascertain the cause of the crowd's curiosity. Suddenly a newsboy cried:

"Ah, rubber! Dontcher see it's only de nigger a-singin?"

The crowd laughed. The darky, now lustily holding forth on "The Suwannee River," turned sharply into Church street, totally oblivious to the excitement he had caused. The crowd then dispersed, and the long line of wagons began to move once more.

"Well," exclaimed a Jerseyman on his way to the ferry, "New Yorkers call country people curious, but"— He shrugged his shoulders and passed on. —New York Mail and Express.

ENGLISH MONARCHS.

Death Often Unkind In the Manner of Their Taking Off.

Of the monarchs who have reigned over England since the days of the Norman conquest nearly one-quarter of the number have met violent death. William I was killed by a fall from his horse, William II was shot while hunting, whether by accident or design is still one of the unsolved problems of history; Richard I was killed by a shaft from a crossbow while besieging the city of Chaluz, in France; Richard II was murdered in Pontefract castle, Edward II was murdered in Berkley castle, and Edward V in the Tower of London, Richard III was kiled on the battlefield of Bosworth and Charles I had his head cut off in London.

Elizabeth's death was hastened by remorse that she had ordered the execution of Essex, and her sister Mary sickened and died soon after the loss of Calais, declaring that the name of the city would be found after death written on her heart. The death of Edward III's son, the Black Prince, caused the aged monarch to die of grief. So, after the loss of his son in the White Ship, Henry I was never seen to smile again and lived only a short time. Henry VI and George III were insane during the latter years of their reigns and finally died from what in these days would be called paresis. Charles II, Henry VIII, Edward IV and George IV hastened their deaths by the dissipated and sensual lives they lived. Only two monarchs died of that great national scourge, consumption; they were Edward VI and Henry VII. Queen Anne's death was due as much as anything else to overfeeding. Only two monarchs, Henry VI and George III, died after long illnesses.

The Happy Medium.

A clergyman relates that a worthy Irishman with an impediment in his speech brought him a child to be baptized. While making a record of it he was in some doubt as to the correct spelling of the family name given to him and asked the man how he wrote it.

"Indeed and I don't write at all," was the reply.

"I just want to know," said Father Boyle, "whether the name is 'McGrath' or 'Magrath'—whether the second part of it is spelled with a big 'G' or a little 'g.'"

After scratching his head hopelessly the puzzled parent saw his way out of the difficulty. "Well, father, just spell it wid a middlin sized 'g.'"—Exchange.

A STRANGE LAKE.

The Peculiarities of a Body of Water In Australia.

Lake George is situated about four miles from the railway station at Bungendore, Australia, and has for many years engaged the attention of scientific men by reason of the singular and inexplicable phenomena connected with it. The estimates of its size vary considerably according to circumstances, but when moderately full about 20 by 7 miles will be found tolerably correct. At either end the land is fully 100 feet above the highest recorded surface of the lake, which possesses no known outlet, although it is fed by numerous mountain creeks.

The lake was discovered by a bushman in 1820 and was known to the blacks as the "big water." It was then supposed to form the source of a river having its mouth on the south coast, but subsequent visitors were much perplexed at the manner in which the blacks avoided the lake, of which they appeared to entertain a superstitious dread, one aged aboriginal stating she had seen it all covered with trees, another explaining that the whole of the water sunk through the bottom and disappeared, while others remembered the lake only as a series of small ponds.

During the following 20 years considerable variations were noted in the depth and extent of the lake. In 1841 the lake became partially dried up, the moist portions being simply grassy swamps. A few months later large numbers of sheep were pastured in the bed of the lake, but fresh water had to be carted for the use of the shepherds, that of the lake being too salt for human consumption. The place remained more or less dry until 1852, the year of the great floods in that part of the colony, when it again became filled, with an average depth of nine feet. Since then the surface level of the lake has varied considerably, but the bed has never been so dry as in former years. There are indications that many hundreds of years ago the lake covered a far larger area than any yet recorded, remains of trees over 100 years old being found in spots formerly under water. The saline character of the lake is the more remarkable by reason of its being fed by pure and sparkling fresh water streams.

A Dude of 1770.

From a newspaper printed in the year 1770 is the following description of a dandy: "A few days ago a macaroni made his appearance in the assembly rooms at Whitehaven, dressed in a mixed silk coat, pink satin waistcoat and breeches, covered with an elegant silk net, white silk stockings with pink clocks, pink satin shoes and large pearl buttons; a mushroom colored stock, covered with fine point lace; hair dressed remarkably high and stuck full of pearl pins."

Township Election.

The election yesterday was a tame affair, the only visible contest being between the aspirants for supervisor. Mr. Heesen gave Will Hayden a close run and it is doubted if any other republican candidate could have pulled the vote up so near Hayden's equal. Hayden, supervisor; J. H. Smith, collector; and G W. Frasier, justice, were the democrats elected, all the other candidates being republican as the following table will show.

The Witty and Wise Get Fooled at Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Orr's.

Last evening the Wit and Wisdom club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Orr. As the members of the club began to arrive they met a cool reception, as the doors were locked and no answer to the loud ringing of the door bell. On second thought they looked around for some other means of entrance, which resulted in their climbing in at the windows.

Notwithstanding the hardships endured by the members in getting into the house Mr. and Mrs. Orr soon made them feel at home and there are none of them but will admit they were nicely "April Fooled."

A Sentimental Farmer.

"These sheep pictures of Mauve's are beautiful," said Mr. L., the art instructor of the summer art school, to his class as he turned over a lot of reproductions from the great artist's paintings. "They are so gentle, so tender, so suggestive of pastoral peace and quietude!"

"Oh, I do love sheep!" exclaimed one of the girls. "They are so dear! Don't you think so, Mr. L.?"

Mr. L. looked thoughtful for a moment; then he said:

"My father, who was a farmer, kept sheep for 20 years. He was an old man when he decided to give up the practice—an old man, but as full of sentiment and feeling as he had ever been. I shall never forget the day when the purchaser of the flock came to take them away. My father stood in the barnyard and watched till the last sheep had passed through the great gate into the road, waited till the last faint bleating of the flock had died away in the distance; then he turned to me with a face full of emotion." There were tears in the eyes of the "class," and their girlish hearts were touched by the pathetic word picture. Somebody said "Ah!" in a long drawn fashion. "He turned to me, my poor old father," the artist continued, "and said in a low, earnest voice, "William, I'd go five miles any day to kick a sheep!"—Leslie's Weekly.

His Goal the Letter "V."

When the late Horace Maynard, LL. D., entered Amherst college, he exposed himself to ridicule and jibing questions of his fellow students by placing over the door of his room a large square of white cardboard on which was inscribed in bold outlines the single letter V. Disregarding comment and question, the young man applied himself to his work, ever keeping in mind the height to which he wished to climb, the first step toward which was signified by the mysterious V.

Four years later, after receiving the compliments of professors and students on the way he had acquitted himself as valedictorian of his class, young Maynard called the attention of his fellow graduates to the letter over his door. Then a light broke in upon them, and they cried out:

"Is it possible that you had the valedictory in mind when you put that V over your door?"

"Assuredly I had," was the emphatic reply.

On he climbed, from height to height, becoming successively, professor of mathematics in the University of Tennessee, lawyer, member of congress, attorney general of Tennessee, United States minister to Constantinople and finally postmaster general.—Success.

The Indian and the Northwest.

A handsomely illustrated book just issued, bound in cloth and containing 115 pages of interesting historical data relating to the settlement of the great Northwest, with fine half-tone engravings of Black Hawk, Sitting Bull, Red Cloud and other noted chiefs; Custer's battleground and ten colored map plates showing location of the various tribes dating back to 1600. A careful review of the book impresses one that it is a valued contribution to the history of these early pioneers, and a copy should be in every library. Price, 50 cents per copy. Mailed postage prepaid upon receipt of this amount by W. B. Kniskern, 22 Fifth avenue, Chicago, Ill.

"TECUMSEH."

Written For the Monday Club by Rev. S. Louisa Haight and Read at the Club's Reception at the Residence of Mrs. Geo. N. Stacy.

The meaning of the word Tecumseh is "Shooting Star" and do you know I am sorry it is not my privilege to talk about stars or shooting stars rather than an Indian noble as he was. Notwithstanding I was born in the wilds of Canada where are the Oneidas and Munseys I have never seen an Indian of note.

While above is the bending sky studded with countless stars. Constellations and systems swirl and burn in the abyss of space. Across the paths of planets the comets fly; and meteors write their fiery hieroglyphics on the celestial dial plate. But here before us for this afternoon is Tecumseh, the Indian, and notwithstanding we have just been ushered into the 20th century with the very air vibrating with the highest, the most delicate, the finest things man has yet conceived we must go back to the troubled times of Tecumseh's days when were bloodshed, persecutions, massacres when muscle was more powerful than mind.

I would much prefer to speculate upon the fore gleam of shooting stars of the future, the things that constitute real life, but again I say back we must go to the time of the goose quills, the scythe and sickle, the hand loom, gunpowder, the tallow dip, the flint rock and sail boat. May it be this reflection will stimulate our appreciation of the times of the typewriter, the Hoe cylinder press, automatic maxims, the dynamo, the telephone, wireless telegraphy, the fire engine, Rotengen rays, liquid air, the weather bureau, the century dictionary, the automobile, the electric light, telepathy, Psychic experiences, spiritual realities and the border entrance into that Infinite reservoir of knowledge encompassed in "Cosmic mind."

Balzac says there exists three worlds, the natural, the spiritual, the divine. Now were we to look for Tecumseh today, the reliable medium whom we might consult would locate him possibly in the spiritual world, possibly in the divine world, but I believe you do not even wish to hear about Tecumseh as he exist and lives today, but of Tecumseh as found in the natural world.

However, I am not at all sure that it would not be easier to give you a correct account of his life from 1860 to 1901 than from the time of his birth to his exit from this world. Since his biographers are not agreed upon his parentage, his place of birth, the exact date of birth nor the spelling of his name. He is said to have Anglo Saxon and Creek blood, he is also said to be wholly Shawanoe. Puckeskinwan, a member of the Kiscopoke, is regarded as his father and Methoataski, of the Turtle tribe of the Shawanoe nation, his mother. About the middle of the 18th century, his parents moved from Vilonda to the north side of the Ohio river. His father rose to the rank of a chief and fell in the celebrated battle of Kanawha 1774, leaving six sons and one daughter.

The eldest son is said to have given special interest to his brother Tecumseh wishing not only to make him a great warrior, but to instil in his mind a love of truth and a contempt for everything mean and unworthy. For his sister he felt a deep respect, a warm affection, and remembered her often by valuable presents.

Tecumseh was born six miles below Springfield northwest side of Mad river in 1768. His early boyhood gives evidence of the renown of his maturer years. From his boyhood he seems to have had a passion for war. His pastime like those of Napoleon were generally in the sham battle field. He was the leader of his companions in all their sports and was accustomed to divide them into parts, one of which he always headed for the purpose of fighting mimic battles, in which he usually distinguished himself by his activity, his strength and skill. His dexterity in the use of the bow and arrow exceeded that of all other Indian boys of his tribe by whom he was loved and respected.

The first battle in which he was engaged occurred on Mad river near where Dayton now stands, between a party of Kentuckians commanded by Benjamin Logan and some of his own tribe. He was under the care of his brother who was wounded at the first fire and it is said Tecumseh became frightened and ran, but it is also stated that it was the only instance of the kind in which he was ever known to skrink from danger or to lose that presence of mind for which he was distinguished.

The next action in which Tecumseh took part is notable for bringing about a higher standard of action among his own followers. Some flat boats were descending the Ohio river above Maysville. Tecumseh was about seventeen years old he led an attack to capture the boats and ended in killing all on board, save one person who was afterward burned The burning of this captured person proved to make a sufficiently strong impression on Tecumseh, the act grew so abhorent to him that it was finally concluded by the party that they would never burn any more prisoners, and his conduct in after life proved his humane disposition and sense of justice. And it is said that from the time he took his more civilized stand his reputation as a brave and his influence over other minds rose rapidly among the tribe to which he belonged.

In 1787 his Indian nature invited him westward on a hunting expedition and as my mind goes out in imagination to the excitement and sport for such a venture in a buffalo chase I am not surprised that he could follow this sort of recreation for eight and nine months at a time, but I am glad our friends who go hunting can have their desires along this line gratified in a much less time. In one of these buffalo chases Tecumseh was thrown from his horse and had his thigh broken which detained him several months at the place of accident but as soon as the wound was healed he was ready for another fray and as his tribe had no special grievences to battle against, he and his companions delighted in responding to the invitation of the Cherokees, whom they overtook and learned were at hostilities with the Whites. They made an attack upon a fort but Cheeseekan having foretold his death and the majority of both tribes being very superstitious they grew disheartened and despite the influence of Tecumseh and the leaders of the Cherokees, who rose above the superstition, the attack was given up and sudden retreat followed.

Tecumseh (it is said) who had left the bank of the Miami in quest of adventures and for the purpose of winning renown as a warrior told the party that he was determined not to return to his native land until he had achieved some act worthy of being recounted. He accordingly selected eight or ten men and proceeded to the nearest settlement, attacked a house, killed all the men in it and took all the woman and children prisoners. He did not immediately retreat but engaged in some other similar adventures. During this expedition he was three times attacked in the night in his encampment, but owing to his good judgement in the choice of his camping ground and his habitual watchfulness, when in an enemies country, no advantage was gained over him.

On one occasion, while encamped in the edge of a cane break on the Tenesee he was assaulted by a party of whites about 30 in number. Tecumseh was engaged in dressing some meat. He instantly ordered his small party to follow him rushed upon his foes with perfect fearlessness and having killed two put the whole party to flight, he losing none of his men. Thus writes Benjamin Drake. Had Mr. Drake been as well informed along those lines of thought which banish all fear, had he gone with Myers, the the great English scientist through some of his experiments, or could he but know the working of Elmer Gate's mind in his room within rooms, that sanctum sanctorum of his, or could he have known that when all air is withdrawn from a glass there still remains that which scientists have never before perceived, had Drake been cognizant of some of the more subtle knowledge I believe he would have explained some of Tecumseh's marvelous defeats from another standpoint. For notwithstanding Tecumseh depended largely upon his great physical strength and his Indian cunning yet the secret of his success was his mastery over fear or as Fra Elbertus says his mastery over the devil of which fear is the greatest devil.

Tecumseh and his party remained at the south about two year visiting different tribes of Indians and engaging in border forays which at that period were constantly occurring. Returning home in 1790, shortly after the defeat of General Harmer he passed through Virginia crossing the Ohio near the mouth of the Scioto.

From his return to August 1791 Tecumseh spends hunting, then he makes another attack, then he hunts again, always having firm control over his party. Sometimes the attacks are made by the whites, sometimes by the Indians, sometimes it is for for horse stealing, sometimes because the whites are trying to crowd the Indians back off their reservations. We all know of this serious grievance of the Indians and probably our sympathy goes out to them naturally without any solicitation.

At the time of the declaration of war made by the United States in 1812 against Great Britian, affairs took a different turn on the northwestern frontier and at the first commencement of hostilities between those two powers Tecumseh was in the field prepared for the conflict. When General Hall crossed over from Detroit into Canada this chief was at Malden with a party of thirty Potawatamies and Shawanoes. At this time just over at Brownstown opposite Malden were a number of Indians who were inclined to neutrality and they wished Tecumseh to attend a council with them but he said "No, I have taken sides with the King, my father and I will suffer my bones to bleach upon this shore before I will recross that stream to join in any council of neutrality."

An engagement soon ensued here. There were about forty British soldiers and seventy Indians in this engagement. The Indians were commanded by Tecumseh and fought with great bravery but were forced to retreat, fatalities were about the same on both sides and both Major Muir and Tecumseh were wounded. But it is said the bravery and good conduct of Tecumseh in this engagement are supposed to have led to his being appointed a brigadier general in the service of the British King.

When Detroit was captured on the 16th of August after the surrender General Brock requested Tecumseh who was at the head of the Indians not to allow his men to ill treat the prisoners to which he replied "I despise them too much to meddle with them."

Tecumseh knew the country thoroughly and was an excellent judge of position and could point out the localities of the whole country through which he had passed. Previous to General Brock crossing over to Detroit he asked Tecumseh what sort of a country he should have to pass through, Tecumseh taking a roll of elm bark placing it on the ground placed four stones on it, drew forth his scalping knife and with the point etched upon the bark a plan of the country, its hills, rivers, woods, swamps and roads. Pleased with this act and the knowledge it gave proof of, also with Tecumsee's power over the Indians, not of his own tribe. General Brock as soon as the business was over, publicly took off his sash and placed it around the body of the chief. Tecumseh received the honor with gratification but was next day seen without the sash. General Brock fearing something had displeased him sent for an explanation, which was that Tecumseh not wishing to wear such a mark of distinction, when an older and, as he said, abler warrior than himself was present, had transfered the sash to the Wyandotte chief, Roundhead.

In the battle of the Thames in which Tecumseh fell and into which he entered, with the strong conviction that he should not survive, yet he deemed further flight would be disgraceful and he heroically resolved to achieve or die. With this determination he took his stand among his followers, raised the cry and boldly met the enemy. From the commencement of the attack on the Indian line his voice was distinctly heard animating his followers to deeds worthy of the race to which they belonged and when that well known voice was no longer heard above the din of arms the battle ceased. The British troops having already surrendered and the gallent leader of the Indians having fallen they gave up the contest and fled.

While we to-day have entirely outgrown such principals and methods and can scarcely suppress the wish that this man who stood 5 feet 10 inches high, carrying himself in such a dignified manner, having a penetrating eye and a contenance betraying the indications of a lofty spirit with flowery oratory, that this life might have been lived more according to our higher ideals yet we may be grateful for the stimulations which he gave toward the evolution of our races.

He was truly an avowed enemy of the United States and yet it is with shame to our people that we recount the fact that he was not only scalped, that his body was actually flayed and the skin converted into razor straps by the Kentuckians. But the recounting of this fact may also inspire an appreciation of the blessings which surround us to-day and inspire us to continue in a forward reach for the still unattained higher, nobler, and diviner blessing waiting for our awakening and perception and acceptance from the glow and love of the Divine.

WHAT'S IN A NAME.

Many Times Nothing—Sometimes a Fund of Knowledge.

It's a good old saying and a true one too, "Know all men by their works." The public has been imposed upon so many times by unscrupulous claims made for selfish means of profit, they look for something more substantial; they ask for deeds. The little conqueror has earned the reputation made in Michigan and no impostor can steal it. From north to south, from east to west, in every city, town and hamlet in the state, people stand ready to testify to merit. Gratitude for comfort brought to thousands of homes brings emphatic rejoicings and words of praise the like of which has not been equalled in modern times. Is it a wonder the name Doan is a familiar one in every household? Is it surprising the public appreciate Doan's Kidney Pills and will not be led astray by the ingenious efforts of would-be competitors? A Detroit citizen tells here why the name of Doan is dear to him:

Mr. R. N. Elliott, of 143 High Street, Detroit, says: "My knowledge of Doan's Kidney Pills dates back to five years ago. I was then living in the town where Dr. Doan was located. I was tortured with kidney troubles and inflammatory rheumatism. The doctor prescribed the pills for me which have since become so justly famous. Their use quickly eliminated the uric acid from my system and with its departure came the cure of the rheumatism and the end of the kidney troubles. It took but a few boxes to accomplish this end and I feel that I owe Dr. Doan an everlasting debt of gratitude for prescribing such a valuable remedy. I have taken great pleasure in recommending this medicine to a number of my friends. I always keep a box of these pills on hand so that should I take a severe cold and feel that it is settling on my kidneys a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills relieves all apprehension."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

SARAH AND THE "INDIANS."

Bernhardt Played Fedora For Them at 35 Cents a Head.

Sarah Bernhardt, the great French actress, once played in Sullivan, Ind., at 35 cents a head.

It was many years ago, and Bernhardt was making a tour of the country. On the way from Louisville to Indianapolis the train was stopped at Sullivan by the news that a serious freight wreck had occurred a few miles up the road completely blocking the tracks and making progress to Indianapolis impossible until the next day.

"Very well," said the manager in excellent French and with forced calmness. "Since we cannot leave town we will give a performance here."

"Impossible," said Mme. Bernhardt, also in French. "Quite impossible."

"Not a bit," said the manager, and he went about it. The divine Bernhardt, being under contract to play a certain number of nights, was induced to consent. There was no "opera house" in Sullivan, but the Masonic hall was rented, and some of the scenery was crowded into it. The local job office got out a lot of handbills in a hurry, and messengers were dispatched to the adjoining towns to spread the glad news that Bernhardt, the divine Sarah, was to play in Sullivan that night and that admission would be 35 cents.

"No use trying to charge metropolitan prices here," said the manager to the treasurer, and that gentleman sighed and said he supposed not.

In the early evening there began to come into town long lines of green farmer wagons, each holding a family party. When the house was full, the great Bernhardt cautiously took a peep at it from behind the flimsy curtain.

"Mon Dieu!" she cried, raising her jeweled hands. "Look at the Indians!"

But she played Fedora for them, and she played until 11 o'clock.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

HE USED THE SALT TEST.

An Old Apache Chief's Knowledge of the Human System.

In the early days of Union Pacific railroading Victoria, Nana and Geronimo, the three chiefs of the Arizona Apaches, with 100 of their best bucks, came through to Green River, Wy.

They had heard of the "heap wagon and no hoss" and had come to stop the train. They made a lasso of rawhide, and 50 men on each side held on to the rope as the freight came down the Wasatch divide. The engineer saw when several miles away what the Indians were up to, so he whistled "off brakes" and, opening his throttle, let her loose. The cowcatcher struck the rope and hurled the Indians in all directions, literally tearing them to pieces, headless, armless and legless. The three chiefs went south to their cactus plains very crestfallen.

Before they selected these men the old Chief Victoria had them all eat a piece of rock salt about as big as a pecan, run swiftly about 100 yards, sit down on a log or rock and cross their legs. Then he watched the vibration of the feet, which were crossed. The feet which vibrated the longest or had the longest strokes he declined to accept for a severe duty or a dangerous trip or for one that was at all hazardous, but he accepted the feet which vibrated short, distinct and regular strokes.

Now, what did the old chief know about pulsation of the arterial system or of heart action and indeed about salt in the system? I have lived near to Indian reservations and have had occasion often to survey over their lands for railroads and other objects, and I have wondered where old Victoria got his idea. Is not the child of the sagebrush plains better posted than his paleface brother?—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Egotistic.

"Isn't there a great deal of egotism among actors?" asked the young woman.

"I am sorry to say there is," answered Stormington Barnes. "Why, I have met no less than three actors who thought they could play Hamlet as well as I do!"—Washington Star.

How She Did It.

"So she refused you?"

"That's the impression I received."

"Didn't she actually say no?"

"No, she didn't. All she said was 'Ha, ha, ha!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer

Impressive Initiation.

A man who had applied for admission into a secret society, which, for the purposes of this narrative, may be called the Ancient Order of Queer Fish, and had been accepted presented himself at the appointed time for initiation.

In accordance with ancient usages, the candidate was blindfolded, ushered into the lodgeroom, marched in slow and solemn procession around the darkened hall, subjected to various trying ordeals, including that of being tossed in a blanket held at the corners and sides by athletic members, and, having come through the ceremonies alive and in fair preservation, was declared duly initiated and entitled to the right hand of fellowship. The bandage was removed from his eyes, and the brethren crowded about him to extend their congratulations on the fortitude he had displayed.

"How did it impress you?" asked one of them.

"It was the most impressive ceremony, take it all around," he answered, "that I ever knew or ever heard of."

"You were aware, of course, that there was a fire across the street while we were putting you through?"

"Why," rejoined the new member, "I could hear the puffing of the engines, the tramping of the horses on the stone pavement, the yelling of the firemen and the swish of the streams from the hose, and I could smell the smoke, too, but, good gracious, I thought it was part of the initiation."—Youth's Companion.

The Black Cat.

The famous "Black Cat" cabaret in Paris is in process of being shut up and sold out and its curious decorations scattered to the four winds, upon which the Boston Herald says:

The name Chat Noir was given to the cabaret because this worthy Bohemian, at the end of his resources, caused his favorite black cat to be cooked as a succulent "fricassee" of rabbit with plenty of onions. At the end of the dessert, which consisted of a few nuts and a piece of cheese, Rodolphe rose, and, with his abominable bass voice, began to sing a requiem about Bibi, one of the three cats which had been killed to feed himself and his friends! Babette duly followed Bibi, but the last one, called Noireau, the finest tomcat on Montmartre, he did not sacrifice. As the story goes, it was the fat check of an artless Yankee that saved the cat. In gratitude, Salis hired a larger shop and adorned it with the "poster" sketches which made him a success. As every one knows, it became the fashion for other eccentric personages in Paris art life to add their mite to the place's decorations, and on those walls Caran d'Ache, Willette, McNab and many other illustrators have left some valuable autographs. Collectors will be eager to buy chunks of the cabaret, but the best thing would be to keep it whole and transport it to America, where it could be set up as a show.

Sense of Touch In Surgery.

There has been of late more or less discussion on the use of antiseptic gloves. These articles are strongly objected to, however, by experienced surgeons, who claim that the surgeon acquires a sense of touch that is of very great value to him in performing delicate and complicated operations. So acute does this become that even the extent of disease may almost be determined by it. They believe that it is possible to exercise sufficient care in the washing of hands and the application of antiseptics to make such gloves wholly unnecessary. Be this as it may, the best surgeons are very reluctant to adopt anything that interferes with the delicacy of handling, which is their chief pride and upon which to a great extent the safety of the patient depends.—New York Ledger.

A Popular Prince.

Prince Henry of Prussia is in every way the exact opposite of his brother the kaiser. A quiet, modest, unassuming young man, he makes friends everywhere he goes. He is idolized by his brother officers in the navy and by the men also, who do not forget that on two occasions he dived from the quarter deck to rescue drowning sailors. His devotion to his mother in 1889 was most marked, and, in embracing and blessing his sailor son on the occasion of his marriage with Irene of Hesse, Frederick the Noble pressed into his hand a slip of paper (for he could not speak) on which was written, "You at least have never given me a moment's sorrow and will certainly make as good and true a husband as you have been a loving son."—London Globe.

The Queen and Jenny Lind.

There is a pretty story told of Queen Victoria and Jenny Lind which shows how the modesty of two women, the queen of England and the queen of song, caused a momentary awkwardness which the gentle tact of the singer overcame.

It was on a night when Jenny Lind was to sing at Her Majesty's Opera House that the queen made her first public appearance after the memorable Chartist day.

For the great artist, too, this was a first appearance, for it was the beginning of her season at a place where the year before she had won unparalleled fame. It happened that the queen entered the royal box at the same moment that the prima donna stepped upon the stage. Instantly a tumult of acclamation burst forth.

Jenny Lind modestly retired to the back of the stage, waiting till the demonstration of loyalty to the sovereign should subside. The queen, refusing to appropriate to herself that which she imagined to be intended for the artist, made no acknowledgment.

At length, when the situation became embarrassing, Jenny Lind, with ready tact, ran forward to the footlights and sang "God Save the Queen," which was caught up at the end of the solo by the orchestra, chorus and audience. The queen then came to the front of her box and bowed, and the opera was resumed.

WHERE COLORS COME FROM

Africa Has a Bird Whose Plumage Will Not "Wash."

"The man who devotes his life to the study of color in all its remarkable phases occasionally comes across some queer facts," recently said the senior partner of a well known firm of artists' color men. "The printing of a newspaper color supplement sets thousands of unsuspected toilers in motion. The natural earth of Sienna and Umbria, in Italy, produces the raw colors, and the same material fused the familiar 'burnt sienna' and 'burnt umber.' 'Turkey red' comes from the Indian madder plant. 'Carmine' and the 'lakes' are squeezed cochineal. 'Sepia' is, of course, taken from the cuttlefish. 'Gamboge' is the yellow sap of a Siamese tree. 'Ultramarine' is, or should be, made from the priceless lapis lazuli, while 'prussian blue,' which was stumbled upon by accident, is the burnt product of horses' hoofs and impure potassium carbonate. 'India ink' is made in China, 'blue black' is the charcoal of the vine stalk and 'bister' is made from ordinary wood ashes.

"As you are probably aware, the distinguishing feature of india ink is its refusal to 'run' when subsequently covered with tinted washes. It is what the drapers call a 'fast' color, and for this reason is exclusively employed by engineers, draftsmen and others.

"Most persons imagine that all natural colors, such as those of birds' plumage, are 'fast.' This is erroneous. The well known African touraco (plantain eater) is a case in point. If this bird is caught in a shower of rain, the brilliant crimson found in his plumage will 'run,' leaving the erstwhile crimson feathers a species of dirty white, notwithstanding that his green feathers will remain perfectly 'fast.' Inquiry into this curious 'running' trait reveals a marvelous provision of nature. A careful analysis of the crimson feathers shows that the brilliant coloring is due to the presence of a large quantity of copper."—Fiber and Fabric.

HARD TO PURCHASE.

The Peculiar Red Ribbon of the French Legion of Honor.

The peculiar red ribbon which members of the Legion of Honor of France are entitled to wear is to be had in New York at one establishment, which is naturally sought out by Americans honored with this decoration. But they never have the satisfaction of getting the ribbon until the firm that has the exclusive sale of it has received official notice that the persons applying have the right to display it.

"I know it," said one of the clerks the other day to a would be purchaser of the ribbon. "I know that you are a member of the legion and have a right to buy the ribbon, because I read your name in the paper and know who you are. But we have not received official notification of your appointment and you have not your diploma. So I could not sell you any of it.

"We had to make this rule first because the French government required it of us when we received the agency, but we also realize the necessity of it. All kinds of persons who have no right to this ribbon try to get hold of it. All of them pretend when they find that we sell it only to persons entitled to wear it either that they are members of the legion or that they are buying it on behalf of persons who do belong to the order. The ribbon is not like any other, and we know that if any of this ribbon is bought in New York that it comes from us. For that reason we are particular to the extent of requiring documentary proof from every applicant unless we have received official notification of his right to wear it."—New York Sun.

Bruises.

For an ordinary bruise such as results from an ill directed hammer or from a door shutting on one's finger use a mild astringent of some sort, such as witch hazel or vinegar. Keep the bruise constantly wet until the pain ceases, using a bandage of old muslin for wrapping. If the pain is very intense, laudanum may be added. After the pain has ceased and only discoloration and swelling remain to tell the tale it is a good plan to apply a stimulating liniment. This induces an extra flow of fresh blood to the spot. In the case of a severe bruise the supply of blood to the injured part must be lessened by elevating it above the heart and applying cold water or even ice.

Of course when the bruise, or contusion rather, is of such moment house remedies should be indulged in only while waiting for a doctor, a truth that necessarily applies to all the various emergencies that arise. In cases of severe burns physicians are often hampered by the home remedies that cover the burns and hide the real extent of the injury.

Origin of the Yosemite Valley.

It is perfectly obvious to those familiar with glacial phenomena that Yosemite is quite an ordinary and necessary product of glacial erosion under the conditions prevailing in that locality. The main glacier came down Tenaya canyon, cutting it to a steep but fairly uniform grade. Yosemite valley is but a continuation of that gorge. The end of the glacier at the time that it was cutting Yosemite extended not far beyond Fort Monroe. It remained there for a long time and therefore plowed out the bottom of the valley to a considerable depth. Branch glaciers joined the Tenaya glacier when it filled Yosemite, coming down the valleys of Yosemite, Little Yosemite, Illilouette and Bridal Veil and other creeks and forming hanging valleys at the junction points. The formation of the vertical cliffs of the valley may have been due to undermining and may have been aided by the cleavage of the rocks. On the recession of the glacier doubtless the bottom of the valley was occupied by a lake which has since been partially filled by detritus and drained by the erosion of Merced river cutting through the rock wall at the foot of the valley.—National Geographic Magazine.

THE BLACK VENUS.

An Ugly Stone Figure Worshiped by Peasants of Brittany.

Even false religions die hard, and there are reminders of all extinct faiths still existing in the world. One of the most curious relics of paganism which are still worshiped in a Christian country is the gigantic black stone figure of a woman which is to be found in a forest of the district of Morbihan, in Brittany.

It is known as the "Black Venus," but probably dates far back of the time when the Greeks and Romans worshiped that goddess. Antiquarians assert that this ugly idol belongs to the age of the serpent worshipers, one of whose subterranean temples is in the neighborhood. This would make the figure far older than the Christian era.

The statue is that of a huge, uncouth woman, with a sullen, angry countenance, her form enveloped in a loose mantle.

The superstitious Bretons have always worshiped the figure, asserting that it has power over the weather and the crops. If the idol is neglected, they declare that the grain dies on the ear, and if the anger of the black woman is further roused a tidal wave sweeps over Morbihan.

Twice the stone was cast into the sea by pious folk who hoped thereby to put an end to this idolatry, and twice the peasants dragged it back and set up an altar before it.

About two centuries ago Count Pierre de Lannion, on whose estate the figure stood, in order to save the statue from both friends and enemies, dragged it by 40 yoke of oxen to his own chateau and set it up in the courtyard. He cut an inscription on the base of the pedestal, declaring the figure to be a Venus carved by Cæsar's soldiers.

The count and his chateau are both gone, but the huge black woman, overgrown with moss, still stands in the forest, and the peasants still beseech her to bless their crops.

INDIAN SIGNALS.

The Long Distance Code by Which the Red Men Conversed.

The traveler on the plains in the early days soon learned the significance of the spires of smoke that he sometimes saw rising from a distant ridge or hill and that in turn he might see answered from a different direction. It was the signal talk of the Indians across miles of intervening ground, a signal used in rallying the warriors for an attack or warning them for a retreat when that seemed advisable.

The Indian had a way of sending up the smoke in rings or puffs, knowing that such a smoke column would at once be noticed and understood as a signal and not taken for the smoke of some campfire. He made the rings by covering the little fire with his blanket for a moment and then suddenly removing the blanket and allowing the smoke to ascend, when he instantly covered the fire again. The column of ascending smoke rings said to every Indian within 30 miles: "Look out. There is an enemy near." Three smokes built close together meant danger. One smoke merely meant attention. Two smokes meant "Camp at this place." Travel the plains, and the usefulness of this long distance telephone will quickly become apparent.

Sometimes at night the settler or traveler saw fiery lines crossing the sky, shooting up and falling, perhaps taking a direction diagonal to the line of vision. He might guess that these were the signals of Indians, but unless he were an old timer he might not be able to interpret the signals. The old timer and the squaw man knew that one fire arrow (an arrow prepared by treating the head of the shaft with gunpowder and fine bark) meant the same as the column of smoke puffs—viz, "An enemy is near." Two arrows meant "Danger." Three arrows said imperatively, "This danger is great." Several arrows said, "The enemy are too many for us." Two arrows shot up into the air at once meant "We shall attack;" three at once said, "We attack now." An arrow shot off in a diagonal direction said as plainly as pointing a finger, "That way." Thus the untutored savage could telephone fairly well at night as well as in daytime."

It Won't Roll Off.

The egg of the guillemot is one of the most peculiar and furnishes an admirable example of the way in which nature provides for the conditions of life.

This bird is found on the coast, and the eggs are usually laid on the bare edges of high rocks, from which position any ordinary specimen of the egg would probably roll off.

But the guillemot's egg won't do this. It has been fashioned by nature to stop on. The egg is nearly conical in shape, broad at the base and sharp at the point, so that it will only roll in a circle.

THE PEOPLE KNEW HIM.

(Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master.)

George Washington made and sold flour, and every barrel of flour in the market branded "G. Washington, Mount Vernon," sold without delay. No question was ever raised as to quality or weight.

Benson's Porous Plaster sells on its reputation everywhere. All the buyer wants to be certain of is that the plaster offered him really is Benson's, and not a worthless imitation of it or substitute for it.

A plaster is the best form of external remedy, and Benson's is the best plaster; 5,000 physicians and druggists, and a multitude of people no man can number, have settled that. "You can trust it," they say.

Coughs, colds, lame back, lumbago, muscular stiffness and rheumatism, troubles of the liver and kidneys, influenza or grip, pneumonia, and all other diseases open to external treatment, are at once relieved and cured by Benson's Plaster.

Do not assume that Belladonna, Capsicum or Strengthening plasters are "just as good as" Benson's. They are vastly inferior.—No other plaster is as good as Benson's.

In competition with the best-known plasters of Europe and America, Benson's have received fifty-five highest awards.

CHRONIC COUGHS
OFTEN ARE THE BEGINNING OF CONSUMPTION.
Stop Your Cough and Avoid Future Trouble.
We Will Guarantee That We Can Do It For You.
Our Vinol is the Remedy for all Pulmonary Affections
Vinol is a preparation that is delicious to take.
It consists of a delicate table wine in which has been dissolved the active curative principles that are found in the liver of the live cod, and to which cod-liver oil owes its reputation as a remedy for coughs, colds and all wasting diseases.
If there is any one who has a cough, a tendency to take cold easily, or a dread of consumption, we would like to have them call and permit us to explain what we know about Vinol and why we believe it will cure all such troubles more surely and quickly than any other remedy ever given to the public.
Following is a letter which has just come to hand and which shows how beneficially Vinol acted in one instance:
"I had a severe cough of long standing. I was advised by friends to give your Vinol a trial, which I did. Before taking it I had tried many other remedies for coughs without obtaining any relief. With Vinol it was different. I have now used four bottles of it, and am pleased to say my cough has almost entirely left me. I have been decidedly benefited by its use in every way. Very truly yours."—H. E. SMALL, Boston, Mass.
Vinol acts beneficially upon the digestive organs, enabling them to obtain for themselves the elements from which are made firm healthy flesh tissue, sound muscle, strong bone structure and pure blood.
We recommend Vinol unreservedly.
If you will call on us at our store, we will tell you why we have such faith in this new wine of cod-liver oil.
We guarantee that if you suffer from any symptoms that indicate troubles for which we know Vinol is intended, we will refund to you your money if you don't find Vinol helps you.

MADE A BIG KICK.

Atwood Didn't Want Railroad Bill Reported Out.

THAT IS, NOT RIGHT AWAY.

House Employes Must Attend to Business or They Will Get No Pay—Thought to be Aimed at the Chief Janitor.

Lansing, Mich., April 5.—There was a suggestive discussion in the senate yesterday afternoon relative to ad valorem railroad tax bills. Senator W. D. Kelly of Muskegon had learned that Senators Atwood and Moore were trying to arrange for a joint meeting of the house and senate railroad and taxation committees last evening for the purpose of agreeing on some ad valorem tax bill. He feared that the plan was to have a substitute for all the pending railroad tax bills reported out so that there would be no titles left, except that of the substitute, for bills to be attached to. He remembered that a similar plan had been attempted by the "jumbo" committees of a preceding legislature to defeat Pingree tax measures when the late Col. John Atkinson was a member of the house.

When the senate met in the afternoon Senator Kelly offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee on railroads be, and is hereby requested, to report out all general railroad bills, the same to be placed on the general order, and that their consideration shall be made a special order for Wednesday, April 10, at 3 o'clock, and that the hour of 3 o'clock be made the special order each day following for the consideration of railroad matters until a final disposition of the same shall be reached."

Doherty opposed it and Loomis spoke in its favor. Atwood denounced the resolution. He said the railroad committee is working after hours to sift the legislation before it and arrive at good measures, and that it would have a meeting that very evening at 7:30.

Senator High raised his voice to the ceiling and beyond in defense of the resolution.

Senator Murfin said the resolution was a most unheard of proceeding; that it would practically put the railroad committee out of business.

Senator Chas. Smith delivered a speech that attracted general attention. He said in part:

"To take all these bills away from the committee would be unmanly, unparliamentary and unbusinesslike. Talk about "senatorial courtesy" in this body! I am proud that I was a member of the last state senate. At that time we had 19 men who would not attempt such scurrilous proceedings. (Laughter.) I trust that when anyone reads my senatorial record he will consult the records of the 1899 state senate, and not those of this senate."

Kelly called Smith down for his intemperate language. Then Murfin moved to table, and his motion was adopted by a vote of 16 to 10.

Senator Charles Smith's bill, providing for a tax of $1 for each $100 of the assessments made against sleeping car companies, whose cars are operated in this state, stirred up a windy talk. The bill was referred to the railroad committee by a vote of 12 to 10.

At the afternoon session of the senate, Kelly's bill for the taxation of vessel property was referred to the taxation committee.

Senator Helme attacked C. Smith's bill, to raise the capital stock of mining companies $5,000,000. He said it was a step towards making Michigan a second New Jersey, a home of the trusts. The bill passed, 20 to 1.

The dog tax bill was amended so as to make the tax on female dogs $3 instead of $7.

Senator Bangham got through a motion to have recalled from the governor S. B. 132—the vital statistics bill.

The state affairs committee reported favorably on Helme's bill to prevent and punish trusts, combinations and agreements to fix the price of any commodity; also Earle's bill for fire escapes on hotels.

Will Not Participate.

Berlin, April 5.—The recall of the Russian fleet from Toulon is considered here to denote Russia's desire not to participate in festivities in which, though she is the ally of France, she would have a less share of attention than Italy.

Best Way to Cure Backache.

Backaches are caused by disorder in the kidneys. Foley's Kidney Cure will make the kidneys right. Take no substitute. J. J. Orr.

B. Presson, Pressonville, Kans., writes: "Nothing like Foley's Honey and Tar" is the universal verdict of all who have used it. Especially has this been true of coughs accompanying la grippe. Not a single bottle failed to give relief. J. J. Orr.

PUBLIC HEARING GRANTED

On the Bill to Regulate Electric Railways.

Lansing, Mich., April 5.—The house committee on railroads granted a public hearing Thursday on Rep. Chandler's bill to place interurban and suburban electric railways under the control and regulation of the state railroad commissioner, practically the same as steam railroads.

At present there is no general law regulating the operation of these roads. Among those who addressed the committee were: Col. W. W. Bean of St. Joseph, "Tom" Barkworth of Jackson, ex-Judge C. J. Reilly of Detroit, Judge Howell of Cassopolis, and B. S. Hanchett of Grand Rapids.

It was argued that as the interurban electric railway business is in its infancy in this state, and as roads in various parts of the state operate under different conditions, it is too early to place them all under a general law conferring the right of eminent domain. It was stated, too, that in the next three years about $12,000,000 of foreign capital will be invested in the interurban electric railway business in Michigan.

T. E. Barkworth opposed the provision in the bill requiring electric lines to open public subscription books on organization. He contended this would hamper capital.

A Sick But Wiser Man.

Bay City, Mich., April 5.—Wm. Dowling, one of the men afflicted with smallpox this week, is alleged to have been an intimate friend of the woman, Mabel Kent, who is just recovering from the disease, and is said to have made frequent visits to her house during her illness for the purpose of passing whisky through the window to her. He bragged that he was not afraid of catching the disease, but now he wishes that he had kept away. A case was reported from a new locality in this county yesterday, it having broken out among the miners at Bayside.

Laid On the Table.

St. Joseph, Mich., April 5.—The city council last night laid on the table the proposition from the private lighting company of W. W. Bean, to furnish electric lights free for one year in return for exemption from a car ba tax for five years, and sold the municipal lighting bonds for $12,000 to L Wilkinson of this city for $12,678. izens at a meeting cheered and applauded the action of the council.

Heir to Large Estate.

Mason, Mich., April 5.—Justice J. E. Ferguson of this city received word Thursday from his brother at Rochester, N. Y., stating that Mr. Ferguson was heir to a large estate left by the descendants of Sir Francis Drake. Ferguson's mother is a direct descendant of Sir Francis Drake, the great English admiral.

Forger Skipped Out.

Muskegon, Mich., April 5.—R. O. Marrs last Saturday successfully passed a forged check on A. Towl, a local grocer, and the forgery was discovered yesterday by the Hackley National bank, on which the check had been drawn. A warrant is now out for Marrs, but he has left the city.

Denver, Col., April 5.—A. L. Cowan, who has been under arrest over a month on suspicion that he was the man who terrorized the residents of Capitol Hill by many murderous assaults upon women during the past winter, was discharged for lack of evidence. He was immediately rearrested on the charge of insanity.

Will Build Mail Wagons.

Lansing, Mich., April 5.—Ex-Deputy State Treasurer Robert G. Steel and Wm. K. Prudden have formed a partnership for the manufacture of rural mail delivery wagons.

Treasury Balances.

Washington, April 5.—Thursday's statement of the treasury balances in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $160,104,351; gold, $99,351,980.

Will Number 300,000 Men.

London, April 5.—"By the end of May," says the Moscow correspondent of the Daily Graphic, "the Russian army in Manchuria will number 300,000 men. It is understood that the Russian minister of war (Gen. Kouropatkine) reckons upon the possibility of having to dispatch an army corps southward into Korea."

A Pointed Question.

Berlin, April 5.—The inhabitants of Konitz have addressed a petition to the reichstag, asking that body to request Count von Buelaw to ascertain where the fault lies for the failure to discover the author of the murder of the boy Winter, said to have been the victim of Jewish ritual fanaticism.

Largest Ever Shipped.

New York, April 5.—The steamer Modice, which arrived last night from Havana, was delayed two and a half days at Havana waiting for a shipment of tobacco. She brought the largest cargo of tobacco ever shipped from the port of Havana, having on board over 7,000 bales.

The infancy of British manufacturing was nursed by engineers from Holland, who superintended the erection of

THE CIVIL SERVICE

A Code of Rules for the Philippine Officeholders.

LOYALTY THE FIRST POINT.

The Selection of Skilled and Unskilled Laborers Left to the Heads of the Various Departments Created by the Board.

Washington, April 5.—The first annual report of the Philippine civil service board was received here Thursday. It says the civil service act passed before the organization of the board is so explicit that many important questions which otherwise would have arisen in the preparation of the rules were solved by the passage of the act.

The act makes disloyalty to the United States as the supreme authority of the islands a complete disqualification for holding office. Every one examined must first take the oath of loyalty. An amendment to the act, made Jan. 26 last, to take effect April 1, declares all persons in arms against the United States in the Philippines, and all persons aiding or abetting them, ineligible to hold office. A minimum age limit of 18 years and a maximum of 40 years is fixed for the lower grades. The act provides for the ultimate classification of all positions in the service, from laborers to heads of bureaus, and officers and the board is empowered to determine the efficiency of present and future government employes. Owing to the urgent need of securing teachers without delay and the large number required, these positions were excepted from the provisions of the civil service act. It is believed that conditions in the near future will warrant their inclusion.

The selection of skilled and unskilled laborers has been left to the heads of the several departments or officers, with certain conditions as to certifying the facts on which any removals may be based.

The board invites suggestions at any time from persons in the public servise, as well as from unofficial sources.

Other Important Acts.

Washington, April 5.—Copies of two important acts of the Philippine committee, providing for the organization of the municipal and provincial governments in the archipelago, have been received at the war department. The act for the organization of municipal governments does not apply to the city of Manila, nor to the settlement of non-christian tribes, for which special legislation is to be enacted. But all Pueblas shall be recognized as municipal corporations, adhere to their former names and continue to hold all property rights vested under their former organization. The government proper of each Puebla is vested in a president, vice-president and a municipal council, to be chosen at large by qualified electors for a term of two years from and after the first Monday in January next, after their election. Councillors elected in 1901 will divide themselves into two classes, the first set vacating their seats on the first Monday in January, and the second set one year after their successors have been chosen and qualified, so that one-half of the council will be chosen annually.

The officers of each provincial government are to be a provincial governor, secretary, treasurer, supervisor and fiscal. The provisional governors shall be selected by a convention composed of the councillors of all the municipalities included in the province. The four other officers of the provincial government shall be appointed by the commission to hold office during its pleasure. With the exception of the provision fiscal, after March 1, 1902, they shall be selected under the provisions of the civil service act.

Want to Know, You Know.

Berlin, April 5.—The members of Emperor William's body guard, besides a special corps of bicyclists who relieve each other, are now armed with lances when accompanying his majesty on horseback. The Vossische Zeitung demands to know what justifies the kaiser in showing such a fear of the people. It compares his precautions with those taken by the czar.

Milk.

An English physician, commenting on the tendency of London bred persons to die young, says that they drink too little milk. Even in the country "milk is not such a common article of diet as it was in past years, and children are not nourished according to hygienic laws."

A new virtue is ascribed to milk by The Practical Druggist, which says it is the best general preventive of the absorption of poison by the human system

WON'T ABANDON HIM.

Russia Will Protect Her Ally, Prince Tuan.

Berlin, April 5.—The Pekin correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung wires the substance of an interview he has had with the German minister to China, Dr. Mumm von Schwartzenstein, who is represented as having said: "Great difficulty is caused by this question of punishing the guilty. Russia will not abandon Prince Tuan because she owes Manchuria to him. It is impossible to designate Prince Tuan as a rebel inasmuch as the empress dowager is still too powerful. She will continue to direct with Prince Tuan, China's future fate. The developments regarding Tuan's negotiations with Russia fully explain the impossibility for Russia to abandon him."

Dr. Mumm von Schwartzenstein, according to a dispatch from Pekin to the Lokal Anzeiger, gave a banquet yesterday in honor of the birthday of Count von Waldersee, the entire diplomatic corps in Pekin attending.

BANK ROBBERS CAUGHT

And Stolen Property Found on the Burglars.

Chardon, O., April 5.—The gang of robbers who early yesterday blew open the safe of the Citizens' Savings bank got $125 in gold, $20,000 in certificates held against the bank by individuals and $25,000 or $30,000 worth of mortgages and other securities. None of the paper is negotiable. There was $20,000 in currency in an inner vault which they did not get. Two of the five men implicated in the bank robbery were arrested at Willoughby in the afternoon and taken to jail at Chardon. They gave fictitious names and both registered as John Doe. A bundle of the bank's checks, some old coins and other articles were found on the men. These articles were identified by Cashier Smith. The bank's safe, which was a modern one, was twisted into a mass of scrap iron by the force of the dynamite. Banks throughout the state have been warned against accepting any of the stolen checks. The robbers were in town all day Wednesday, probably getting a survey of their surroundings. The two robbers who were captured at Willoughby were on their way to Cleveland. The remaining three of the gang were traced nearly to Painesville, where they are supposed to have separated and gone east.

Some Naval Changes.

Washington, April 5.—The prospective reduction of the United States naval force on the Asiatic station is beginning to assume definite form. Thus far the matter has not been considered by the president, nor has Secretary Long had an opportunity to confer with Admiral Remey. But the bureau of navigation, which has charge of the assignment of ships to the various stations, has proposed that there be a reduction of the force on the Asiatic station. This has been based on a recommendation of the needs of the navy and without reference to any of the political questions involved.

Given Her Entire Income.

New York, April 5.—The appellate division of the supreme court handed down a decision Thursday disavowing the injunction in the case of Anton J. Dittmar against George J. Gould et al., trustees under the will of Jay Gould. The case was before the court of appeals from an order by Justice Beach, continuing an injunction granted by Justice Fitzgerald, which limited the amount to be paid to the Countess de Castellane to $200,000 a year pending the trial of the action. Under the decision of the appellate division the trustees may pay the countess her entire income.

Invitation Accepted.

New York, April 5.—In response to the invitation from the Texas legislature and Gov. Sayers to the chamber of commerce and the Merchants' association of this city to send committees to confer with business men as to the best means of developing the resources of Texas, President Wm. F. King of the Merchants' association has named a committee, which will leave here April 20. The committee, which consists of 30 members, will be received in New Orleans by a reception committee of officials of the state, who will conduct them through the state.

Tige Anderson Dead.

Anniston, Ala., April 5.—Gen. Geo. T. (Tige) Anderson, the famous confederate brigade commander and a veteran of the Mexican war, died here Thursday afternoon, aged 77.

A Merited Promotion.

Cleveland, April 5.—Edgar W. Collins, manager of the local office of the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., has been appointed superintendent of the second district of the western division of the company, with headquarters at Cincinnati. Mr. Collins is one of the best known telegraph men in the country.

A Rich Discovery.

Berkeley, Cal., April 5.—Dr. George A. Reisner, who is in charge of Mrs Hearst's excavations in Egypt for the archaeological museum of the University of California, has cabled from Cairo that he has discovered a rich collection of archaic gold jewelry.

EXHUME THE BODY

Lady Cook Claims That a Base Conspiracy Existed

TO BLACKMAIL HER HUSBAND

Proposes to Go to the Full Limit of Autopsy to Show How Baseless the Rumors Are—Backed By Her Stepchildren.

London, April 5.—The Echo says it understands that owing to certain unpleasant rumors, Lady Cook, widow of Sir Francis Cook (formerly Tennie C. Claflin), has applied to the home secretary to have the body of Sir Francis exhumed. Sir Francis Cook died Feb. 17th.

Friends of Lady Cook say that false stories have been circulated by a person not related to Sir Francis, but who was disappointed at not being remembered in the will, Lady Cook desires that the exact cause of her husband's death, which was senile decay (he was 84 years old at the time of his death), shall be officially certified to so that hereafter, in the event of her death, nothing can be alleged against her. The relations between Lady Cook and her late husband's family are quite cordial. Lady Cook, who is living in Kensington, London, made the following statement to a representative of the Associated Press last evening:

"Since the death of my husband there has come to my knowledge a very thoroughly laid plan, concocted before his death, to attack his reputation for the purpose of blackmail. It was about to be put into execution when he died.

"Some parties to the conspiracy expected to secure large amounts of money during his life. His somewhat sudden end prevented a fulfillment of these hopes. The conspiracy reached a culmination by the circulation of rumors that Sir Francis died an unnatural death and owed his demise to me, the conspirators hoping in this fashion to blackmail me. Had I not been a woman of world-wide reputation I could have afforded to let these calumnies die. My own health, also, is extremely poor. Should I die now these lies might go on forever. I have, therefore, resolved to refute them now.

"I purpose to go to the full limit of autopsy if necessary in order that the world may know now baseless the stories are. Harrowing as it is, I shall not flinch. My husband was beloved by me and I by him; and these iniquitous slanders shall be stamped out if it costs me all the courage and wealth I have in the world. In this I have the full co-operation of all my stepchildren."

Lands Will Be Opened Up.

Washington, April 5.—Preparations are progressing for the opening to settlement of the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache and the Wichita reservations in Oklahoma, and it is expected that both reservations will be ready for opening on Aug. 6, the date fixed for the former. A contract for re-survey of the latter has just been let, and it is expected that arrangements will be consummated so as to open the two together. Commissioner Hermann of the general land office will submit a report to Secretary Hitchcock on the several plans proposed for making the opening. It is believed he will recommend as the most feasible plan that the 14,000 quarter sections be drawn for by applicants, the drawing to occur before the issuance of the president's formal proclamation.

Sentenced to Fifteen Years.

Washington, April 5.—General orders emanating from the division of the Philippines contain the records of the trial by military commission of one Corilo Canido, a native charged with forcible abduction and murder. The specifications in the case allege that Canido was one of a band of outlaws which carried away a certain native who never has been seen since, and also that he participated in the abduction and murder of still another native. The accused plead not guilty, but while no witnesses to the crimes could be obtained, others made it positive without a reasonable doubt that he was a participant to the offenses stated. He was sentenced to be confined at hard labor for 15 years, and the sentence was approved by the reviewing authority.

Wireless Telegraphy.

Washington, April 5.—The navy department for some time has been giving careful attention to the subject of wireless telegraphy, with a view of ascertaining how far it could be practicably applied to the naval service. The subject has now advanced to the point where Secretary Long has appointed a special board of officers to make a thorough inquiry on the subject. The board consists of Capt. Chadwick, Lieut. Powellson and Lieut. Commander Hodgson.

Decrease of German Exports.

Berlin, April 5.—The agrarian press emphasizes the decrease of German exports to the United States. The Deutsche Tages Zeitung, after dwelling upon the uncertainty of the export industry, says: "There is no doubt that America continues to present an economic policy which renders imports more difficult. Therefore Germany must devote her attention principally to the home market."

No Change Will Be Made.

Washington, April 5.—No change will be made in the office of assistant secretary of the navy before next autumn. Mr. Hackett, though entering the office with the stipulation that he should remain only until March 4 last, has consented to remain as acting secretary until November next.

The first time a man is appointed on a "committee" he is very apt to think his position a very important one.—Atchison Globe.

He Kept His Leg.

Twelve years ago J. W. Sullivan, of Hartford, Conn., scratched his leg with a rusty wire. Inflammation and blood poisoning set in. For two years he suffered intensely. Then the best doctors urged amputation, but, he writes, "I used one bottle of Electric Bitters and 1 1-2 boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve and my leg was sound and well as ever." For eruptions, eczema, tetter, salt rheum, sores and all blood disorders Electric Bitters has no rival on earth. Try them. C. A. Wright will guarantee satisfaction or refund money. Only 50 cents.

THE PLATT AMENDMENT.

Cubans Told the United States Would Be Fair.

Havana, April 5.—The so-called radical element in the Cuban constitutional convention, including Senors Juan Gomez, Portuendo, Aleman and Manduley, held a conference Thursday with Gov.-Gen. Wood regarding the Platt amendment. Gen. Wood said that the United States government intended to deal justly and honestly by the Cubans and had no desire to retain possession of the island. He pointed out that the Platt amendment was drawn up primarily with the view to protecting a weak nation against outsiders as well as against internal strife, and would not interfere with Cuban independence. He explained that the Washington interpretation of clause 3 of the scheme of relations was that the United States claimed the right to intervene solely for the purpose of preserving the independence of the island, maintaining an adequate force to protect life, property and individual liberty, and completing the obligations imposed by the treaty of Paris upon the United States. He expressed the opinion that, in drawing up a treaty, many points in the future relations of Cuba with the United States might be more clearly explained to meet present objections.

The delegates retired apparently pleased with the interview. Senor Portuendo said he thought everything would be settled satisfactorily. He is in flavor of the appointment of a commission to go to Washington, and expects favorable results from such a step.

Orders were issued Thursday directing the holding of municipal elections throughout Cuba June 1. There will be 15 days for registration, beginning April 19.

Found on Ocean Grove Beach.

New York, April 5.—A package of more than 200 letters from Chicago and other western points, addressed exclusively to persons or firms in this city, was found on Ocean Grove Beach, N. J., and sent to the postoffice in this city. Drafts to the amount of $200 were found in the letters. The finders, not realizing the value of these, mutilated them, but not hopelessly, as they tore only the stamps and monograms. Afterwards they took the letters to Postmaster W. H. Hamilton of Ocean Grove, who notified the postoffice authorities at Washington and New York and forwarded the letters here.

Award of Ambassadors.

Berlin, April 5.—A dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung from Constantinople, dated April 3, says that the award of the ambassadors who have been arbitrating the points of difference withheld from the treaty of peace of 1898 between Turkey and Greece, was signed yesterday. The ambassadors took as a basis for their decisions on the points of difference the statement of 200 pages drafted by the German ambassador.

Wants William to Hurry Up.

London, April 5.—The Daily Chronicle publishes the following dispatch from Berlin: "Count von Waldersee has sent an urgent telegram to Emperor William, imploring him to endeavor to hasten the negotiations for the withdrawal of the allied troops on the ground that it is impossible to prevent quarrels between the soldiers of the different nationalities, which might at any moment lead to serious trouble."

No Blood Was Shed.

Louisville, Ky., April 5.—Gen. John B. Castleman, who was colonel of the First Kentucky regiment and was later appointed by President McKinley to be a brigadier-general of volunteers, and Walter B. Forrester, managing editor of the Louisville Commercial, fought on the street Thursday. No blood was shed and the affair was quickly over.

Will Meet in Berlin.

Berlin, April 5.—The American dentists in Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Austria will meet in this city at Eastertide to discuss the most recent developments in dental science. Among those who are expected to attend the conference are Dr. Jenkis of Dresden and Dr. Watson, Dr. Miller and Dr. Sylvester of Berlin.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

At Leipsic 155 municipal physicians have gone on strike for higher pay and more considerate treatment.

All the American-bound steamers leaving England this week have unusually heavy passenger lists, almost equaling the summer traffic.

In the probate court of Lisbon, O., L. P. Metzger, city solicitor of Salem, has been convicted of malfeasance in office and sentenced to removal therefrom.

It is announced that wages of the blast furnace men will be reduced 21 per cent for three months, and that the wages of the Northumberland miners will be reduced 13¾ per cent.

The British steamer Tartar, Capt. Pybus, which has arrived at Hong Kong from Tacoma, was damaged on the passage by ice. Her plates are tracked and her frames bent.

Prof. W. F. Huffurt of the college of law, Cornell university, has declined the position of the deanship of the law department in Iowa State university, which was recently offered him.

A Cleveland corporation has bought and leased an immense section of coal land in the vicinity of Anandale, on the Pittsburg, Bessemer & Lake Erie railroad. It is reported that $30,000 will be spent in developing the territory.

Herr von Schierstaedt, a former combatant on the Boer side, has sent to the Lokal Anzeiger of Berlin the wrapper of a package of cartridges such as the Boers have used in thousands, the imprint of which shows that the package came from the Kynoch company of Birmingham, England, for German Mausers.

Medicine Man Dead.

Black River Falls, Wis., April 5.—Dr. John Thunder, head medicine man of the Winnebago tribe, died Thursday from pneumonia, aged 60 years. He was the father of Tom Thunder, pretender to the chieftainship of the tribe.

The Universal Cry—Wanted, a Man.

Never did the world call more loudly for young men with force, energy and purpose, young men trained to do some one thing, than today. Though hundreds of thousands are out of employment, yet never before was it so hard to get a good employee for almost any position as today. Everywhere people are asking where to find a good servant, a polite and efficient clerk, an honest cashier, a good stenographer who can spell and punctuate and is generally well informed. Managers and superintendents of great institutions everywhere are hunting for good people to fill all sorts of positions. They tell us that it is almost impossible to find efficient help for any department.

There are hundreds of applicants for every vacant place, but they either show signs of dissipation, are rude or gruff in manner, are slouchy or slipshod in dress, are afraid of hard work, lack education or training or have some fatal defects which bar them out. Even if they are given positions very few are able to hold them, and so this great army tramps about from store to store, from office to factory, wondering why others succeed when they fail, why others get the positions when they are denied.

The head of one large commercial establishment says that the blunders and mistakes of its employees cost $25,000 a year to correct, notwithstanding his utmost vigilance.—Success.

Food of Prehistoric Man.

Upon examining some skulls dating back from the stone age Mr. Charters White, M. R. C. S., noted that several of the teeth, although quite free from caries, were thickly coated with tartar. It occurred to him that it would be possible by a rough analysis to identify any particles of food that might be imbedded in this natural concrete and so reveal the character of the aliment partaken of by prehistoric man. Dissolving the tartar in a weak acid, a residue was left which, under the microscope, was found to consist of cornhusk particles, hairs from the outside of the husks, spiral vessels from vegetables, particles of starch, the point of a fish tooth, a conglomeration of oval cells probably of fruit, the barblets of down and portions of wool.

In addition to this varied list were some round red bodies the origin of which defied detection and many sandy particles, some relating to quartz and some to flint. These mineral fragments were very likely attributable to the rough stones used in grinding the corn and would account for the erosion of the masticating surfaces, which in many cases was strongly marked. This inquiry into the food of men who lived not less than 4,000 years ago is a matter of great archæological interest.—Chambers' Journal.

Poor Opera Glasses.

"Cheap opera glasses are an abomination," said an eye specialist recently. "There is no doubt about this. I have made a special study of the matter. Lots of eyes are nearly ruined by them. I find this particularly true of young girls who go a great deal to the theater and who seem to think they must have opera glasses. To their way of thinking an opera glass is an opera glass, and that's all there is to it. So they buy cheap ones and then wonder why they have such headaches.

"Unless the very best lenses are used I should advise everybody to taboo opera glasses. The farther from the stage one is the better and more perfect the glasses should be. Exactly the reverse of this is actually the case, for the people who sit in the rear seats or in the balcony are usually the ones who have the poorest glasses. A performance viewed with the naked eye is much more satisfactory, to my way of thinking. An opera glass gives but a limited view, and only the one object on which it is focused is visible. I don't see why people use even the best of them."—Philadelphia Record.

Snuff Spoons.

All the world is familiar with snuffboxes, but snuff spoons are pretty little refinements of which this generation has hardly heard. Very probably they came into use about two years after Sir George Rooke's expedition to Vigo bay in 1702, when he captured half a ton of tobacco and snuff from the Spanish galleons, and snuff thus became a common article in England.

One of the characters in a comedy published at Oxford in 1704, entitled "An Act at Oxford," by Thomas Baker, says, "But I carry sweet snuff for the ladies," to which Arabella replies: "A spoon too. That's very gallant, for to see some people run their fat fingers into a box is as nauseous as eating without a fork."

In the forties and fifties snuff spoons were still in use on the Scottish border. They were of bone and of a size to go into the snuffbox. People fed their noses, it was said, as naturally as they carried soup to their mouths. As late as 1877 a farmer at Norham-on-Tweed was seen using one.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Corner in Peanuts.

New York, April 5.—It was announced Thursday that a firm in Hoboken, N. J., had cornered the peanut market, having purchased all the nuts in the Chicago, Boston and New York markets, as well as having secured this week a 125-carload from Newark, Va. There has been an advance in price from 70 to 90 cents a bushel, and a member of the firm says this has been due to the corner, and expresses his opinion that it will go still higher.

Successfully Blown Up.

Norfolk, Va., April 5.—S. H. Mitchell of the United States artillery department reports having successfully blown up a stray submarine mine near Sacketts Harbor, Va. The mine was one that had been planted during the Spanish war at Port Royal, S. C., or some other point in that vicinity. This mine had broken loose and since that time has been drifting at sea. Some farmers discovered it a few days ago thrown up by the tide.

Missed His Chance.

During his lecture to children at the Society of Arts Mr. E. Walter Maunder told his audience an instructive story. A certain lecturer on astronomy observed that some of the students were not paying due attention. "Mr. So-and-so," he called out to one of them, "will you be good enough to tell us of what the corona is composed?" The student addressed hesitated for a moment and then blurted out, "I did know, sir, but I've forgotten." The professor looked at him and then exclaimed: "What a calamity! Here we have the only man who ever knew the composition of the corona, and he has forgotten!"—London Chronicle.

Actor Hackett Still Ill.

Cincinnati, March 29.—Actor James K. Hackett, who was stricken with nervous collapse here last Tuesday night, is still confined to his room. After a consultation the physicians decided that Mr. Hackett should retire from the stage for a month or more. He will probably leave for Philadelphia if able to travel.

Breaking Up the Mess.

Lasting friendships are formed in the officers' mess abroad ship in our navy, but no effort is made to keep track of a mate when he is transferred. This strikes the landsman as a queer freak of nature, but the sailors accept it as a matter of course never to be questioned. Men get into pretty close communion with each other when they breakfast, dine and sup together for three years. As a rule, they learn each other's history to the minutest detail, unless a man chooses to be disagreeable and distant. Close attachments grow up, yet when the inexorable order arrives from Washington, sending the mess to the four winds of heaven, breaking up, as it were, the family, a warm hand shake ends it all. Each officer goes into a new mess, and the old is forgotten.

It was my good fortune to be introduced to as fine a mess as ever broke bread together on a man-of-war. The devotion of the officers to one another was an inspiration. Finally the separation came. One went to some navy yard, another to the Philippines, another to China, another to Washington, etc. They were scattered all over the world. One day, meeting the lieutenant commander, who had gone up for promotion, I inquired when he had heard from Lieutenant So-and-so. "Why, not in several months," he replied. "In fact, not since he was ordered to his new station. You know we fellows don't follow each other's movements after a mess is broken up. We form new associations, new friends, and the old drop out of sight. We never think of writing to each other. It is more than likely we shall never see each other again as long as we live, and we haven't the time or inclination to worry over each other's fate."—New York Press.

Work In the Caisson.

It is the strain within the bowels of the working chamber, unnoticed generally while there; the change on coming into the outer air that the sand hog (the workman) dreads. Under an air pressure the blood is forced away from the extremities. It is driven from the exterior into the central organs, especially toward the brain and the spinal cord.

The man, exhausted by toil under these conditions, climbs a long ladder. He is in the airlock again, with the upper door alone closed. The lock tender jerks up the bottom door. With a twist of the valve he hustles the compressed air out. The ordinary atmosphere rushes in. The upper door is thrown up, and God's sun and air come to the prisoner. The reaction is too severe. The blood, released by the sudden vanishing of 30, 40, 50 pounds of air pressure on each square inch of the body, refuses to act normally. Heart and lungs weaken, vitality ebbs. A sand hog is never sure that the next trip may not be his last.

The practical limit below ground is 50 pounds of air pressure. The men that can work in that atmosphere are masters of their trade. Yet now and then a man is met with who has the strength to go farther.—Cromwell Childe in Leslie's Monthly.

Where the Leak Was.

Once, years ago, when Daniel Webster was secretary of state, there was an important foreign matter up for discussion before the cabinet, and the utmost secrecy was of course maintained, but the whole thing was blazoned about in a few hours after the cabinet meeting. So the president hastily sent for his cabinet to talk over this leak. Each man had a different idea of it.

Finally Mr. Webster arose, saying, "You, gentlemen, go on with your discussion, and I'll be back in a minute." In a few minutes he returned and repeated every word that had been spoken in the room in his absence. He explained that if, by standing close to the door outside the cabinet room, you held your ear to it, you could not distinguish one intelligible word: but if, moving back from the door and a little to one side upon a certain spot in the carpet, you kept an attentive ear, every word could be plainly heard as though whispered.

Some enterprising eavesdropper had been experimenting with the door and had found that upon that exact spot there was some acoustic property of the door or room that conveyed the sound in perfect entirety.—Saturday Evening Post.

Simple Country Living.

A man may enjoy bounding health and know very little about the cause of his happiness, and, alas, a man may suffer all the woes of dyspepsia and have no certain knowledge as to the cause of his misery.

"I'm a confirmed dyspeptic. That's the reason I look so old," said Mr. Collander, gazing almost enviously at the red bronze face of his former chum at college, who had dropped down from the country into Mr. Collander's city office.

"What you need is simple country food, man," said his old friend, clapping him heartily on the shoulder. "Come and visit my wife and me on the farm for awhile, and we'll set you up. It's rich city living that's too much for you. Now, take breakfast, for instance. All I have is two good cups of coffee, a couple of fresh doughnuts, a bit of steak with a baked potato, some fresh biscuit or muffins and either griddle cakes or a piece of pie to top off with. What do you have?"

The city man looked at his red cheeked friend, who stood waiting for the confirmation of his idea.

"A cup of hot water and two slices of dry toast," he responded soberly. "But if you think a simple diet like yours would help me I will make one more attempt to be a healthy man."—Youth's Companion.

His Method.

The bell in the private office rang three times, and the man at the desk hastily reached for a flannel bandage, which he put around his neck. Then he arranged a sling in which to put one arm, mussed up his hair, drew down the corners of his mouth, got out of his chair and painfully limped toward the door.

"Mr. Smithkins?" inquired the well dressed man who opened it just at that moment.

The man with the bandage gave a half suppressed groan and answered: "Yes; that's my name. What can I do for you?"

"You seem to be suffering," suggested the caller.

"Suffering!" returned the other. "Do you think I'm doing this for fun? Do you suppose I bandage my throat for amusement, tie up my arm for sport and limp because I think it's graceful? And I've been in this way for six months. But what can I do for you?"

"Pardon me," said the caller, backing out. "I'll call again some other time."

"It's some trouble," soliloquized the man with the bandage as he removed the harness and returned to his desk, "but experience has taught me that it is really the quickest way to discourage a life insurance agent and keep him discouraged. That fellow never will come back."—Chicago Post.

Appendicitis.

"Appendicitis," said Dr. Abbe in an address before the New York Academy of Medicine, "has few rivals in the surgical field and takes rank today with typhoid, pneumonia and rheumatism in medical thought. Surely when the active surgeon of today can number 100 operations for diseased appendices yearly—and there are a dozen such men in New York and in other cities in the same proportion—we begin to grasp the importance of the subject and its menace to the community.

"The public continues to ask the physician what was appendicitis formerly, and he answers, 'Probably it passed under the description of "inflammation of the bowels" or "peritonitis."' It is true that less than a generation ago numberless people in the course of summer travel were stricken with so called inflammation of the bowels or peritonitis and died.

"Now we hear of no one so reported, but it is said, 'He had an attack of appendicitis, was beyond the reach of a surgeon and died,' or, 'So-and-so had an attack of appendicitis, was operated upon and recovered.' Hospital statistics show the same changes of tabulated diseases. It is merely a new name, not a new disease."

Nobody Paid Her Fare.

A young woman got aboard a West Broad street car and discovered, to her humiliation, that her fare was missing when the conductor called. In a gruff manner the custodian of the car said he'd have to get the fare at once or the woman would have to walk. This declaration added to her embarrassment. The car was crowded. On her right sat a genial Irishman and on her left a well known bookkeeper. The bookkeeper and Irishman exchanged several meaning glances. The conductor was about to pull the bell rope. The bookkeeper said he'd pay the fare as the young woman looked perfectly honest. The conductor repeated that he'd put the woman off. This aroused the Irishman, who said, "If you put the woman off, your funeral'll be tomorrow." Seeing a slight nervousness on the part of the conductor, he continued:

"How many people on this car want to attend the funeral of this conductor?" Several answered in the affirmative. The conductor grew excited and in the altercation that followed walked to the platform without securing the woman's fare.—Columbus Dispatch.

No Work, No Pay.

Lansing, Mich., April 5.—Employes of the house have been absenting themselves without leave and still drawing pay from the state for work never done so much lately that Rep. Chandler had the house take action that is likely to put a stop to this practice. He offered a resolution to the effect that house employes be paid for time actually put in.

"I would like to know if this resolution applies to heads of employes' departments—the chief janitor, for instance?" queried Rep. "Dave" Burns of Grand Rapids.

Rep. Chandler replied that it did.

On motion to adopt the resolution, Rep. G. W. Willis called for the yeas and nays in an effort to defeat it. The house, by a vote of 74 to 19, adopted the resolution. All the members of the Wayne delegation voted for the resolution.

Mules Still Alive.

Bessemer, Mich., April 5.—No. 7 shaft in the Tilden mine caught fire yesterday, and in the afternoon an opening was effected in No. 6 shaft. All the mules were found in the barn, 600 feet below, alive but nearly suffocated. The entire mine is filled with smoke because No. 7 shaft has a down current of air. Compressors were started to keep the smoke out and the mules alive.

Found a Passage.

Mackinac Island, April 5.—The steamer Lorain L. forced a passage through the ice from St. Ignace to Elm island Thursday. From present indications the straits will open in 10 days. Ice is rotting fast.

Joe Manton's Pistols.

Joe Manton, the famous gunmaker, was crossing Hounslow heath when he was stopped by a highwayman. On hearing the summons to "stand and deliver" Manton recognized a pistol of his own make leveled at his head. "Why, confound it, you rascal," cried the indignant gunmaker, "I'm Joe Manton, and that's one of my pistols you've got. How dare you try to rob me!" "Oh, you're Joe Manton, are you?" said the highwayman coolly. "Well, you charged me 10 guineas for this brace of pistols, which I call a confounded swindle, though I admit they're a good pair of barkers. Now I mean to be quits with you. Hand me over 10 guineas, and I'll let you go because you're Joe Manton, though I know you have got £50 at least about you."

Joseph swallowed his wrath and promptly paid the 10 guineas. But he never forgave the highwayman for getting a brace of his best pistols for nix, and he made himself a special double gun with barrels barely two feet long, which he always carried about with him afterward when traveling and christened "The Highwayman's Master." With this weapon I have heard that he subsequently shot a highwayman who stopped his chaise and mortally wounded him.—"Kings of the Rod, Rifle and Guns."

In Print.

"I saw your name in print the other day," said one man to another who was very fond of notoriety.

"Where?" asked the other in a tremor of excitement.

"In the directory."—Exchange.

Poison Proof People.

There are entire communities of poison proof people who partake of doses of white arsenic with as much zest as the average person partakes of a meal. Chief among these singularly gifted people are the Styrian and Corinthian shepherds who inhabit the districts of Lamprecht, Salzburg, Hartberg, Leoben, Oberzeirung and the Erzgebirge mountains. The sturdy mountaineers consider that arsenic improves their wind for chamois climbing.

Some years ago Dr. Knapp put two of these men through their paces before the German Society of Physicians assembled at Gratz. The one ate six grains of white arsenic, or enough to kill three men, without experiencing the slightest inconvenience. The other partook of four grains of yellow arsenic, or orpiment, with equal impunity. It was explained that, seeing the good effect of the drug upon the coats and condition of their flocks, many of these shepherds start the practice under the impression that taken in moderation it is good for human beings also.

Usually started with a small weekly dose spread upon bread and butter, the embryo arsenic eater has to undergo a very severe test of his devotion to the drug. Violent sickness and burning pains accompany its first use, and the drug speedily asserts its fatal power over its devotee.

Any attempt to leave off the drug is generally fatal. The women of these arsenic eating districts are famous for their beautiful complexions and luxuriant tresses.

The Missing Turk.

Sarah Bernhardt was once playing at Marseilles in a spectacular play in which she made her entree accompanied by six Turkish slaves. A line on the programme announced that these six Turks would accompany Mme. Bernhardt, but when the time came for them to go on one of the youngsters had disappeared. Sarah mustered the five in order and made her entrance with a grand flourish. The house was crowded, but not a hand clap greeted her as she appeared. Then a still, small voice in the gallery murmured something in an indignant tone. Fifty voices immediately took up the strain, and in ten seconds more the whole house was shouting the same phrase.

Bernhardt strained every nerve to catch what they were complaining about. She knew the phrase began with "Manque," but the rest of it was lost in the general hubbub. For a full minute the tumult continued. Then Sarah, muttering things below her breath, rushed like a fury down to the footlights. In the front row the actress had spotted one man who was not taking part in the hullabaloo. Pointing at him, the actress exclaimed sternly: "You seem to be the only sensible person in the house. Tell me what on earth they are kicking up this row for?"

The man rose, bowed to the actress and remarked in very bad American-French, "Madame, you are shy one Turk."

General Greene's Discipline.

General Francis Vinton Greene was one of the strictest disciplinarians in all the army that went out to fight Spain. He was in command of the Seventy-first regiment, N. G. N. Y., at Camp Black, near Hempstead, N. Y.

As the regiment was breaking camp on the way to the front an old gentleman interrupted General Greene, who was talking with the writer.

"Sir," he said, "will you grant a brief leave of absence to Mr. Blank, a private in this regiment? He is a son of the late Colonel Blank of the army. His mother is dying, and she is asking for her boy. He will join his command at Tampa."

"I am very sorry, sir," replied General Greene, "but it will be impossible to deviate in any case from the rule by which we are all bound. My own father lies dying at home, yet I cannot go to him."

And General Greene, as a matter of fact, did not for many weeks see his father, who died before the Spanish war was ended.

A Raging, Roaring Flood

Washed down a telegraph line which Chas. C. Ellis, of Lisbon, Ia., had to repair. "Standing waist deep in icy water," he writes, "gave me a terrible cold and cough. It grew worse daily. Finally the best doctors in Oakland, Neb., Sioux City and Omaha said I had consumption and could not live. Then I began using Dr. King's New Discovery and was wholly cured by six bottles." Positively guaranteed for coughs, colds and all throat and lung troubles by C. A. Wright. Price 50c and $1.00.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss Probate Court for the County of Lenawee.

At a session of the probate court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the probate office, in the city of Adrian, on the 2nd day of April, in the year one thousand nine hundred and one. Present, Harry L. Larwill, judge of probate.

In the matter of the estate of AUGUSTUS W. SLAYTON, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Earle G Slayton, administrator upon said estate praying that he may be authorized, empowered and licensed to sell the real estate described in said petition at private sale, for reasons therein stated

It is ordered that Monday, the 29th day of April next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of this order be published in the Tecumseh HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

HARRY L. LARWILL,
Judge of Probate.

If a Woman

wants to put out a fire she doesn't heap on oil and wood. She throws on water, knowing that water quenches fire. When a woman wants to get well from diseases peculiar to her sex, she should not add fuel to the fire already burning her life away. She should not take worthless drugs and potions composed of harmful narcotics and opiates. They do not check the disease—they do not cure it—they simply add fuel to the fire.

Bradfield's Female Regulator should be taken by every woman or girl who has the slightest suspicion of any of the ailments which afflict women. They will simply be wasting time until they take it. The Regulator is a purifying, strengthening tonic, which gets at the roots of the disease and cures the cause. It does not drug the pain, it eradicates it. It stops falling of the womb, leucorrhea, inflammation and periodical suffering, irregular, scanty or painful menstruation; and by doing all this drives away the hundred and one aches and pains which drain health and beauty, happiness and good temper from many a woman's life. It is the one remedy above all others which every woman should know about and use.

With the oily-tongued street vender of medicine and his more or less artistic musical companion, we are all quite well familiar; but the public hereabout has been introduced this week to a new and different kind of representative of remedial compounds—one who ventures to ensconce himself day by day, in a reputable drug store, where his medicine is freely given out, in doses, to test its merits, and where, after sales are made, and satisfactory results are not realized, the money will be refunded to each purchaser. No "fly-by-night-here-today-and-away-tomorrow" performance about that style of business. It evidently indicates merit-confidence. The representative of this manner of medicine selling is Dr. Tower, of Hastings, Mich., proprietor of Ruma-Katah, who intends to remain here several weeks and who can be found at Pulver's drug store until April 20. The physical uses of this preparation are fully explained in the large advertisement elsewhere, which also gives the testimonial of many people of Adrian, where the genial Dr. sold a large amount of his medicine. He invites you to call on him and test "Ruma-Katah." It may be added that he is a son-in-law of the famous Dr. L. N. On the Saturday before Easter there will be Morning Prayer at 9, Evening Paayer and baptism at 3:30.

RAILROAD NEWS.

A Toledo dispatch says that advices received in that city from New York are to the effect that Samuel Hunt formerly receiver for the Clover Leaf, is to be the president of the new Detroit Southern railroad, which is the consolidation of the Detroit & Lima Northern and the Ohio Southern railroads, now being effected by Listman & Co., the New York bankers and it is very likely that the headquarters will come to Toledo. The selection of Mr. Hunt it is thought will result in the extension of the road to the Ohio river and Toledo, as Mr. Hunt represents a syndicate of Eastern capitalist, who are able to furnish the money for the extension and it is understood that the plans of the new owners include this improvement. The purpose of extending the road to the river is to gain an entrance into the coal field and this will strengthen the road as a coal line

About forty of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Robertson surprised them Wednesday evening and presented them with a chair. Mr. Robertson, who is a blacksmith at the car shops, has been obliged to give it up on account of his eyes. They will return to Lima, O, their former home. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson have made many friends in Tecumseh during their short stay here, who regret to have them go.

STREET TALK.

Jerome Snow, a citizen of Tecumseh, who lives just west of the village, is a mason by trade, has done some contracting in his time, but now only works at his regular business during the best season of the year. He is a lover of a good horse and is not at any time adverse to any kind of a trade.

Amongst other things necessary to the keeping of a horse is a good feed cutter and Mr. Snow, having a cutter a little out of date, was advised to sell it and get a new one. The cutter was sold to Joe Waring who immediately put his hand on top and tried it The machine worked all right, in fact too well, for Joe received a smashed finger. Jerome Snow came down to assist Joe in properly starting the machine and succeeded in smashing Pat Keyser's finger, who was first induced to purchase the feed cutter.

The next day Snow, chuckling to himself that he so nicely disposed of the finger-smashing feed cutter, purchased a second hand machine of Geo. Merritt, but the next day smashed his finger. It seems the Merritt cutter was afflicted with the same finger smashing propensity. For several days Jerome stayed home It seems he was afraid of being "joshed" or the finger was very sore or something unusual had happened.

A week or so ago Sergeant Gilmartin, of Uncle Sam's regular army, was in town, acting as recruiting officer, and his work resulted in the enlistment of several young men who went to Chicago and from there to the army.

It is really too bad that Uncle Sam does not need young ladies in his force and he does not send out young men like Gilmartin as recruiting officers, for enlistments would be frequent and Gilmartin's job a pleasant one. In Tecumseh, however, Gilmartin could hardly be blamed for the young ladies here are so winsome and pleasant that it was almost impossible for the young man to keep away from them.

One day as he was sitting in the front window of the Lilley House, a young girl with winsome ways and charming complexion and carrying a kerosene bucket, shied a pair of "goo goo" eyes at the sergeant and he succombed, and when half an hour later the telephone told him that the girl, who carried the tin bucket and cast "goo goo" eyes, would meet him near the stand pipe at 5:30, is it to be wondered that he went? Gilmartin was at the stand pipe at 5:30 and so were half a dozen other young fellows who frequent the hotel, but the street episode was the last he saw of the "goo goo" eyes.

The K. of P. is getting to be a great lodge in Tecumseh and in every way very popular and progressive, but the way they initiate members promises to kill off the rest of the town as they go in About two weeks since O. G. Hunt went through the second degree and for an entire week had to use crutches and canes and walking utensils of all kinds. After lodge that night he was devoid of suspenders and buttons and was so badly mixed up that his wife hardly knew him. Hunt says he will "be good" now, leastwise promises never to take the second degree again, but the common public desire to know what on earth the K. of P. does to its members to cause so much trouble.

Joe Hanford works for the Lima Northern Co. and a portion of his duty is to carry packages and mail to and from the station to the shop. The other day on his trip he found a small bag of soda ash which had fallen from a car from the Alkali Works at Detroit Joe thought to carry it home to Mrs. Hanford as the soda ash is great stuff with which to clean floors, so deposited it in the station to wait till his trip up at night. The boys discovered the little sack and mistrusting Joe's intention traded the soda ash for common sand. Strange to say Mr. H. could see no difference between this and the common raw material found around Tecumseh and now the mention of "sand" to Joe drives him into hysterics
